THE INDIAN LAW REPORTS, CALCUTTA SERIES, CONTAINING CASES DETERMINED BY THE HIGH COURT AT CALCUTTA AND BY THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL ON APPEAL FROM THAT COURT AND FROM ALL OTHER COURTS IN BRITISH INDIA NOT SUBJECT TO ANY HIGH COURT.

CALCUTTA, Vol. XXIV—1897.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 13th November, 1895 and 20th May, 1896.

PRESENT:

LORDS HOBHOUSE, MACNAGHTEN AND MORRIS, AND SIR R. COUCH.

Hurri Bhusan Mukerji............Defendant

Upendra Lal Mukerji and others............Plaintiffs.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

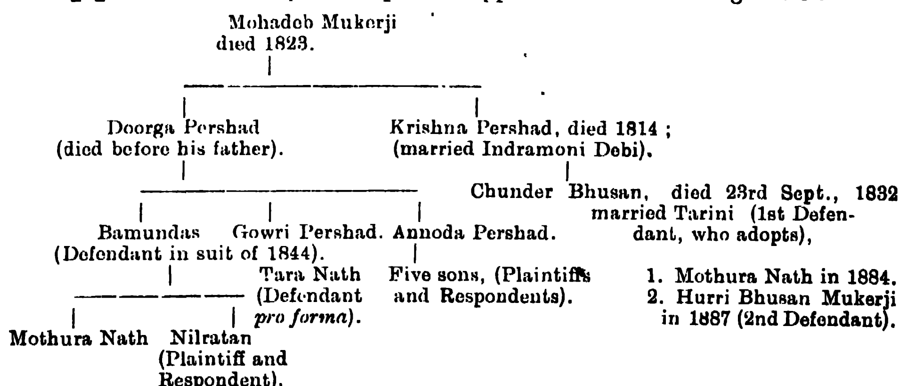
Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Articles 92, 93 and 118—Suit to set aside adoption—Concurrent findings upon an issue of fact—Privy Council, Practice of—Admission on appeal of evidence rejected by lower Court.

The merits of a claim depended upon the authenticity of an anumati patro (deed of permission to adopt) alleged to have been given to a widow by her husband, who died in 1832. She first adopted in 1884 a boy who soon after died. She then, in 1887, adopted the appellant, whose adoption the reversionary heirs of her husband brought this suit, in 1888, to have set aside.

Held that neither Article 92, nor Article 93, of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, was applicable to bar the suit. There had been no "issue" of the instrument, the anumati patro, within the meaning of the former Article, the term "issue" having no application to such a document. There had not, within the meaning of Article 93, before this suit, been any attempt to enforce the instrument against the plaintiffs.

Article 118, as the suit had been brought within due time after the adoption, did not bar it.

The first Court found that the instrument was not genuine. The High Court, on appeal, upheld this finding, but had considered relevant, and had admitted in evidence documents rejected by the first Court when tendered by the appellant. This reception of evidence afforded no reason for making [2] the case an exception to the application of the rule, in the discretion of the Committee, against the disturbance of concurrent decisions upon a fact in issue below.



APPEAL from a decree (July 14th, 1891) of the High Court, affirming a decree (July 22nd, 1889) of the Subordinate Judge of Nuddea.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought on the 29th September 1888 by the reversionary heirs of a deceased Hindu proprietor, Chunder Bhusan Mukerji, who died on the 29th September 1832, leaving a widow, Tarini, the first defendant. The plaintiffs claimed to have her adoption of the second defendant, Hurri Bhusan Mukerji, set aside, on the ground that Chunder Bhusan had given no authority to the widow to adopt a son to him; and they alleged that an anumati patro represented by her to have been executed by him on the 23rd September 1832 was a fabricated document. The Courts below had concurred in finding that Chunder Bhusan Mukerji had not, in fact, executed it. And the principal questions on this appeal were, first, whether it should not be dealt with as an appeal in which the practice of not disturbing concurrent decisions on fact might be disregarded, because the High Court had accepted as relevant evidence certain documents which the first Court had rejected; secondly, whether the suit was, or was not, barred by time.

In 1832 Tarini, being then very young, was not living in her husband's house at Birnaghar, Ranaghat, and was not there when he died there; but was living with her father and his family, the Roys, at Santipore. Under the alleged anumati patro she adopted no son until 1884; but a son, adopted by her in that year, having died soon after, the adoption now in dispute was made by her in 1887.

The plaintiffs were the respondent, Upendra Lal Mukerji and his minor brothers, of whom he was the next friend on the record; and another plaintiff was Nilratan Mukerji, a cousin. The first defendant, Tarini, died pending this appeal, and the second defendant, Hurri Bhusan, the adopted son, was then represented by a guardian ad litem, Girendra Nath Mukerji.

After the death of Chunder Bhusan, his estate, previously managed by Bamundas, continued under the same management. Bamundas then alleged that his son, Mathura Nath, had been adopted by Chunder Bhusan in his lifetime, and that the latter had also left a Will, by which he appointed Indramoni to be guardian of this said adopted son, and Bamundas himself to be manager during the boy's minority. In 1844 this was disputed by Tarini. In that year, with the assistance of her brothers, she sued Bamundas to recover possession of the properties which had belonged to her husband, denying in her suit that any such adoption or Will had been made by Chunder Bhusan, and she was successful up to the Privy Council: see Bamun Doss Mookerjee v. Tarinee (7 Moo. A., 169). In that suit Tarini alleged that her husband on the day of his death had given her a written power to adopt, anumati patro. It did not appear, however, to the High Court, as stated in their judgment in this suit, that any such power was produced at that time.

In this suit Tarini, by her written answer, alleged that the anumati patro was a genuine instrument, and also defended on the ground that the plaintiffs had not, at this distance of time since its execution, any right to obtain a declaration that it was false, or to have the adoption of Hurri Bhusan set aside as unauthorized. The first and second issues, the only issues material to this report, question both these propositions.

The Subordinate Judge held that Articles 91, 92 and 93 were inapplicable to the present suit.

The suit was not one to have it declared that an instrument "issued" was a forgery. The authority to adopt, now in question, [4] had never been "issued" before the present suit, nor had the defendant, in the Judge's opinion, ever attempted to enforce it against the plaintiffs in the sense of Article 93. The six years provided in Article 118 had not elapsed.

As to the second issue, the Subordinate Judge held that the burden of proof was on the plaintiffs according to a decision in the case of Brojo Kishoree Dossee v. Sreenath Bose (9 W. R., 463). He found (after excluding several documents, tendered by the defendants, as not admissible in evidence, which were afterwards admitted by the High Court without having the effect of altering the result at which both Courts arrived) that Chunder Bhusan, the husband of the first defendant, had not given to her any authority to adopt a son to him.

The High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and BEVERLEY, J.) dismissed an appeal by the defendants. An application was made to them, while the appeal was pending, for the admission of certain documents which the Subordinate Judge had rejected. The first was a certified official copy of a petition purporting to have come from Indramoni, mother of Chunder Bhusan, informing the Magistrate of the District of her son's death, and stating that he had executed an anumati patro. The copy had been filed by Tarini in her suit of 1844. It was admitted as an assertion which was a relevant fact within sections 9 and 11 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. But the High Court did not accept as true the statement as to the execution of the anumati patro, or consider it proved that it was the statement of Indramoni.

The next document was a copy of statements said to have been made on an enquiry conducted by the Nazir of the Collector's Court in 1833, as to who were the heirs of Chunder Bhusan,—a document which had also been filed in the suit of 1844. To corroborate oral testimony this was admitted under section 157 of the Evidence Act; but no weight was attached to it. With the same result copies of two depositions of deceased persons, made in 1833, were admitted.

The High Court, having examined the evidence on the record, as well as that which they admitted themselves, concurred in the decision of the first Court that Chunder Bhusan had not executed [5] any anumati patro in favour of his wife. They also referred to an allegation made by Tarini that a verbal authority had been given to her by her husband some months before his death. In her written statement this had not been alleged, and no issue had been framed with regard to this point. Their finding was that neither a verbal, nor a written, authority to adopt had been given by Chunder Bhusan to his wife

With the question of limitation the High Court did not deal in their judgment, though it was raised by the memorandum of appeal.

Mr. M. Crackanthorpe, Q.C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant, argued that the High Court's having disposed of the question, whether the power to adopt had been in fact given by the husband to his wife in 1832, on evidence, different, by reason of the documentary evidence admitted on the appeal, from that on which the judgment of the first Court had proceeded, should be thus regarded. It should render inapplicable the usual non-interference with the decision on fact of two Courts in concurrence ; of which rule, the application was entirely within the discretion of this Committee not taking effect where reasonable doubt existed as to the correctness of that decision. [LORD MACNAGHTEN referred to Ram Lal v. Mehdi Husain (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 882 ; L. R., 17 I.A., 76)]. There were certain points in the evidence to which reference was made, tending to show that the judgments below could not be sustained. On the evidence taken altogether the right of the widow to adopt under the anumati patro of 1832 should have been maintained. It was also contended that under Articles 91, 92 and 93 of Schedule II, Act XV of 1877, the suit to have the anumati patro declared to be false was barred by time.

Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., Mr. J. D. Mayne, and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the Respondents, were not called upon.

The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Lord Morris.—The plaintiffs in this suit, who are respondents in the appeal, make claim as reversionary heirs of Chunder Bhusan, who died in the year 1832. The defendants are his widow, who became his heir, and Hurri Bhusan Mukerji, whom the widow adopted in the year 1887. The substantial object of the suit is to dispute the adoption, on the ground that [6] no authority to adopt was given by Chunder Bhusan to his widow. The widow has died pending the appeal which is now prosecuted on behalf of Hurri Bhusan.

Soon after her husband's death the widow, or her friends, for she was then a girl of 13, asserted the existence of a written power to adopt, and she has at intervals renewed the assertion. But the instrument was never until the present suit produced in Court, though there had been previous hostility and litigation between the widow and the reversionary heirs. No action was taken on it till the year 1884 when the widow adopted a boy. That boy died, and the present appellant was adopted four years afterwards. On these facts and on the oral evidence the Subordinate Judge decided that the instrument relied on was not genuine, and that the widow had no authority to adopt. On appeal the High Court took the same view.

It appears that the Subordinate Judge rejected certain documents produced from the Courts of the Magistrate and the Collector, which the defendants tendered for the purpose of corroborating their oral evidence. The High Court admitted those documents. There was no dispute as to their construction ; the only question was how far they added to the weight of the defendant's evidence, and the High Court thought they added very little. It is now contended that because the High Court had before it materials which the Subordinate Judge had not, the case ought not to be treated as one in which there are concurrent decisions on facts. It would, however, be a strange thing if concurrent decisions were to have a less conclusive effect where the evidence in the first Appellate Court has been added to entirely in the interest of the appellant than they would have if his evidence had remained untouched. Their Lordships, indeed, have heard nothing inducing them to think that they would come to any different conclusion if the facts were all re-examined, but they are quite clear that there is no ground for making the case an exception to the valuable rule against disturbance of concurrent decisions.

The remaining question is whether the suit has been brought in proper time. The material dates are the first adoption in 1884, [7] the second adoption in 1887, and the commencement of the suit in 1888.

The Subordinate Judge carefully discussed the plea of limitation and overruled it. The defendants appealed on this point among others, but it can hardly have been pressed, for the learned Judges of the High Court do not notice it in their judgment, and they say that the only question before them is whether the widow had power to adopt.

The Limitation Act of 1877 contains two Articles specifically relating to suits for attacking and supporting adoption, respectively. No. 118 enacts of a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid, that it shall be dismissed if brought after six years from the time when the alleged adoption becomes known to the plaintiff. This suit, therefore, even if it were affected by the adoption of 1884, would not be barred by Article 118.

It is, however, argued that the principle of the Limitation Act is not to enable suits to be brought within certain periods, but to forbid them being brought after periods, each of which starts from some defined event, and that more than one Article may apply to the same suit. So a plaintiff impugning an adoption may find himself impeded by other events, e.g., a legal proceeding protected by a shorter term of prescription. And in this case it has been urged at the bar that there are two other Articles, viz., 92 and 93, which compel the dismissal of the suit.

By Article 92 a suit to declare the forgery of an instrument issued or registered must be dismissed if brought after three years from the time when the issue or registration becomes known to the plaintiff. Assuming, in the defendant's favour, that this suit is one to declare forgery, is the instrument one of the kind indicated by the Article? It was not registered, but, as argued for the appellant, it was issued when the adoption of 1884 was effected with full publicity. Their Lordships think it sufficient to say on this point that in their opinion the word "issued" is intended to refer to the kinds of documents to which people commonly apply that term in business; and that it has no application to an instrument such as a power to adopt.

[8] By Article 93 a suit to declare the forgery of an instrument attempted to be enforced against the plaintiff must be dismissed if brought after three years from the date of the attempt. It is contended that the adoption of 1884 was such an attempt. It is, however, as the Subordinate Judge points out, very difficult to say that an adoption followed by nothing more is in any sense an enforcement of the power against other persons. Their Lordships are clear that it is not so within this Article. If it were, Article 118 would have no force in cases where the plaintiff impugns an adoption, on the ground that the power alleged for it is not genuine. They hold that this case is described by Article 118 alone, and therefore the suit is brought in good time.

They will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal and the appellant must pay the costs incurred in this appeal of the respondents who have appeared.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract—Sale of goods—Brokers' bought and sold notes—Special place of delivery "to be mentioned hereafter"—Disclosure of principal - Assessment of damages—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sections 49, 94, 231—Damages.

Bought and sold notes of Purneah indigo seed provided: "The seed to be delivered at any place in Bengal in March and April 1891." It was added, "the place of delivery to be mentioned hereafter." The buyer made mention of this on the 20th March 1891 in a letter to the broker for both parties. This letter, specifying Howrah Railway station as the place, was forwarded to the vendor, who replied that he would deliver at his own godowns at Sulkea. This the buyer declined. The vendor and the buyer each insisting that the place named by him was the proper one for delivery, the buyer refused to accept at the vendor's godowns, or at any place other than Howrah station. [9] The vendor remained for a certain time ready and willing to deliver at his godowns at Sulkea; and the buyer not accepting delivery at that place, the vendor declared the contract cancelled. The buyer then sued him for breach of the contract to deliver at the place mentioned by the buyer. On the question whether the vendor had discharged his liability by readiness and willingness to deliver at his own godowns at Sulkea,—

Held, that the choice of place given originally by the contract to the buyer, subject only to the express contract that it must be in Bengal, and to the implied one that it must be reasonable, had not been converted, by the words about "mention" thereafter, into a deferred question to be settled by a subsequent agreement. The buyer, according to the contract already subsisting, had the right to fix the place. There was a special promise in the contract as to the delivery, and to complete its terms nothing more was required than a mention by the buyer of a reasonable place within Bengal. This had been made by him. The contract therefore did not fall within section 94 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) dealing with cases where there has been no special promise as to delivery, and fixing the place of production as the place for delivery; but rather resembled what was contemplated in section 49*. And the buyer was entitled to damages on the contract.

Place for performance of engagement where no application to be made and no place fixed.

* [Sec. 49 :—When a promise is to be performed without application by the promisee, and no place is fixed for the performance of it, it is the duty of the promisor to apply to the promisee to appoint a reasonable place for the performance of the promise, and to perform it at such place.]

APPEAL from a decree (3rd March 1893) of the High Court, reversing a decree (8th August 1892) of the High Court in its original jurisdiction, and dismissing the suit with costs.

This suit was brought on the 27th May 1891 for Rs. 13,000 damages for a breach of contract entered into by the defendants, through Messrs. Robert Thomas & Co., brokers for both parties, with the plaintiff, Henry Nicholas Grenon, on the 27th October 1890, for the delivery, during March and April 1891, of 2,000 maunds of Purneah indigo seed at Rs. 8-8 a maund.

The principal question raised on this appeal related to the place of delivery; the plaintiffs having required delivery at the Howrah Railway station, and the defendants having declined to give delivery there, but having been ready and willing to deliver at their own godowns at Sulkea.

The facts on which that question turned, with the bought and sold notes and subsequent letters between the parties, are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The plaint having stated a variation of the contract by the buyer agreeing with the seller to accept the whole amount of seed on the 30th April, averred that the buyer also intimated to the seller that he was willing, if by "their godowns" the sellers [10] meant their godowns at Pertabgunj, to take delivery in Purneah, provided that the Railway charges to Howrah should be deducted from the contract price. But if the defendants meant otherwise, then the plaintiff signified his adherence to his former notice, and must require delivery at the Howrah Station. By the defendants not delivering at the latter place, the plaintiff was put to loss, which he estimated at Rs. 13,000.

The defendants by their written answer alleged that Grenon as the principal was for the first time disclosed to them on the 21st March 1891, and that they had declined to recognize him as the principal, but had expressed their willingness to give delivery to Messrs. Thomas & Co., the broker, from their godowns at Sulkea. They further alleged that both the broker, and Grenon at one time, had agreed to the latter being the place.

The record did not show that any issues had been formally recorded as fixed by the Court, but the main questions raised at the first hearing were these: Whether the defendants did enter into a contract with the plaintiff for delivery of the seed, and whether they had not discharged themselves by being prepared on the 30th April to give delivery to the plaintiff at their Sulkea godowns.

It appearing at the hearing that Grenon had been buying the seed to supply a Calcutta firm of Sewdial Surjmull, the partners in the latter were joined as co-plaintiffs with him. The Judge in the original jurisdiction (HILL, J.) first disposed of an objection taken by the defendants in reference to section 231, Indian Contract Act, 1873, as follows :—

"The defendants place reliance on section 231, asserting the right to repudiate the undisclosed principal at any time before completion of the contract; and that as the time for fulfilment did not arrive till the 30th April, they contend that they had up to that date to repudiate him. It appears to me that to place such a construction on that section would lead to very grave inconvenience and perhaps injustice, and I do not think that I ought to place such a construction upon it. It is a question whether the second clause of that section must not be taken as relating to the circumstance to which the earlier clause relates, that is to say 'where a person making contract neither knows, nor has reason to suspect, that the person he is contracting with is an agent,' and it was argued that the defendants could not bring themselves within that, because in the contract itself Messrs. Thomas & Co. expressly contract on behalf of their principals, and it is further contended that it was not open [11] to the defendants after the contract was concluded to repudiate the principal as soon as he was disclosed. The question is a somewhat difficult one, and one which I do not wish to decide unless it is necessary; but it seems to me that looking at the section and assuming that the defendants might have availed themselves of the provisions of the second clause that under the circumstances they deprived themselves of the right to do so long before the time arrived."*.

The next question upon which decision was given was whether or not Grenon had assented to taking delivery at the Sulkea godowns. The judgment, as to this question of fact, set forth some letters between the broker and Grenon, and the material part, for the purposes of this report, was as follows:—

"There appears to have been some vagueness as to the term 'Howrah,' as it appears to be large enough to include Sulkea, and it may be that Grenon conveyed to Thomas the impression, in mentioning Howrah, that he meant to include Sulkea. But had I to determine between the two, I confess that, although I should feel some difficulty, the tendency of my opinion, having regard to Grenon's persistence as to Howrah, would be in favour of the view that he had not given his assent to the alteration, and that Thomas was mistaken; and this is confirmed by what transpired afterwards. The following day Thomas & Co. wrote to Grenon enclosing a delivery order in his favour for the seed, and informing him that delivery was to be taken by him from the sellers' godowns, and asking for the cheque which Grenon had on the previous day expressed his willingness to pay before delivery. Simultaneously with that letter Thomas & Co. also wrote to the defendants asking them to give delivery to Grenon at their Sulkea godowns, and stating that Grenon had agreed to deposit his cheque with them for the amount of the seed; but immediately on receipt by Grenon on the 30th April of the letter to him, he writes back to Thomas & Co:—"

"Calcutta 30th April, 1891.

"DEAR SIRS,

"I beg to return herewith your delivery order on Messrs. Muckon Lall Gobindram for the 2,000 maunds Purneah indigo seed bought by me from [12] them under your contract No. 27, dated 27th October 1890, as it states that the seed is to be delivered to me from their Sulkea godowns. This is not in terms of the contract, nor is it according to my express request for delivery at the Howrah station, and I still insist upon taking delivery of the seed at the Howrah station and nowhere else, and if the seed is so ready for delivery I shall be glad to examine it and then hand you a cheque for the value of the same in order to my taking delivery, if the seed be all right."

After commenting on the improbability of Grenon's having, on the day before writing this, assented to delivery being made at the Sulkea godowns, and no allusion to the misunderstanding being made afterwards, the judgment set forth other correspondence including the broker's written request which concluded it, that the defendants would, under the terms of the contract of the 27th October 1890, give delivery at the Howrah station, and not at the Sulkea godown. And the Judge concluded in the following words:—

"The defendants decline to give delivery at Howrah, and delivery not having been taken from Sulkea they write the next day repudiating the contract.

* The Indian Contract Act, IX of 1872, section 231, enacts: "If an agent makes a contract with a person who neither knows, nor has reason to suspect, that he is an agent, his principal may require the performance of the contract; but the other contracting party has as against the principal the same rights as he would have had as against the agent, if the agent had been principal.

"If the principal discloses himself before the contract is completed, the other contracting party may refuse to fulfil the contract, if he can show that if he had known who was the principal in the contract, or if he had known that the agent was not a principal, he would not have entered into the contract."

"The conclusion at which I have arrived is that Gronon did not authorise Thomas & Co. to alter the place of delivery, and therefore, I think, that though they thought they were so authorised, they exceeded their authority by saying he had agreed to the alteration. I also think that the alteration not having been made with his authority he is not bound by it, and he is entitled to ask the defendants for completion of the contract at the place, namely, Howrah station, which he had selected for delivery. The goods were not so delivered, and the ordinary consequence must follow. The defendants must pay to the plaintiff the damages ordinarily assessable under such circumstances.

"The question then remains what are the damages for which the defendants are liable. The contract rate was Rs. 8-8 a maund, but I think the whole tendency of the evidence shews that as time went on Purneah seed became more and more difficult to obtain, and during the time up to May there was a steady rise for this commodity. Contracts have been put in for deliveries in May. There are two before me both of which were entered into in April, the one on the 4th and the other on the 30th. The first for delivery on or before the 10th May next, the second for delivery before the 15th May. These are for seed of the same quality and description as that in suit. The rate under the former is Rs. 13 per maund. That under the latter is 12-8, and there is evidence to shew that at the end of April rates were running from 12 to 13-8.

"Consequently, I think I shall not be far wrong if I hold that the rates [13] at the time this contract should have been completed ruled at Rs. 12 a maund for seed of this description."

"The plaintiff therefore is entitled to a decree on that basis."

From this judgment and decree the defendants appealed, almost entirely upon the contention that they were justified in offering delivery at Sulkea and not at Howrah station.

The plaintiffs filed a memorandum of cross-objections, on the ground that the first Court should have allowed damages at a higher rate.

The Appellate Court (PETHERAM, C.J., NORRIS, J., and O'KINEALY, J.) considered mainly one question, viz., whether the plaintiff was entitled to insist on the seed being delivered at the Howrah station, which involved the question whether he was entitled to insist on its being delivered at any place in Bengal which he might select for its delivery.

As to this the Appellate Court inclined to the opinion that, were it not for the final words of the bought and sold notes, "the place of delivery to be mentioned hereafter." the construction contended for by the plaintiffs, and adopted by the first Court, would have been correct. But that the effect of the addition of those words was to show that the intention of the parties was that the place of delivery should be left for further agreement, and as no such further agreement was ever arrived at, "no contract had come into existence at all, but only an agreement as to price, to be carried out, if the other terms of the contract should eventually be arranged."

But the Appellate Court declined to rest its decision on that ground, as it had not been so contended by the appellants. And the judgment concluded in these words:—

"Assuming that the words do prove a contract it is a contract to sell 2,000 maunds of seed within March and April at a price, without any provision whatever as to delivery, and the question is what obligation to deliver does such a contract impose upon the seller? Sir G. Evans, for the buyer, argues that the case is within the provisions of section 49 of the Indian Contract Act read with the illustration* but this we do not think can be the case as,

* The Contract Act, IX of 1872, section 49, is as follows: "When a promise is to be performed without application by the promisee and no place is fixed for the performance of it, it is the duty of the promisor to apply to the promisee to appoint a reasonable place for the performance of the promise and to perform at that place."

[14] if all the provisions as to delivery are taken out of this contract, there is no express agreement to deliver at all, and the case is one to which section 49 does not apply, but is the ordinary case of a sale of goods without any special promise as to delivery, such as is contemplated by section 94* and in such a case the seller is not under any obligation to send the goods to the buyer or to any place at which he may require them. Even then, if there was any binding contract at all, we think that the defendants were not bound to send the seed to Howrah station, and that by refusing to do so they have not broken their contract. The appeal will be decreed, and the suit dismissed with costs."

Mr. A. Cohen, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant, argued that the judgment of the Appellate High Court was erroneous, and should be reversed. The judgment of the first Court was correct as to the construction of the contract, and should be maintained; but should be amended by a larger amount of damages being awarded to the appellants. On the true construction of the contract, evidenced by the bought and sold notes, the plaintiff Grenon had the right to fix a reasonable place in Bengal for the delivery of the seed. The words, "the place of delivery to be mentioned hereafter," meant that the place was to be mentioned by Grenon, who, by his letter of the 20th March 1891 to the broker (which the latter forwarded to the vendors) had the right to mention the place, and he exercised his right by so doing, and the defendants were thereupon bound to deliver at the place fixed by him—the Howrah Railway station. The view was a mistaken one that the words relating to "mention hereafter" got rid of, out of the contract, the previous agreement that the seed should be delivered at some place in Bengal, meaning some reasonable place; and it was a mistake to assume that the reference to a deferred mention of the place left the contract without any express provision as to delivery. Nor was the judgment correct in assuming that the sale being of goods without any special promise for delivery, the place of delivery had been left open to be the subject of a future agreement between the parties, which never took place: and the judgment was incorrect that the case was within the con- [15] templation of section 94 of the Indian Contract Act. It could not be said that there was no special promise as to delivery, but the case seemed to fall under section 49.

Mr. Lawson Walton, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondents, contended that the appellants were not entitled, by the contract of the 27th October 1890, to require the respondents to deliver the seed at any place other than the one where they had been ready and willing so to do, viz., at their own godowns at Sulkea. The respondents, on the other hand, were entitled to repudiate the contract at the time when they did so, and were then no longer bound by it. The contract between the parties was susceptible of any one of three views, each tending to support the defence that the respondents having been ready and willing to deliver at their own godowns at Sulkea on the 30th April 1891 were exonerated from liability. The first view was that the defendants undertaking to deliver anywhere, over so large an extent of country as Bengal, would be inconsistent with their not having had in prospect the entering into a subsequent arrangement to determine a place of delivery with better defined limits. From the second point of view, as the first clause meant delivery anywhere in Bengal, the second clause was required to give definite effect by the naming a place agreed upon. For a further agreement there was occasion, which would not be satisfied by a mere indication on the part of the buyer at his choice alone. Without then the agreement, which never was arrived at, the contract remained incomplete. A third way of giving practical effect to the contract might have been to regard the action of the broker as within the authority given to him. It was submitted that the appellants were bound by the act of their agents in agreeing that the seed should be delivered at the respondents' Sulkea godowns,—the place which the agents at one time appointed for the delivery. The judgment of the High Court, on the dismissal of the suit, was supported by the Indian law.

* Section 94 is as follows: "In the absence of any special promise as to delivery, goods sold are to be delivered at the place at which they are at the time of the sale, and goods contracted to be sold are to be delivered at the place at which they are at the time of the contract for sale, or, if not then in existence, at the place at which they are produced."

Mr. J. D. Mayne, in reply, argued that section 42 of the Indian Contract Act supported the appellants' case.

On a subsequent day, June 27th, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Hobhouse.—The action which gives rise to this appeal [16] is founded on a contract made through Thomas & Co. as brokers for both parties. It is in the usual form of bought and sold notes, dated 27th October 1890. The sold note addressed to the vendors, who are defendants, is as follows :—

"New Mart, Calcutta, 27th October 1890.

'Dear Sirs,

We have this day sold by your order and for your account, to our principals, 2,000 (two thousand) maunds of good fresh and clean new Purneah indigo seed to be of the growth of season 1890-91 at Rs. 8-8 (eight rupees eight annas) per maund.

The seed to be delivered at any place in Bengal in March and April 1891. and to be paid for by draft at 30 days date from date of delivery.

The seed to be packed in good strong bags and each bag to contain two maunds only."

The place of delivery to be mentioned hereafter.

Terms and conditions as above.

Brokerage 2½ per cent.

We are,
Dear Sirs,
Your obedient servants,
J. THOMAS & CO.,
Brokers.

To Babus Muckon Lall, Gobindram."

The bought note is in exact correspondence. There has been dispute whether the defendants ever recognized the plaintiff Grenon, who was sole plaintiff in the first instance, as the principal interested in the contract. That matter was decided against the defendants by Mr. Justice HILL, who presided at the trial, and it is not raised in this appeal.

The dispute which did arise and still exists between the parties relates to the place of delivery. Ultimately it came to a question between two places, the plaintiff insisting on delivery at the Howrah Railway station, and the defendants refusing to deliver except at their own godowns at Sulkea. After much discussion through the brokers, the defendants wrote to them on 1st May 1891 as follows —

"Dear Sirs,

Contract No. 27, dated 27th October 1890.

We waited all day yesterday to give delivery of the indigo seed sold to you from our Sulkea godowns, but as you failed to take delivery, we consider the contract at an end and cancelled."

[17] Upon that the action was brought. The defendants contended that in the course of the correspondence the plaintiff had bound himself to accept their godowns at Sulkea as the place of delivery. After a careful examination of the evidence, Mr. Justice HILL decided that point also against the defendants. They have renewed their contention here, but without persuading their Lordships, who do not think it necessary to say anything more than that they entirely concur with Mr. Justice HILL on this point.

That leads to the question principally discussed at the Bar, how the contract is to be construed with reference to the place of delivery. The plaintiff contends that the place is to be some reasonable place mentioned by himself. The defendants contend, first, that the place was left over for future agreement; so that there is no concluded bargain until the parties have come to that agreement. Failing that argument they contend, secondly, that the seller can discharge his liability under the bargain by delivering, or offering to deliver, the goods at any reasonable place within the specified limits.

The former of these arguments was considered fully by the learned Chief Justice, who expressed an opinion in favour of its soundness, but did not decide the case on that ground, because the defendants' Counsel had not argued it. He held, indeed, that if the contract had contained only the first sentence relating to delivery, it would be very difficult to say that the seller had not contracted to deliver at any place in Bengal which the buyer might select. But he thought that the second sentence modified the meaning of the first; otherwise it would have no effect. The only way of making it effective is, the Chief Justice says, to construe it as meaning that the parties are to agree on the place. That conclusion has been ably supported here at the Bar.

Their Lordships agree that the first sentence relating to delivery gives the choice of place to the buyer, subject only to the expressed condition that it must be in Bengal, and to the implied one that it must be reasonable. But they cannot see how the choice which is given by the words "to be at any place" is taken away, or converted into a deferred agreement, by the statement that the place is "to be mentioned hereafter." That is a very unsuitable expression by which to reserve a point for [18] subsequent agreement. It would be quite simple to say "to be agreed on hereafter," if that were meant. But it is only "to be mentioned," and the obvious meaning of that term is that the place is to be mentioned by the party who, according to the former part of the agreement, had the right of mentioning it.

It is true that with such a meaning the sentence in question adds nothing of value to the document; it merely takes notice that some place of delivery is to be mentioned more definite than the very wide area of Bengal. The addition is natural enough, and though it may be legally superfluous, such superfluities are not unknown in agreements. The principle of giving a meaning to all expressions is a sound one, but it does not justify the importation of a meaning which the expression does not of itself suggest, for which another expression equally short and simple would more readily be used, and which materially affects the rights of the parties.

The learned Chief Justice considers that the contract should be read as if all the provisions for delivery were taken out of it. Then, he says, it would fall within section 94 of the Indian Contract Act, which deals with contracts where there is no special promise as to delivery; and which in the circumstances of this case would prescribe that the seed should be delivered where it is produced. But under any construction of the final sentence it contains a special promise as to delivery, and a delivery bounded by area, though it is true that the area is so large as to require further delimitation. Moreover, the contract is not to deliver at some place to be chosen or assented to by the seller, but at any place, without restriction, except the area of Bengal. It requires nothing more for completion than a mention of the place, and so far from falling within section 94, seems rather to resemble the contracts contemplated in section 49, where the promisee has not to make any application for performance, but no place is fixed. In those cases not only has the promisee the right of naming the place, but there is thrown on the promisor the duty of applying to the promisee to appoint a reasonable place.

Mr. Justice HILL did not enter into any discussion of arguments [19] such as these. He simply stated his opinion that the plaintiff was entitled by the terms of the contract to ask the defendants for its performance at the place selected by him, viz., Howrah station. For the reasons above assigned, their Lordships have to express their agreement with him, and their dissent from the opposite view of the High Court.

There is a further question as to the amount of damages. That depends upon the price of indigo seed at the time when the contract should have been performed. Mr. Justice HILL estimated the price at Rs. 12 per maund. His estimate rests partly on oral evidence, and partly upon two contracts made by Thomas & Co. for the sale of indigo seed; one on 4th April and the other on 30th April 1891. He says that the rate under the earlier contract is Rs. 13 per maund, which is the case; and that the rate under the latter is Rs. 12-8. As regards this latter contract, the learned Judge seems to have been misled by the circumstance that the same document contains a contract for the sale of Shirkarbhoom seed at Rs. 12-8. The price of the Purneah seed is Rs. 15.

The learned Judge says that there is evidence to show that at the end of April rates were running from Rs. 12 to Rs. 13-8. In fact, the evidence shows that the Calcutta rates were higher; the lower rates mentioned by the learned Judge appear to be those at Pertabgunge, the principal mart in Purneah; and something substantial (the plaintiff puts it as high as Rs. 2, but at least 8 annas) has to be added for freight to Howrah, and other expenses. The only evidence to the contrary is that of Balaram, one of the defendant's firm, who says that at the end of April they sold this seed in Calcutta at Rs. 6, and before that at Rs. 5-8. If this were true, it is incredible that the defendants should not gladly have taken the seed to Howrah for the contract price of Rs. 8-8.

Their Lordships do not go very minutely into this question because the plaintiffs' Counsel do not ask for an enhancement of damages on a higher basis than Rs. 13 per maund, and they have fully proved their case for as much as that.

By Mr. Justice HILL'S decree additional plaintiffs, now represented by the appellants Juggun Nath and Ramjee Dass, were [20] placed on the record, and the defendants were ordered to pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 7,000 with interest and costs of suit. The High Court decree simply dismissed the suit with costs in both Courts. The proper course now will be to discharge the decree of the High Court; to order the defendants to pay the costs of appeal in that Court; to vary the decree of the first Court by substituting the sum of Rs. 9,000 for Rs. 7,000; and in other respects to affirm that decree. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty in accordance with this opinion. The respondents must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE GORDON.

Satyesh Chunder Sircar and another, minor, by his mother Matangini Debi............Defendants

Lease—Subsequent written agreement to abate rent—Variation of lease—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 107—Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 92—Registration Act (III of 1877), sections 17 and 18.

In the year 1879 the plaintiff granted a lease of certain lands to the father of the defendants. In May 1889 he agreed in writing to allow the defendants an abatement of rent to the extent of Rs. 100 per annum. This agreement was not registered, but was stated in the plaint in a previous suit brought by the plaintiff. He subsequently brought a suit against the defendants for the recovery of the entire amount of the original rent.

Held, that the defendants could rely on the agreement, and that section 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) did not apply to it.

Held, also, that the agreement did not operate as a lease, but was merely a variation of the lease, and that, therefore, registration was not necessary.

Held, therefore, varying the order of the District Judge, that the decree for the entire amount of the original rent must be set aside, and a decree made for the amount of rent due at the reduced rate.

[21] THE plaintiff sued the defendants for rent due under a putni lease executed in the year 1879, at the rate of Rs. 1,501 per annum. The defendants pleaded that in May 1889 the plaintiff had agreed in writing to reduce their rent to Rs. 1,401 per annum, and that he had himself referred to this agreement in his plaint in a previous suit. The plaintiff's case, as to this agreement, was that the defendants procured it from him by fraud and misrepresentation, and that it was in operative by reason of the fact that it was never registered. The lower Court found against the plaintiff on the question of fraud, but held that the agreement required registration in order to become operative; and the District Judge therefore made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the whole amount claimed by him.

The defendants appealed.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerji for the appellants.—The defendants are entitled to rely on the written agreement by the plaintiff to accept a reduced rent. It does not constitute a new lease; it is merely a release, by the landlord, of part of the rent payable under the lease.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 344 of 1894, against the decree of J. Whitmore, Esq., District Judge of Beerbhoom, dated the 18th of August 1894.

At the time the lease was granted, namely in 1879, no lease was required to be in writing; although, if a lease was written, it had to be registered. The lower Court should not have held registration of this agreement to be essential, but should have allowed the defendants to rely on the plaintiff's admission of the agreement without producing it, as was done by the High Court of Madras; Chedambaram Chetty v. Karunalyavalangapuly Taver (3 Mad., H. C., 342). The agreement having been admitted by the plaintiff in his former plaint, effect should be given to it; Dinonath Mookerjee v. Debnath Mullick (14 W. R., 429); and that without requiring the defendants to produce it, for the agreement is properly admissible in evidence; Burjorji Cursetji Panthaki v. Muncherji Kuverji (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 143). Again, section 92 of the Evidence Act does not affect the case. We are not seeking to vary the terms of a written agreement by an oral agreement, and that is all that section 92 deals with; but we are relying on the plaintiff's own statement. He admits all that we have to prove; and therefore the agreement is admissible under section 65 of the Evidence Act. Since this agreement contained [22] a portion only of the terms upon which the new lease or settlement was to be granted, it was neither a lease nor an agreement for a lease within the meaning of the Registration Act, and consequently was admissible in evidence without having been registered, Luchmissur Singh v. Dakho (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 708). [GHOSE, J.—Section 92 of the Evidence Act alone is no answer to your case. But how if it is read with section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act?] Still it does not affect the case. The agreement to reduce the rent does not amount to the creation of a new lease, nor to a surrender, by operation of law, of the old one. It is simply a release of portion of the rent; and rent is not land or an interest in land.

Babu Srinath Dass (with him Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Pramathanath Sen) for the respondent.—It is true the plaintiff agreed to reduce the rent; but he is not bound for all time; he is at liberty to change his mind. The question is, whether he had by any act of his legally bound himself to this reduction. His case is that, if the agreement is binding, it creates a new lease, which, being made after the Transfer of Property Act came into force, must be registered. He sues on the old contract, and must do so: he cannot sue on the new agreement, because it is not registered. The original contract has not been rescinded: all that the plaintiff has done is to accept a lower rent for a time as a favour to the defendants.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose in reply.

This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. It appears that the defendants father obtained a putni lease from the plaintiff, on the 26th Assin 1286 at a jama of Rs. 1,501. The plaintiff, however, states in his plaint that subsequently the defendants, upon a false representation that the gross rental of the property had decreased, obtained a letter from him, the plaintiff, reducing the jâma by Rs. 100 a year, on the 18th Jeyt 1296, corresponding to the 31st May 1889; but that they did not execute a fresh kabuliyat agreeing to pay the reduced jama. The plaintiff adds that the said letter, granting an abatement of the jama, was obtained by fraud and [23] without any consideration; and that, being an unregistered document, it is inoperative according to law. He accordingly claims rent from 1297 to 1300, at the full rate, namely Rs. 1,501, plus cesses, etc.

The defence of the defendants is that the abatement of rent by Rs. 100 a year was not obtained by any misrepresentation of facts; but that there were good grounds for such abatement being allowed, and that the letter of the 18th Jeyt 1296 did not in law require registration.

The Court below has held that the letter in question is evidence of a substituted contract, and that it required registration; and that, because it was not registered, it is not operative in law. The District Judge has accordingly given the plaintiff a decree at the full rate of Rs. 1,501 a year from a certain point of time mentioned in his judgment, the time when he has held the defendants had notice that the plaintiff meant to adhere to the original rate of rent as contained in the putni pottah of 1286.

Against this decree the defendants have appealed to this Court.

It appears to us that if the fact of the abatement was a matter in issue between the parties, and the success of the case set up by the defendants depended upon the production and proof of the letter of the 18th Jeyt 1296, then no doubt the question whether it required registration would arise; but it seems to be clear that there was no such issue between the parties in the Court below. That an abatement was actually made in the jama, and the letter in question given, the plaintiff admits in the plaint; and we find upon a reference to his plaint in a previous suit between the parties, bearing date the 13th September 1890, that he admitted there also in distinct terms that he had granted an abatement of rent to the defendants, to the extent of Rs. 100 a year, from the year 1296, and that from that year the defendants were bound to pay to the plaintiff rent at the rate of Rs. 1,401 a year. Indeed, the fact of the abatement having been allowed to the defendants was conceded on all hands; and it was not therefore essential for the success of the defendants' case that they should have produced the letter granting the abatement and to have proved the same. No doubt, if this letter was all the evidence in support of the position, that abatement to the extent of Rs. 100 [24] a year had been allowed by the plaintiff, then no doubt the defendants could not succeed in their defence unless they produced and proved the letter itself, and then no doubt also the question of registration would be important. But that is not the case here.

The plaintiff, as has already been mentioned, sought to avoid the effect of the abatement that he had allowed by alleging that it had been obtained by the defendants by means of fraud and upon misrepresentation of facts, and that it was without any consideration. Both these points were found against the plaintiff by the Court below; and no contention has been raised before us on that score by the learned vakil for the respondent; and we think, we may therefore take it that there was no misrepresentation at all on the part of the defendants when they obtained the abatement of rent, and that there was good and valid consideration for such abatement. The learned vakil for the respondent has, however, referred us to section 92 of the Evidence Act, and to section 107* of the Transfer of Property Act, and has contended that the original lease of the year 1286 could not be varied by any oral agreement, and that the agreement on the part of the plaintiff to allow an abatement of rent must be regarded as a lease within the meaning of section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act, and as such, requiring to be reduced to writing and to be registered.

With regard to the contention based upon section 92 of the Evidence Act, all that we need say is, that the defendants do not in this case seek to prove any oral agreement between the parties. The agreement that had been come to is admitted by the plaintiff himself, and, therefore, it seems to be obvious that section 92 of the Evidence Act does not operate as a bar to the plea raised by the defendants.

*[Sec. 107 :—A lease of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, can be made only by a registered instrument.

Leases how made.

All other leases of immoveable property may be made either by an instrument or by oral agreement.]

Then as regards the contention based upon section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, it seems to us that it has no application to the present case; for the agreement allowing the abatement does not operate as a lease. No doubt it purports to vary to some extent one of the terms of the lease; but that is all. It seems to us, therefore, that it was not absolutely necessary that the agreement should have been reduced to writing or registered.

[25] The view that we adopt in this case finds support from the several cases referred to us in the course of the argument, namely, the cases of Burjorji Kursetji Panthaki v. Muncherji Kuverji (I.L.R., 5 Bom., 143), Chedambaram Chetty v. Karunalyavalandapuly Taver (3 Mad., H. C., 342), Dinonath Mookerjee v. Debnath Mullick (14 W. R., 429), and Luchmissur Singh v. Dakho (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 708). In the last mentioned case it was held that a dowl containing only a portion of the terms upon which a new lease or settlement was to be granted was not a lease or an agreement for a lease within the meaning of the Registration Act.

Certain other points have been discussed before us by the learned vakil for the appellant; but we do not think it necessary to express any opinion upon them.

The result is, that the decree of the Court below, so far as it holds that the plaintiff is entitled to recover rent at the rate of Rs. 1,501 a year, as mentioned in the original putni lease of the year 1286, should be set aside. The decree will be at the reduced rate.

Under the circumstances of the case, we direct that each party do bear his own costs.

H. W. Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[A 'dowl' evidencing commutation of rent from kind into cash, was held to be not compulsorily registrable. "To a document of this description the principle laid down by this Court in (1896) 24 Cal., 20 and by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in (1898) 22 Mad., 217 applies. That principle is that a document given by the owner of land to his tenant, or by the tenant to his landlord, varying the terms of the tenancy with reference to the amount of rent to be paid is not an instrument relating to an interest in immoveable property and does not require registration. Substantially the same view was taken by this Court in (1880) 5 Cal., 864."—per MOOKERJEE, J., in (1909) 11 C.L.J., 20.

An unregistered contemporaneous agreement to abate rent was held not admissible in evidence:—(1901) 6 C.W.N., 60: 12 C.L.J., 439.

In (1909) 10 C.L.J., 570 the decision in 24 Cal., 20, was distinguished as having proceeded on an admission.

In (1900) 24 Bom., 609 a receipt setting forth the settlement of mortgage accounts was not required to be registered.]

Guardian—Guardian Ad litem—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), section 53— Civil Procedure Code, section 443, as amended by section 53 of Act VIII of 1890.

Section 53 of Act VIII of 1890, amending the Code of Civil Procedure, expressly requires the appointment of a guardian ad litem, whether or not a guardian is appointed under Act VIII of 1890.

In a suit against a minor, the summons was attempted to be served on his guardian appointed under Act VIII of 1890, but no guardian ad litem was [26] appointed in the suit. The suit was decreed ex parte, no one having appeared for the minor. Held, that the decree must be set aside and the case sent back in order that the minor might be represented in accordance with law and the case retried.

THE plaintiffs in this suit alleged in their plaint that during their minority a suit was brought against them by the father and uncle of the defendant Dakeshur Pershad, in which they were not legally represented; that the suit was compromised by their co-sharers in collusion with the plaintiffs in that suit, and a decree passed on the basis of such compromise; that the defendant had taken out execution of the decree and the plaintiffs' joint ancestral property was about to be sold in execution. The prayer was for a declaration that the plaintiffs' rights were not affected by the decree.

The defendant (No. 1), Dakeshur Pershad, was a minor under the guardianship of his mother Deomurat Koer, who was appointed guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890). The defendants 2 and 3 were the plaintiffs' co-sharers, who were charged with having brought about the collusive compromise mentioned above.

Summonses and notices were issued to the defendants and an order was recorded in the order sheet as follows :—

7-11-94. "House service of summons was effected on the defendant No. 1, on the 4th October last, and on the defendants 2 and 3 on the 12th October last."

"The defendants on legal service of summonses have not appeared; the case is decreed ex parte. There is no need of framing issues. Plaintiffs shall adduce evidence to-morrow."

In his judgment the Subordinate Judge said: –

"The service of summons on the defendants is proved, but they have not entered appearance, the case therefore proceeds ex parte against them.

"The testimony of witnesses examined on behalf of the plaintiffs coupled with documentary evidence proves plaintiffs' case and claim. It has been shown that Dodraj and Nirpal (defendants 2 and 3) had no power to alienate the joint family property, and that the compromise filed in the previous suit was purely personal.

"Plaintiffs' suit is accordingly decreed ex parte with costs and interest at 6 per cent. per annum."

The defendant No. 1 through his guardian Deomurat Koer preferred an appeal to the High Court.

[27] M. Mahomed Yusuf, Babu Umakali Mukerjee, Babu Tarit Mohun Das and M. Mahomed Habibullah for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Gregory, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows :—

It is difficult to conceive of a case where the formalities of the law have been more neglected than in the present instance.

The suit was brought against a minor. No guardian ad litem was appointed of that minor, yet the case was allowed to proceed to decree. No attempt was made to serve the minor with a summons, but some attempt apparently was made to effect service of notice upon the lady who had been appointed guardian by the Court under Act VIII of 1890. Section 53 of that Act, amending the Civil Procedure Code, expressly requires the appointment of a guardian ad litem, whether or not a guardian is appointed under Act VIII of 1890, although that section gives precedence to the appointment of a guardian appointed under the provisions of that Act.

It is perfectly obvious that the decree appealed against is bad and must be set aside, and the case must go back to the lower Court in order that the minor may be represented in accordance with the law, and then the case must be retried. Until the minor is represented in accordance with law no proceedings had can be binding upon him.

Bengal Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880), section 47—Decree for Arrears of Cess—Sale in execution of decree, Effect of.

Although the procedure for the realization of cesses may be the same as the procedure laid down for the realization of rent due upon the tenure, yet it does not necessarily follow that the effect of a sale for cesses should [28] be the same as that of a sale for arrears of rent for which the tenure itself is liable to be sold. Umacharn Bag v. Ajadannissa Bibee (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 430) followed.

Notwithstanding, therefore, that section 47 of the Cess Act, 1880, provides that "every holder of an estate or tenure to whom any sum may be payable under the provisions of this Act may recover the same with interest at the rate of twelve and a half per centum per annum in the same manner and under the same penalties as if the same were arrears of rent due to him," the effect of a sale by the Collector in execution of a decree for cesses against some of the owners of a tenure is not to convey to the purchaser the whole tenure, but only the right, title and interest of the particular persons against whom the decree had been obtained.

THE road cess and public works cess payable for the share of the plaintiffs in a certain mouza having fallen into arrear the defendant No. 1 brought separate suits against them for their respective shares of the cesses, and obtained decrees. He then instituted against some of the other defendants a suit for recovery of the cesses due for the entire mouza, and in execution of this decree he caused the entire mouza to be put up for sale, and it was purchased by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the appellants. The plaintiffs then brought a suit for a declaration that the sale did not affect their shares of the mouza. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit. The defendants 2 and 3 appealed.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 270 of 1894 against the decree of Babu Debendra Lal Shome, Subordinate Judge of Manbhoom, dated the 27th of July 1894.

The judgment of the Court (Ghose and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:—

We think that the Court below in this case has arrived at a proper conclusion.

The whole question discussed before us by the learned vakil for the appellants is as to the effect of the sale held by the Collector in execution of a decree under Act X of 1859 for cesses against certain of the owners of the tenure in respect of which the cesses were due, that is to say, whether it was a sale of the [29] tenure itself, or simply the right, title and interest of the persons against whom the said decree had been obtained.

The contention of the appellant depends entirely upon the construction to be put upon section 47 of Bengal Act IX of 1880. That section runs thus: "Every holder of an estate or tenure to whom any sum may be payable under the provisions of this Act may recover the same with interest at the rate of twelve and half per centum per annum in the same manner and under the same penalties as if the same were arrears of rent due to him."

It has been contended that when the Legislature says that the cess may be recovered in the same manner and under the same penalties as if the same were arrears of rent due to the landlord, it means that the same incidents which attach to, and follow upon, a sale for arrears of rent for which the tenure itself is liable to be sold, equally attach to a sale for cesses, and that, therefore, the sale at which the defendants-appellants purchased the property conveyed to them the whole tenure, and not simply the right, title and interest of the particular individuals against whom the decree for cesses had been obtained.

We are, however, unable to accept this argument as correct. We think that, although the procedure for the realization of cesses may be the same as the procedure laid down for the realization of rent due upon the tenure, yet it does not necessarily follow that the effect of a sale for cesses should be the same as that of a sale for arrears of rent for which the tenure itself is liable to be sold under section 105 of Act X of 1859. We observe that this is the view that was substantially adopted by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Umachurn Bag v. Ajadannissa Bibee (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 430) where the learned Judges had, amongst other matters, to construe the meaning of section 25, Act X of 1871, the language of which (so far as the question we are now dealing with is concerned) is substantially the same as that of section 47 of Bengal Act IX of 1880.

We think that what the defendants-appellants have purchased in this case is, not the tenure itself, but simply the right, title and interest of the particular individuals against whom the decree for cesses had been obtained.

[30] It has been found by the Court below that the plaintiffs are entitled to a 9-anna share of the tenure, and no attempt has been made before us to question the finding of the lower Court in that respect.

It follows, therefore, that the decree of the lower Court should be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. The Maharajah is entitled to separate costs.

Appeal—Lower Burmah Courts Act (XI of 1889), section 40—Burmah Courts Act (XVII of 1875), section 49—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sections 3 and 86—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 595 and 614—Final decree passed by the Recorder of Rangoon in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction where the value of the subject-matter of the suit is above ten thousand rupees.

A decree passed by the Recorder of Rangoon, in a suit for grant of probate of a will, is a final decree passed by him in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction.

No appeal lies to the High Court from a final decree passed by the Recorder of Rangoon in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction, where the value of the subject-matter of the suit is above ten thousand rupees, but an appeal lies to Her Majesty in Council.

ONE Esoof Hasshim Dooply and another sought to propound the will of one Mahomed Ibrahim Dooply, who died on the 17th November 1894. The alleged will was dated the 10th October 1894. Caveats were entered on behalf of the widow and five daughters of the testator. The caveators objected to the grant of the probate of the will, on the ground that the testator at the time of its execution was of such feeble mind that he was incapable of understanding the nature of the act. The value of the estate was above six lakhs of rupees. The learned Recorder of Rangoon refused to grant probate and dismissed the suit, holding that the testator was not in full possession of his senses when he executed the will.

[31] Against this judgment the petitioners appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Evans Pugh (Mr. Simmons with them) for the Appellants.

Mr. Jackson (Mr. G. B. Macnair with him) for the Respondents.

Mr. Jackson, for the respondents, took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. He contended that the decree passed by the Recorder of Rangoon, in this case, was a final decree; it was passed by him in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction; see Navivaboo v. Turner [I. L. R., 13 Bom., 520 (526): L. R., 16 I.A., 156 (162)]; and as the value of the subject-matter of the suit was above ten thousand rupees, no appeal would lie to the High Court, but to Her Majesty in Council. See section 83 of the Probate and Administration Act, and sections 595 and 614 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Mr. Pugh for the appellants.—Section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act provides that any order made by a District Judge shall be subject to appeal to the High Court, under the rules contained in the Code of Civil

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 194 of 1895, against the decree of W. F. Agnew, Esq., Recorder of Rangoon, dated the 5th of April 1895.

Procedure. A District Judge, as defined in section 3 of the same Act, is a Judge of a principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction. The Recorder of Rangoon is a District Judge, so far as appeals to the High Court are concerned. Testamentary Jurisdiction does not come under Original Civil jurisdiction. If it does, section 40 of the Lower Burmah Courts Act provides for such cases. Section 595 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not govern the present case, as the decree was not passed on appeal by the Recorder of Rangoon. For the purpose of sections 595 and 612 of the Code of Civil Procedure the Recorder's Court is a High Court. The decree passed by the Recorder is not final, as there is an appeal given by the Probate and Administration Act. See the case In the matter of Mononhur Mookerjee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 756). The Court of the Recorder of Rangoon is not a High Court except for the purpose of deciding cases to be sent up to the Privy Council. While the Burmah Courts Act (XVII of 1875) was in force, the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) was passed, which gave an appeal to the High Court, and the [32] Lower Burmah Courts Act (XI of 1889) did not interfere with that.

Mr. Evans Pugh followed.

The judgment of the High Court (Petheram, C.J., and Rampini, J.) was as follows:—

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Recorder of Rangoon by which he refused probate of an alleged will of a person named Mahomed Ibrahimji Dooply, whose estate is valued at more than six lakhs of rupees, and the first question we have to consider is whether the appeal lies to this Court or to Her Majesty in Council.

The Probate and Administration Act came into operation on the 21st of January 1881. By section 86* of that Act every order made by a District Judge under the powers of the Act is subject to appeal to the High Court, and the definition of a District Judge in section 3 is wide enough to include the Recorder of Rangoon.

The Civil Procedure Code came into operation on the 17th of March 1884. Section 614 of that Code enacts that the expression "High Court" in section 595 shall include the Recorder of Rangoon, with the result that section 595 will read: "An appeal shall lie to Her Majesty in Council from any final decree passed by the Recorder of Rangoon in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction." The Lower Burmah Courts Act came into operation on the 30th of May 1889. Section 40 of that Act provides that, save as otherwise provided by any enactment for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from a decree or order of the Recorder in a suit or civil proceeding of which the value of the subject-matter is less than rupees 10,000.

The case made here on behalf of the appellant is that the Recorder disposed of the matter as a District Judge, and that an appeal to this Court is expressly given in all cases against such a decision by the Probate and Administration Act, whatever may be the value of the subject-matter, and is not taken away by the subsequent legislation.

Whatever may have been the law on the subject between January 1881 and March 1882, the tribunal to which appeals lay from final decrees passed by the Recorder of Rangoon in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction was, between March 1882 and [33] May 1889, regulated by section 595 of the Civil Procedure Code and Act XVII of 1875, section 49.

* [Sec. 86:—Every order made by a District Judge or District Delegate by virtue of the powers hereby conferred upon him shall be subject to appeal to the High Court under the rules contained in the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to appeals.]

Appeals from orders of District Judge.

If the provisions of the Code are inconsistent with those of the Probate and Administration Act, those of the Code must prevail, as it is the later enactment. That being so, the only question is whether the decree of the Recorder is a final decree passed by him in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction. We think it is. No doubt in some cases, as in the Burmah Courts Act, 1889, Civil Jurisdiction is sub-divided, but where this is not done, we are clearly of opinion that the words Original Civil Jurisdiction are wide enough to include all matters which are not criminal, and therefore to include those which relate to wills. The decision must, we think, be final within the meaning of section 595, though it is appealable, as the section is dealing with original decrees of High Courts, which are always appealable.

Section 40 of the Lower Burmah Courts Act, 1889, does not really touch the present question. That section only deals with matters in which the subject-matter is below the value of Rs. 10,000, which is certainly not the case here.

The result is that in our opinion the case is governed by sections 595 and 614 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that no appeal lies to this Court.

This is, of course, enough to dispose of the appeal, but as the case has been argued before us by Mr. Pugh on the merits, and as it may go further, we think it right to say that in our opinion the Recorder was right to refuse probate of this will and to express very shortly our reasons for that opinion.

Under these circumstances, bearing in mind that we are sitting here as a Court of First Appeal, and that our decision might be appealed against, we think that we should say that in our opinion the appeal cannot be sustained even on the evidence, but we do not dismiss the appeal on this ground, but we dismiss it inasmuch as we think that we have no jurisdiction to hear it. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY.

Bhola Porshad...... .....Defendant No. 2

Ram Lall and others............Plaintiffs.*

Parties—Adding parties as plaintiffs—Civil Procedure Code (1882) section 32—Suit by Benamidar.

A mortgage bond was executed ostensibly in favour of R, but J was the real mortgagee. A suit was brought by R, the benamidar, to enforce the bond; J, the real mortgagee, made over the debt on a date previous to the suit, but executed the formal deed of assignment on a date subsequent thereto. The assignees were then added as plaintiffs to the suit.

Held, distinguishing the case of Chunder Coomar Roy v. Gocool Chunder Bhuttacharjee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 370), that a benamidar may sue, and that the assignees were rightly added as plaintiffs under section 32 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held, also, that section 32 is wide enough to meet every case of defect of parties; and, further, that the power to add parties must be exercised with reference to the interests which those parties have at the time when the addition is being considered.

THE facts and arguments in this case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Babu Hem Chunder Banerjee, Babu Umakali Mukerjee, and Babu Baldeo Narain Singh for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, M. Mahomed Yusuf and M. Mahomed Habibullah for the Respondents.

The facts which it is necessary to detail for the purposes of our judgment are as follows :—

On the 19th of July 1889 the first defendant executed a mortgage of certain property in favour of one Ram Lall, and in the mortgage bond promised to pay the amount secured thereby by the end of Sraban 1297 (July 1890). The consideration for the mortgage consisted of a decree which had been made in favour of one Dooli Chand, and two bonds which had been given to one [36] Jaitroop. As a matter of fact the money covered by the decree belonged to Jaitroop, and in the matter of the mortgage, Ram Lall was the benamidar of Jaitroop.

On the 6th of September 1891, Jaitroop made over this debt to the firm of Hardeo Dass, Janki Dass, the members of which firm are Behari Lal and Nait Ram. The assignment then made was not in writing, but a record of it was made in the books of the firm of Hardeo Dass, Janki Dass, and a release was given to Jaitroop for the debt which was owing by him, and was to that extent satisfied by this assignment.

On the 21st of January 1893, this suit was brought by Ram Lall at the instigation of the gomasta of the firm of Hardeo Dass, Janki Dass. The suit was brought for the purpose of recovering the sum due on the mortgage. Besides the mortgagor, Bhola Pershad, the appellant before us, was made a party defendant. He was described in the suit as a second mortgagee, but as it turns out, his mortgage was prior in date to the mortgage sued upon. He has also bought the first defendant's equity of redemption, but subsequently to the mortgage in suit.

On the 6th of March 1893, the first defendant filed a written statement, charging amongst other things that the plaintiff Ram Lall was a fictitious person, and that the persons really interested in the mortgage were Jaitroop and Dooli Chand, but on the 27th of March 1893 he filed a petition admitting the plaintiffs' claim. In a written statement filed on the 13th of April 1893, a contention similar to that in the written statement of the 6th March was, amongst others, raised by the defendant Bhola Pershad.

On the 30th of July 1893, a formal deed of sale of the mortgagee's right was executed by Jaitroop in favour of Behari Lal and Nait Ram, who by an order of the 21st August 1893 were added as plaintiffs to this suit. This order was made ex parte, but a fresh summons was issued.

On the 10th of September 1893 a further written statement was filed by Bhola Pershad, protesting against the order of the 21st of August 1893.

This objection was pressed at the hearing, but has been disallowed by the learned Subordinate Judge, who has given the added plaintiffs a decree on the mortgage, conditionally on their [36] paying the amount due under the first mortgage. They deposited this sum in Court.

The only question argued before us in the appeal is, whether the order of the 21st of August 1893 could and ought to have been made. The two sections of the Civil Procedure Code, which have been referred to, are sections 27 and 32.

We need only consider section 32, which empowers the Court to add the name of any person whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. The case of Chunder Coomar Roy v. Gocool Chunder Buttacharjee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 370) holds that section 32 applies only to a suit "which is to some extent properly instituted, though partially defective; in other words, there is no jurisdiction at the hearing to add a plaintiff, unless the original plaintiff had some title to sue."

Taking that case to be good law, we are of opinion that the circumstances of the present case are not governed by the principle there laid down. In that case the son had no right to sue at all. We are unable to say that a benamdar cannot under any circumstances sue. It is true that his name only is used in the transaction, but his name also is frequently used in suits, and unless an objection be taken a decree can be made in his favour. There is authority to show that the real owner is bound by a suit by the benamdar. It is, therefore, impossible for us to hold that a suit by the benamdar can, to no extent, be properly instituted, although it may be partially defective.

The real question is whether the added plaintiffs could, under any circumstances, be introduced into the suit, as the assignment to them was subsequent to the institution of the suit. It is not necessary for us to decide whether an assignment of the interests of the mortgagee could be otherwise than in writing. At the time when they were added, Jaitroop could not have been added as he had ceased to have any interest. When it was found necessary to add the real owners, the added plaintiffs as being the then real owners were added. [37] The power to add parties must be exercised with reference to the interests which those parties have at the time when the addition is being considered. Mr. Bonnerjee contended that the Court could not add a plaintiff unless he had a right at the time of suit, or had derived a right from an original plaintiff. Even if this be a correct limitation to the powers of the section, we think that a conveyance from the real owner, whose benamdar is the plaintiff, must, for the purposes of this proposition, be treated as a conveyance from the plaintiff. We are by no means saying that the section is so limited, as we are of opinion that it is wide enough to meet every case of defect of parties.

Another question has been raised under section 131* of the Transfer of Property Act, but it was not referred to in the lower Court or in the grounds of appeal to us. If it had been pleaded, it might have been the subject of an issue of fact.

*[Sec. 131:—No transfer of any debt or any beneficial interest in moveable property shall have any operation against the debtor or against the person in whom the property is vested, until express notice of the transfer is given to him, unless he is a party to or otherwise aware of such transfer; and every dealing by such debtor or person, not being a party to or otherwise aware of, and not having received express notice of, a transfer, with the debt or property shall be valid as against such transfer.]

Transfer of debts.

In our opinion the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[In Jagat Tara v. Narmada (1914) 24 I. C., 801 (Cal.), MULLICK, J., said, "Although there are decisions in other High Courts to support this view, (that a benamidar in a suit for possession of immoveable property is entitled to sue), I think that so far as this Court is concerned it is a settled law that no such suit can be maintained. It is sufficient to cite the latest case upon the subject, Mohendra Nath Mookerjee v. Kali Prashad Johuri (1902) 30 Cal., 265. Bhola Pershad v. Kali Prashad (1896) 24 Cal., 34 and Sachitananda Mohapatra v. Balaram Gosain 24 Cal., 644 are authorities for the proposition that a benamidar mortgagee can sue; but on the other hand the contrary view has been taken in Munshi Basiruddin Ahmed v. Mahomed Jalish Patwari 12 C.W.N., 409 and in any event the distinction between suits based on mortgage and those based on sales has been clearly recognised in this Court. I hold that the plaintiff if she is a benamidar is not entitled to maintain the suit". (1899) 21 All., 380 was the case of a mortgagee. See also (1897) 22 Bom., 672.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 67 and section 178—Payment of Interest—Rate of interest specified in kabuliyat—Sale, for arrears of rent, of right of defaulting tenant who has held over—Purchaser of tenure, Rights of.

In execution of a decree for arrears of rent against a tenant whose term under a kabuliyat had expired but who had held over, the plaintiff put up the tenure for sale, and the defendant purchased it. The plaintiff afterwards sued the defendant for interest at the rate and according to the instalments specified in the kabuliyat.

Held, reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge, that the defendant was liable only for interest at the rate specified in section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[38] Ishan Chunder Chowdhry v. Chunder Kant Roy (13 C.L.R., 55) distinguished.

ANU SARKAR held certain lands under a kabuliyat for a period of seven years from 1285 to 1291 (B.S.) (1878 to 1884). After the term expired, he held over without any further agreement. In Phalgun 1296 the plaintiff obtained a decree against him for arrears of rent; and in execution of that decree he put up the holding for sale, and it was purchased by the defendant. The plaintiff subsequently brought a suit against the defendant to recover arrears of rent for the years 1296 to 1299 (1889 to 1892) with interest at the rate of one anna in the rupee per mensem, as specified in the kabuliyat. The amount of interest so claimed exceeded the principal. The defendant pleaded that under the Tenancy Act no higher rate of interest than 12 per cent. per annum could be claimed. The Munsif made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the rent due, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum.

The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who decreed the plaintiff's claim in full, with costs and interest at 6 per cent. per annum until realisation. The defendant appealed.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 12 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Biprodas Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 7th of September 1894, reversing the decree of Babu Phani Bhushan Mukerjee, Munsif of Iswargunge, dated the 1st of December 1893.

Babu Grish Chunder Chowdhry, for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, and Babu Jogesh Chunder Roy, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Macpherson and Hill, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is a suit for arrears of rent for the years 1296 to 1299 according to certain specified instalments, and interest at the rate of 1 anna per rupee per mensem. The interest claimed is much in excess of the principal. It seems that the holding for which the rent is claimed formerly belonged to one Anu Sarkar, who held it under a registered kabuliyat for a term of 7 years, extending from 1285 to 1291. • After the lease expired he held over without any further agreement. In February 1889 (Phalgun 1296) the plaintiff obtained a decree for arrears of rent against Anu Sarkar, and in execution of the decree the holding was sold and purchased by the defendant. The plaintiff in the present suit claimed interest at the rate and according to the [39] instalments specified in the kabuliyat. The defendant said the rent was payable in the instalments specified in section 53 of the Tenancy Act, and that the plaintiff could not recover a higher rate of interest than was allowed by section 67 of the same Act. The first Court decided both points in favour of the defendant. The Appellate Court reversed that decision and decided them in favour of the plaintiff. The only question raised in this appeal is as to the rate of interest. The holding when sold was either an occupancy or non-occupancy holding; it does not appear, and for the purpose of the case it does not matter, which it was. Section 67 of the Tenancy Act provides that "an arrear of rent shall bear simple interest at the rate of 12 per centum per annum from the expiration of that quarter of the agricultural year in which the instalment falls due to the institution of the suit." Section 178 provides that nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant after the passing of the Act shall " affect the provisions of section 67 relating to interest payable on arrears of rent." Neither landlord nor tenant could, therefore, after the passing of the Act in March 1885, contract himself out of the provisions of section 67.

We will assume, in the absence of anything to denote the contrary, that the original holder while holding over held under all the terms of the kabuliyat which he had given. When, however, the landlord put up the holding to sale for its arrears, he must be taken to have put it up subject to all the ordinary incidents of such a holding. It was not an ordinary incident that interest on arrears should be payable at the very high rate claimed. On the contrary there was no such incident, and if the landlord had put up the holding subject to an express condition that the higher rate should be paid, the condition would not bind the purchaser in so far as it purported to create a new contract between himself and the landlord. If there was no such condition attached to the sale, the purchaser must be taken to have purchased subject to all the ordinary incidents of the holding. If there was such a condition, and it was for the respondent to show it, which he has not done, the condition was, we consider, contrary to the provisions of the Act and not binding on the purchaser. An agreement by a tenant of a holding [40] for a term, to pay interest at a certain rate, may, if made before the passing of the Act, bind him so long as he continues to hold, but it does not attach to the land, when the term has expired, and the holding by the act of the landlord passes into other hands; and if the landlord, after the expiry of the term, puts up the holding to sale under the Act, he puts it up subject to the express provisions of the Act in connection with it.

The case of Ishan Chunder Chowdhry v. Chunder Kant Roy (13 C.L.R., 55) is, we think, quite distinguishable. That was a case of a putni tenure, which is a permanent and a well-known description of tenure, and the purchaser was held to be bound by the terms of the putni agreement so far at all events as they were consistent with the nature of a putni tenure.

The defendant is only liable to pay interest at the rate specified in section 67 of the Tenancy Act. The decision of the Subordinate Judge is set aside, and the case must be sent back to him in order that he may determine what that interest is according to the instalments stated in the plaint, and make a decree accordingly.

The appellant will get his costs of this appeal.

H. W. Appeal allowed.

Bheka Singh............Plaintiff

Nakchhed Singh and another............Defendants.*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Schedule III, Article 3—Limitation—Suit by occupancy-raiyat for possession.

Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), prescribing a limitation of two years, is not restricted to suits against the landlord alone; it applies to a suit brought against a tenant with whom the land was settled by the landlord.

Ramjanee Bibee v. Amoo Beparee (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 317) and Chunder Kishore Dey v. Rajkishore Mozumdur (I.L.R., 15 Cal., 450) distinguished.

[41] THIS suit was brought on the allegation that the land claimed was a part of the plaintiff's ancestral kasht in a village in the district of Monghyr; that in 1885 the land was included in Jazira Dumra in the district of Patna, under orders of the Revenue authorities; that after the death of the plaintiff's father, the officers of Government refused to register his name as tenant, set up defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as tenants on the land, and caused the crops to be attached in 1297 and 1298 Fasli (1889 and 1890); that the plaintiff sent a notice to the Collector of Patna asking for registration of his name but to no purpose, and that the term fixed in the notice expired on the 3rd December 1890. The plaintiff accordingly brought this suit on the 29th January 1892 praying for recovery of possession and mesne profits upon declaration of his occupancy right. The Secretary of State for India was made defendant No. 1 in the suit; but it was stated on his behalf that he had no objection to the registration of plaintiff's name and to the Court's awarding possession to the plaintiff if the Court considered it proper to do so. The other defendants contested the claim and raised the plea of limitation.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 822 of 1895, against the decree of Moulvie K. S. Fukhruddin Hossain, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 6th of March 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Bhawa Charan Mukerjee, Munsif of that district, dated the 17th of February 1893.

The first Court found that the plaintiff had a right of occupancy, but that he was dispossessed by the acts of the servants of defendant No. 1 more than two years before the institution of this suit; and held that the suit was barred under Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The plaintiff preferred an appeal, but the appeal was dismissed on the ground that the Secretary of State, who was defendant in the first Court, was not made respondent in the appeal.

On a second appeal, the High Court (TREVELYAN and AMEER ALI, JJ.) observed: "In the first Court the Secretary of State disclaimed all interest in the subject-matter of the suit and stated that it was perfectly indifferent to him whether the plaintiff or the other defendant in the case established their title to the land. That being so, there was no decree against him, and the appellant was right, we think, in not making him party to the appeal in the Court below. As he is not a necessary party to the appeal the learned Judge ought to have tried the appeal. We therefore direct that the case go back, so that all matters in question in the appeal may be tried by the learned Judge."

[42] After remand, the Subordinate Judge of Patna tried the appeal and held that the suit was barred by limitation as the plaintiff failed to bring it within two years from the date of his dispossession.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarti for the Appellant.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee for the Respondents.

This is an appeal from a decision on remand.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff, claiming to be an occupancy-raiyat, against the Secretary of State, who was his landlord, and also against a person who had been settled on the land by one of the officers of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State put in an answer disclaiming any preference for the plaintiff or the defendant as his tenant.

The case came before the Munsif who found that the plaintiff had an occupancy-right, but he dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation under Article 3, Schedule III, Part I of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff appealed, not making the Secretary of State a party to the appeal; as far as the decision against the Secretary of State as to the suit being barred by limitation is concerned, it was final, not having been excepted to by the appellant. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal on the ground that the Secretary of State was not made a party to the appeal before him. A second appeal was preferred, and a Division Bench of this Court held that under the circumstances the Secretary of State was not a necessary party to the appeal, and therefore set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and directed him to try all questions on appeal. This has been done, and the Subordinate Judge has found that the suit, as it now stands as against the second defendant who was put in possession by the Secretary of State, is barred by limitation.

It is contended before us that Article 3 only applies to a suit against the landlord. In the first place this suit was brought against the landlord, and the High Court did not hold that the [43] landlord was not a necessary party to the suit. The suit was dismissed as against him on the ground that it was barred by limitation. But even if we could treat the suit at this stage of the case as not being a suit against the landlord, we are not prepared to say that the broad proposition contended for is correct. It is perfectly true that it has been held that this article is limited to suits where the ouster complained of has been caused by the landlord or by somebody acting in concert with him or at his instance. We are not aware of any decision (there is none reported) which limits the article against the landlord alone, and holds that it does not apply to a suit against a person holding under the landlord. The omission to add the landlord as a party defendant would not in our opinion extend the period of limitation from two to twelve years. It is the circumstance of the ouster, and the fact that a particular person has ousted the plaintiff, which give rise to the necessity of his proving his occupancy right as against that person and therefore make it necessary for him to sue to recover possession of the land claiming it to be held by him as an occupancy-raiyat.

As far as we are aware, the effect of all the decisions and certainly of those cited to us to-day is not to restrict the article to suits against the landlord alone. The two cases referred to -Ramjanee Bibee v. Amqo Beparee (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 317) and Chunder Kishore Dey v. Rajkishore Mozumdar (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 450) were cases brought against persons who were trespassers not claiming under the landlord. Here we have a case brought against a tenant with whom the land was settled by the landlord.

In our opinion, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Held, that the son took an immediate vested interest in the estate of the testator.

Held, also, that the condition restricting his immediate enjoyment was a condition repugnant and was invalid.

Gosling v. Gosling (Joh. 265), Weatherall v. Thornburgh (L. R., 8 Ch. Div., 261) followed.

Where commission is allowed to trustees annually, such commission should be calculated on the income of the estate, and not on the corpus.

THIS was a suit for the construction of the will and for the administration of the estate of William Lloyd, who died on 15th January 1896, in the district of Darjeeling, leaving a son, the plaintiff, and a widow, who resided in England. Probate of the will was obtained by the executors, the defendants, on 10th of February 1896. By the will they were also appointed trustees for carrying out the wishes of the testator, and one of the defendants, A. B. L. Webb, was at the time of the death of the testator the manager of the banking business carried on by him during his lifetime. The plaintiff at the date of the will had attained full age, but had not adopted any profession, although before the death of his father he had succeeded in obtaining a commission in the Militia.

The questions raised on the construction of the will were as to the effect to be given to the following provisions contained in the will relating to the plaintiff:—

" I leave all my estate, whether private or appertaining to Lloyds Bank, [46] in trust for the benefit of my only child, George William Aylmer Lloyd, and hereby appoint Alexander Baness Lumley Webb and his brother Edwin John Webb trustees for carrying out my wishes.

" And my son is to be allowed only such small sum pecuniary as may force him to earn his own bread. At the end of the year 1900 the trust shall cease.

" At the end of 1900 years my son is to be allowed to enjoy the estate."

Under the will, apart from the provisions dealing with the son's interest in the estate, the widow of the testator was entitled to an annuity for her life. There were also other legacies which it is not necessary to discuss for the purposes of this case.

A further question was raised as to the intention of the testator when he directed that the remuneration of the trustees should be fixed at a commission of three per cent. The will provided that " three per cent. commission be allowed among the trustees annually." As trustees the defendants would have to conduct the business of the Bank, and if the amount fixed by the will was to be paid out of the income of the estate only, the remuneration would be wholly inadequate as a Bank manager's salary, and would amount to considerably less than what the defendant A. B. L. Webb had drawn hitherto as the manager of the Bank.

Mr. Jackson (Mr. Bonnerjee with him) for the Plaintiff.—I submit that the terms of the will are clear. From the 1st clause there can be no doubt that there was an absolute gift to the son ; subject, however, to the gift to the widow of £250 per annum for her life. No portion of the property therefore is given away, and the next condition is void. Harbin v. Masterman [L. R. Ch. Div. (1894) Vol. 2, 184], Gosling v. Gosling (Joh. 265), Gosavi Shivgar Dayagar v. Rivett-Carnac (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 463). The authorities are clear. This is an absolute gift, and the conditions restraining it are void. The moment the legacies are satisfied the plaintiff is entitled to immediate possession. As regards the trustees they are to be allowed commission at the rate of 3 per cent. The question is whether the three per cent. is to be paid out of the corpus or the income. Lewin on Trusts, p. 708. Under the Administrator-General's Act all attempts to charge commis-[46]sion have been done away with. It is submitted that the commission must come out of the income.

Mr. Bonnerjee on the same side.—There can be no doubt that the plaintiff takes a vested interest in fee in the entire portion of the estate. The clause as to the pecuniary assistance to the son is inconsistent with the gift. It would come out of his own estate. The clause that "at the end of the year 1900 my son is to enjoy the estate" is void, as being repugnant to the gift. White and Tudor's Leading Cases, p. 258, Bradley v. Peixoto (3 Ves. 324). Suppose there was an intestacy. The widow would get ⅓ and the son ⅔. But if there is a gift of the corpus, the condition repugnant must go. The defendants cannot contend that the intestacy relates to the income and not to the corpus. If they say that it relates to the corpus as well, that is clearly confuted by the 1st clause of the will. The testator did not wish to deprive his son of the property in any way, but was clearly not satisfied with him. Under the circumstances the attempt to postpone the enjoyment of the property in any way cannot be upheld. Gosling v. Gosling (Joh. 265) extends the principle of Sanders v. Vautier (Cr. & P. 240), Gopal Lall Seal v. Administrator-General of Bengal. The commission is clearly to be paid out of the rents and profits and not out of the corpus. The words "annually" shew that it must be on the income.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul).—This case is not governed by the English Law, but by the Succession Act. DeSouza v. Secretary of State (12 B. L. R., 423), Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamal Basini Dasi (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 563: L. R., 23 I. A., 18). In the latter case the Privy Council say you must construe the Code by itself. There is no gift here ab initio. The legal estate goes to the trustees. There is a limitation in trust, but no more. The testator intended the wife to have £250 per annum, and the son something to live on until the year 1900. There is nothing in the Indian law preventing a person from making a will of this sort. There is a great deal which says you can do it. Succession Act, s. 107, Illustration (j) is a similar gift. Again, if the son died before 1900, the estate would go to the [47] wife. The Court cannot set aside the intentions of the testator. In re Brooke's Will (34 L. J. Ch., 616). The testator nowhere says that he gives the estate to the son absolutely. Is there anything in the Indian law to prevent the testator from keeping his son out of his estate for six years. I submit there is nothing. As regards conditions repugnant, the Indian law is contained in sections 118, 119 and 120 of the Succession Act. There are no repugnancies such as those stated in Gosling v. Gosling (Joh., 265). That is not a case similar to this one. In Gosavi Shivgar Dayagar v. Rivett-Carnac (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 463), the Succession Act was not referred to. In this will there is nothing to show that the testator gave absolutely in the first instance. The income would accumulate. There has been no disposition of it. As regards the commission of three per cent., Mr. Webb has been the manager of the Bank for years. Are he and his brother only to get Rs. 150 per mensem between them? Legally he cannot now charge a salary as manager of the Bank, being the trustee. The words "annually" cannot mean upon the income only. If not then it must be out of the corpus. [SALE, J.—The trustees might say: "if we are only entitled to get three per cent. as commission out of the income we are entitled to be appointed managers separately.] Yes, but that was not the intention.

Mr. Bonnerjee in reply.—The property must vest beneficially in some one at the death of the testator. [SALE, J.—Could not the testator give the property to the son after six years?] No, then there would be an intestacy: against that the Court would struggle. Section 70 of the Succession Act. You cannot tie up the property with no one to enjoy it.

Sale, J.—This is a suit for the construction of the will and for the administration of the estate of William Lloyd, who died in the Darjeeling district on the 15th of January 1896, leaving the plaintiff, his son, an only child, and a widow who resides in England. The will is dated the 16th of September 1890, and the defendants, who are appointed the trustees for carrying out the wishes of the testator expressed in the will, obtained probate as executors according to the tenor, on the 10th of February 1896. It appears that the testator had for many years carried [48] on, and was carrying on at the date of his death, a banking business in Darjeeling, of which the defendant Alexander Baness Lumley Webb was the manager, and that the business is still being carried on by the defendants as the trustees appointed by the will. It also appears that at the date of the will the plaintiff had attained full age but had not adopted a profession, though it is said that before the death of his father he succeeded in obtaining a commission in the Militia.

The main question raised on the construction of the will of the testator is as to the effect to be given to the provisions contained in the will relating to the plaintiff.

Subject to the payment of an annuity to the widow, about which no question arises, the will, which is an inartificial and ill-expressed document, contains the following directions:

"I leave all my estate, whether private or appertaining to Lloyds Bank, in trust for the benefit of my only child, George William Aylmer Lloyd, and hereby appoint Alexander Baness Lumley Webb and his brother Edwin John Webb trustees for carrying out my wishes."

A subsequent clause provides as follows —

"And my son is to be allowed only such small sum pecuniary as may force him to earn his own bread. At the end of the year 1900 the trust shall cease."

Then follows the provision:

"At the end of 1900 years my son is to be allowed to enjoy the estate."

The first question is, what is the nature of the gift to the son, is it an absolute gift of the whole estate with immediate vesting, or is it a postponed gift contingent upon the son surviving to the end of the year 1900, when the trust is to cease.

It is to be observed that there is no gift over in the will nor is there any separate or express devise of the surplus income of the estate for the period intervening between the death of the testator and the cessation of the trust after providing for the widow's annuity, the son's subsistence allowance, and the trustees' remuneration.

It is said that though the testator leaves his estate in trust for the benefit of his son, the benefit which it was intended that the son should take is explained by the subsequent provisions of the will and is limited and controlled thereby. But the object of the trust, so far as it is defined by the subsequent directions of [49] the will, is not to create a benefit in favour of the son, but to cut that benefit down and to restrict it to a subsistence allowance until the year 1900, when the trust is to determine. It seems to me, therefore, the benefit given by the earlier clause of the will cannot be confined to the benefit to be enjoyed by the son under the terms and during the pendency of the trust.

The gift is in express terms of the whole of the estate to trustees for the benefit of the son. The testator, however, desires that his estate is not to come into the possession or enjoyment of the son for a given period so as to afford the son an opportunity of learning to earn his own livelihood. Similar provisions with a similar object have been held to constitute an immediate and absolute gift.

In Hanson v. Graham (6 Ves. 239) the subject of immediate gifts with postponed enjoyment and gifts postponed to or contingent on the donee attaining a certain age was much discussed, and at p. 248 of the report Sir W. GRANT, M. R., observes as follows as regards the decision in the case of Love v. L'Estrange (3 Bro., 337). "It was not a simple unqualified gift, but there were many circumstances to shew that Walter Nash was meant to have the benefit absolutely, and that the enjoyment was only postponed; the testator giving it to trustees in the meantime; and applying a reason for withholding the enjoyment from this minor; that he wished him to follow his trade as a journeyman; with which object he naturally thought that fortune would interfere, and therefore he postpones the enjoyment of it until the age of twenty-four. But he gives it to trustees entirely and absolutely for the benefit of Walter Nash; to improve it for his benefit, to transfer the whole to him when he arrives at that age, and to make him a certain allowance in the meantime. That is very different from a simple bequest to him, when twenty-four, for if that had been a legacy it would have been separated from the residue immediately upon the testator's death, and must have been paid over to the trustees immediately, and they would have managed it until the legatee had attained the age of twenty-four."

In Saunders v. Vautier (Cr. & P., 240) where a testator bequeathed certain [50] stock to trustees upon trust to accumulate the dividends until the intended donee should attain 25 and then to transfer the principal together with the accumulation to the donee absolutely, it was held that the donee, though a minor at the testator's death, took an immediate vested interest in the legacy, and at p. 248 of the report Lord COTTENHAM referring to the cases of Love v. L'Estrange (3 Bro., 337) and Hanson v. Graham (6 Ves. 239) makes the following observations:—

"That case has many points of resemblance to the present, and although Lord ROSSLYN seems in Monkhouse v. Holme (1 Bro., C. C., 298) to question the principle of the decision, Sir W. GRANT in Hanson v. Graham justifies it upon grounds most of which apply to this case, particularly that the fund was given to trustees till the legatee should attain a certain age, and that it should then be transferred to him; from which and other circumstances he thought it was to be inferred that the fund was intended wholly for the benefit of the legatee, although the testator intended that the enjoyment of it should be postponed till his age of twenty-four. Such, I think, was clearly the intention of the gift in this case."

It appears to me that these observations of Sir W. GRANT and Lord COTTENHAM are applicable to the circumstances of the gift in question in this suit, and that in accordance therewith I must hold that the plaintiff under the will of the testator took an immediate vested interest in the estate of the testator.

The next question is whether the gift is an absolute gift of the entire estate, or whether the gift is qualified or restricted in any way by the subsequent directions to the trustees, and in particular by the direction that the son is not to be allowed to enjoy the estate till the end of the year 1900.

The plaintiff contends that there is an absolute gift of the estate to him, and that the subsequent restrictions are repugnant to the previous absolute gift and should be disregarded.

The rule under which the Courts will set aside or disregard conditions or restrictions as repugnant to a previous gift is well [51] recognized in England, and it is thus stated by LINDLEY, L.J., in the case of Harbin v. Masterman [L. R., Ch. Div. (1894), Vol. 2, 184 (196)]. "Now notwithstanding the general principle that a donee or legatee can only take what is given him on the terms on which it is given, yet by our law there is a remarkable exception to this general principle. Conditions which are repugnant to the estate to which they are annexed are absolutely void, and may consequently be disregarded. This doctrine, I apprehend, underlies the rule laid down in Saunders v. Vautier (Cr. & P., 240) and enunciated with great clearness by Vice-Chancellor WOOD in Gosling v. Gosling, Joh., 265 (272). Vice-Chancellor WOOD says this: 'The principle of this Court has always been to recognise the right of all persons who attain the age of 21 to enter upon the absolute use and enjoyment of the property given to them by a will, notwithstanding any directions by the testator to the effect that they are not to enjoy it until a later age:—unless during the interval the property is given for the benefit of another. If the property is once theirs, it is useless for the testator to attempt to impose any fetter upon their enjoyment of it in full so soon as they attain twenty-one. And upon that principle, unless there is in the will, or in some codicil to it, a clear indication of an intention on the part of the testator, not only that his devisees are not to have the enjoyment of the property he has devised to them until they attain twenty-five, but that some other person is to have that enjoyment,—or unless the property is so clearly taken away from the devisees up to the time of their attaining twenty-five as to induce the Court to hold, that, as to the previous rents and profits there has been an intestacy—the Court does not hesitate to strike out of the will any direction that the devisees shall not enjoy it in full until they attain the age of twenty-five years.' "

And in Weatherall v. Thornburgh [L. R., 8 Ch. Div., 261 (269)], Lord Justice JAMES refers to the same rule in these words:

"The Court acted on the established principle that where there is an absolute gift to an adult male any direction to restrain his enjoyment of it is absolutely idle, unless there is a defeasance. In such a case a direction to accumulate the income is only a mode of [52] preventing the person entitled from enjoying the property, which can have no effect."

Now can it be said in this case that as to the intermediate interest or as to the surplus income of the estate prior to the end of the year 1900, there is either an intestacy or a defeasance. In my opinion it cannot. The testator intended, I think, to make a present gift of the entire estate to his son, and he intended that his son should have the ultimate enjoyment of the whole estate in the hands of the trustees after payment of the legacies. It was only the present enjoyment of the estate of which the testator desired to deprive the plaintiff, and this attempted restriction is in my opinion invalid and must be disregarded.

It is true that the rule as to repugnant conditions has not been introduced into this country by the Succession Act, or by other statutory enactment, but on the other hand it has been applied by PHEAR, J., in the case of Mokoondo Lall Shaw v. Gonesh Chunder Shaw (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 104), and also by the Bombay Court in the case of Gosavi Shivgar Dayager v. Rivett-Carnac (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 463) and by the Privy Council in the case of Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 438): see page 444 of the report.

A question has also been raised as to the trustees' remuneration. The will provides that "three per cent. commission be allowed among the trustees annually." Is the commission to be calculated on the corpus or income of the estate?

The testator contemplated the trust continuing till the year 1900, and even longer should the son die before that time and the wife survive. The remuneration given to the trustees is for the management of the general estate, and the direction that the commission is to be allowed annually appears to indicate that it was to be calculated on the income of the estate. It is said, however, that if calculated in this way, the remuneration would be wholly inadequate as a Bank manager's salary—and that the testator could not have intended to reduce so largely the salary of the defendant Alexander Baness Lumley Webb, who has for many years acted as the manager of the Bank.

[53] But in my opinion the remuneration provided by the will for the trustees, was intended to be wholly apart from the salary which the defendant Alexander Baness Lumley Webb would be entitled to so long as he continued to be the manager of the Bank. The remuneration provided by the will is intended for the discharge by the trustees of the duty of general management of the estate and not for performing the special duties of a manager of the Bank. The remuneration for the latter duties must be specially provided for in due course of the administration of the estate.

There must be a decree for administration of the estate with a declaration of the right of the plaintiff to immediate possession of the estate, subject to the payment of the debts and legacies, or provision being made therefor, in due course of administration.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 24th August, 1896.

Mukti Bewa............Complainant

Jhotu Santra............Accused.*

Compensation—Compensation to accused in Criminal Case—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 560—Separate charges—Complete discharge or acquittal.

The accused was charged under section 352 and section 379 of the Penal Code but convicted under section 352, being discharged under section 379. The Magistrate ordered the complainant to pay compensation for bringing a frivolous and vexatious charge under section 560 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The order for paying compensation was set aside on the ground that section 560 could only operate when there was a complete discharge or acquittal.

* Criminal Reference No. 202 of 1896, made by W. R. Bright, Esq., District Magistrate of Midnapur, dated the 28th of July 1896.

THIS was a reference to the High Court by the District Judge of Midnapur. The facts of the case and the grounds of reference appear from the following letter of reference :—

[54] "In this case Mukti Bewa complained against Jhotu Santra and others charging them with beating her and taking away her husuli. The case was referred to the police for enquiry, as I thought the charge of theft might be an exaggeration. The police sent the case up for trial under sections 379 and 147.

"The accused was convicted under section 352 and fined Rs. 2, but he was discharged, under section 253, of the accusation under section 379 and the complainant was fined Rs. 25 for bringing a false and vexatious charge. As the order appears to me to be of very doubtful legality, I think it necessary to refer the case to the Hon'ble Court. Section 560 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which takes the place of section 250 of the former Code, is intended as a means for summarily punishing persons who have brought false complaints without the necessity of recourse being had to section 211. By parity of reasoning it would seem that if a prosecution could not be instituted for bringing a false complaint under section 211, no order for compensation could be given under section 560.

"In cases similar to the one now under reference, a prosecution under section 211 would not be undertaken, as the case, at any rate, was partly true. Section 560 lays down that, if the Magistrate is satisfied that the accusation was frivolous and vexatious, he can grant compensation. Now, in this case the accusation was at any rate partly true. The complainant was at any rate beaten ; it cannot be said that the complaint was frivolous or vexatious unless the offences with which the accused was charged can be treated as different accusations and judged separately. In that case I should think that the Legislature would have certainly provided some clause like this : Where the accused is charged with one or more separate offences and the Court considers that any one of these is frivolous and vexatious he can grant compensation. It appears to me that the present procedure is a dangerous one. In the present case the complainant had suffered a wrong, at the utmost she had exaggerated the wrong really suffered, and the result is that she has had to pay Rs. 25 and has suffered her wrong too. Although such an order as the one under reference may have the effect of checking the common habit of embellishing assaults with charges of theft, at the same time it will undoubtedly act as a deterrent to the filing of complaints at all. A further point is this: section 560 was enacted in order to cover warrant cases and cases of accusations instituted otherwise than upon complaint, but so far as I know no other change was intended. Under section 250 the compensation now given could, I think, certainly not have been given, as the complaint was certainly not frivolous or vexatious, for at bottom, it was true.

"I would urge that as far as cases instituted upon complaint are concerned, section 560 has made no change except that in warrant as well as summons cases compensation can be given. The Deputy Magistrate has furnished an explanation. He has quoted three cases from the notes to his Criminal Procedure Code. The third case, Lala Baneshwar Sahai, Calcutta High Court, August 20, 1877, is unreported.

[55] "The first case, Modhoosoodan Ghose v. Jayram Hazrah (13 W. R., Cr., 39), would distinctly favour the Deputy Magistrate's contention, as it would appear to follow that the separate charges could be treated separately.

"The second case, Gunamanee v. Haree Datta (18 W. R., Cr., 6), seems to be in opposition to the previous ruling. But it is a case which is entirely on all fours with the present case. As regards the facts, though owing to the change in the law, compensation could, of course, now be given for a charge of theft, and the words in which the District Magistrate summed up the case then are equally applicable to the present case.

"The accusation of assault was not frivolous. The general accusation was not frivolous or vexatious though the specific charge of theft may have been false."

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows:—

We agree with the view expressed by the District Magistrate, and consider that in a case like this section 560 can only operate when there is a complete discharge or acquittal. The order directing the complainant to pay compensation must, therefore, be set aside, and the amount, if realised, refunded.

FULL BENCH.

The 4th September, 1896.

PRESENT:

SIR W. COMER PETHERAM, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Protap Narain Singh and others............First party, Petitioners

Rajendra Narain Singh and another............Second party, Objectors.

Possession, Order of Criminal Court as to—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 145—Initial proceedings—Parties concerned—Adding parties during the course of the proceedings.

Before initiating proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is the duty of the Magistrate not only to be satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, but also to ascertain, as far as possible, who are concerned in the dispute. The Magistrate has no power to add parties during the course of the proceedings unless in the initial proceeding he is satisfied that they are concerned in the dispute. If in the course of the proceedings it appears to the Magistrate that it is absolutely necessary that [56] other parties should be required to attend, the only course open to him is to initiate a new proceeding.

Ram Chunder Das v. Monohur Roy (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 29) discussed.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by O'KINEALY, BANERJEE and HILL, JJ. It was a reference by the Sessions Judge of Bhagulpur submitting the case to the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code for orders.

The letter of reference of the Sessions Judge was as follows:—

"The present petitioners appear to have been parties with others to two proceedings taken under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, before the Deputy Magistrate of Supoul at about the same time The proceedings in respect of which this application is made related to land in Daharia, and the other case related to lands in Kusaha. The same persons were the parties in both cases. In this case the petitioners were made the first party and Rajendro Narain and others were made second party, and in the Kusaha case vice versa.

"Both cases were fixed for hearing about the same time, this case being fixed for the 24th January last, and the other case for the 27th January 1896.

"When this case was called on for hearing the petitioners had not their witnesses ready, but had their witnesses present in the case of Kusaha. They applied for an adjournment, alleging that they were under the influence of a bonâ fide mistake that the Kusaha case would be taken up that day, and the Daharia case on the 27th January. The Deputy Magistrate refused the application. Another petition was put in asking for a day's adjournment, which was also refused. The Deputy Magistrate disposed of the case after taking the evidence of the second party, Rajendro Narain, only. He examined the petitioner, Lachmi Narain, who said he had been misinformed by a servant as to the date, and he also examined the petitioner's mukhtear, who said he had known that the 24th January was the date fixed for the Daharia case, but his clients had not been to him to ask him.

"In support of this application it is urged that this case should be sent back to the Deputy Magistrate for further inquiry :—

(a) Because petitioners were under the influence of a bonâ fide mistake as to the date, and the Deputy Magistrate ought not to have refused their application for an adjournment;

(b) Because, when from the evidence of the other party it appeared that Jugdeo Jha was interested in the land as a proprietor, the Deputy Magistrate ought, following the ruling in Ram Chunder Das v. Monohur Roy (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 29), to have granted the application of the petitioners and to have issued a notice to Jugdeo Jha, so that the case might have been heard in his presence, or he might have had an opportunity, as a party to the proceeding, of putting in any objection ; and [57] (c) Because the order contains no specification of the lands in dispute, and while the proceeding drawn up by the Deputy Magistrate specified 3 bighas in 2 plots as the lands in dispute, the witnesses for the other party gave evidence with regard to 16 or 17 bighas.

"In opposition it is urged that the objection to the trial on the 24th January was not bona fide, and that the petitioners' only object was to get the other case tried first, so that the other party might first give their evidence. But this argument cannot apply to the application for one day's adjournment.

"It is also urged that the land referred to in the proceedings of the Deputy Magistrate is included in the 16 or 17 bighas deposed to by the witnesses. This may be so, but there is no proof that it is the case.

"It is not improbable that the Deputy Magistrate is right in holding that the petitioners wished to harass the other party by frequent postponements, but I do not think that this was sufficient reason for his refusal to grant the one day's adjournment prayed for, and I am far from being satisfied that the petitioners were not under a bona fide mistake as to the dates fixed for the two cases. The description of the present case in the order sheet seems to have been confused in the course of the proceedings. In my opinion the Deputy Magistrate ought to have granted the adjournment prayed for, so as to have enabled the petitioners to produce their evidence.

"The objection based on the ruling in Ram Chunder Das v. Monohur Roy (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 29) is also valid. When it came to the knowledge of the Deputy Magistrate that Jugdeo Jha was interested in the lands in dispute he ought to have made him a party to the proceedings and issued a notice to him.

"And lastly the objection as to the discrepancy between the amount of the lands said to be in dispute in the proceedings and deposed to as being in dispute by the witnesses appears to be a good one, and the absence of any specification of lands in the order leaves it in doubt whether the order refers to 3 bighas of land or 16 or 17 bighas.

"For the above reasons I do not think that the order of the Deputy Magistrate can be upheld, and I consider that a further inquiry into the case is necessary. The order of the Deputy Magistrate should, in my opinion, be set aside, and the case should be remanded to the Deputy Magistrate to make a further enquiry into the matter, and to proceed to dispose of the case according to law. Jugdeo Jha should be made a party to the proceedings and notice issued to him; and opportunity should be given to both the present parties to the proceedings to produce evidence to support their allegations that they are in possession of the 3 bighas of land, which from the proceeding of the Deputy Magistrate appear to be in dispute."

The material portion of the explanation of the Deputy Magistrate was as follows:

[58] "Regarding the ruling in Ram Chunder Das v. Monohur Roy (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 29), I beg respectfully to state that the said judgment lays down 'that it is the duty of the Magistrate on the materials before him to ascertain, so far as he can, who are the persons interested in, or claiming a right to, the property in dispute, and to give notice to them all, so that the whole matter, so far as his Court is concerned, may be disposed of in one proceeding.' When the proceedings were instituted by me, and even when written statements were filed by both parties, there was no mention either in the police report or in the pleadings of either party that Jugdeo was interested in the land. It was only when the case was taken up for final disposal that the fact came to my notice. I beg respectfully to submit that the ruling requires me to make parties only those persons who appear to be interested in the land in dispute from the materials before me before the case is actually taken up for final disposal. The case remained pending in my file for full three months, but never before the last day of hearing was it brought to my notice that Jugdeo was a party interested."

"Regarding the specification of the lands in dispute, I beg to state that as the descriptions of the land furnished by the parties and the Police were not satisfactory, I myself and both the parties went to the land in dispute together and fixed locally the boundaries of the land in dispute. Hence there could be no doubt about the identification of the land actually in dispute."

The ORDER of O'KINEALY, BANERJEE and HILL, JJ., referring the case to a Full Bench was as follows:—

This is a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Bhaugulpur under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The original case was one under section 145 of the Code, and was disposed of by the Deputy Magistrate of Supoul. The Judge in his reference recommends us to set aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate and remand the case to him to make a further enquiry into the matter and decide the case according to law. He further recommends that we should in conformity with the decision arrived at in the case of Ram Chunder Das v. Monohur Roy (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 29) direct the Deputy Magistrate to make one Jugdeo Jha a party to the proceedings and have the question of actual possession decided in his presence.

Admittedly there is evidence that Jugdeo Jha is interested in the land which is the subject of dispute, but not otherwise concerned with the dispute.

[59] The reference turns upon what is the meaning of the words "the parties concerned in such dispute" in the first part of section 145. Section 145 differs from the corresponding section of the previous Code of Criminal Procedure in so far as the words "the parties," which occur in section 145, were "all the parties" in the corresponding section of the previous Code. In the case of Gobind Chunder Ghose v. Anundo Chunder Sircar (18 W. R., Cr., 54), it was held that the only parties entitled to notice were those concerned in the dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. In the case of In the matter of the petition of Kunund Narain Bhoop (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 650) the same view was adopted, and it was further decided that there was no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure allowing an intervenor to come in in the middle of the proceedings. In the case of Obhoy Chandra Mookerjee v. Mohamed Sabir (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 78) the same course of decisions was followed, and the Criminal Courts were directed not to lend themselves to the decision of matters of simple possession which were properly cognizable by Civil Courts, and also to take care that before they assumed jurisdiction to decide any question under section 145, the foundation of their jurisdiction, that is to say, a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, did exist. A different view of this section has been taken by another Divisional Bench of this Court in the case of Ram Chunder Das v. Monohur Roy (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 29), to which the Sessions Judge has drawn our attention in his letter of reference. In that case it was held that the words "the parties concerned in such dispute" are not limited to persons who are disputing, but include persons who are interested in, or claiming a right to, the property in dispute. It further laid down the ruling that it is the duty of a Magistrate to ascertain, as far as he can, on the materials before him, who are the persons interested in, or claiming a right to, the property in dispute, and to give notice to them all, so that the whole matter may be disposed of in one proceeding.

Two of the Judges constituting this Divisional Bench do not acquiesce in this extended meaning of the words "the parties concerned in such dispute." They think that the view taken by the Judges in the cases previous to the one last referred to is correct. One of the Judges of this Bench considers that the meaning [60] attached to those words in the case last referred to, that is, the case of Ram Chunder Das v. Monohur Roy (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 29) is correct. This Divisional Bench therefore refers the case to a Full Bench for such orders as to the said Full Bench may seem fit.

Babu Umakali Mukerji and Babu Harendra Narayan Mitter for the Second Party.

Babu Saligram Singh for the First Party.

Babu Umakali Mukerji.—Section 145 occurs in Part IV of the Criminal Procedure Code which deals with "Prevention of Offences." Therefore only persons actually disputing or offending against the public peace are meant to be included by the words "parties concerned" in section 145. The Magistrate has no power to introduce as party any person not mentioned in the preliminary proceedings: Bechu Sheikh v. Deb Kumari Dasi (I.L.R, 21 Cal., 404); nor can he allow intervenors to come in; In the matter of the petition of Kunund Narain Bhoop (I.L.R., 4 Cal., 650). In order to be made a party a person should have an interest in the subject-matter and be also actually disputing: Gobind Chunder Ghose v. Anundo Chunder Sircar (18 W. R., Cr., 54). The case of Ram Chunder Das v. Monohur Roy (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 29) does not lay down anything different. The words "forbidding all disturbance, &c.," have been construed to affect only the persons actually on the record; In the matter of Gopal Burnawar (3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 13), followed in Queen-Empress v. Kuppayar (I.L.R, 18 Mad., 51).

Babu Saligram Singh, contra.—The words "parties concerned" should be construed to mean those actually engaged in the dispute, as well as those interested in the result of the dispute. The final order of the Magistrate should not be restricted so as to affect only those persons who are mentioned in the initiatory proceedings: Bechu Sheikh v. Deb Kumari Dasi (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 404). The judgment of RAMPINI, J., in that case points out that the words "none of the parties" in section 146 were substituted for "neither of the parties" in order to obviate the objection of AINSLIE, J., In the matter of the petition of Kunund Narain Bhoop (I.L.R., 4 Cal., 650). See also Queen-Empress v. Gobind Chandra Das (I.L.R., 20 Cal., 520).

[61] The judgment of the Full Bench (Petheram, C. J., O'Kinealy, J., Macpherson, J., Trevelyan, J., and Banerjee, J.) was as follows :—

The main question in the reference by the Sessions Judge, and the only one which has occasioned the reference to a Full Bench, is whether the Deputy Magistrate ought to have issued a notice to Jugdeo Jha on the ground that he was interested in the land in dispute as a proprietor? We are clearly of opinion, not only that the Deputy Magistrate ought not to have issued such notice, but also that he had no power to issue such notice in the proceeding which was before him. Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code only empowers a Magistrate to decide whether any, and which, of the parties, upon whom a summons is served under the first paragraph of that section, is in possession of the subject of dispute.

The first paragraph of section 145 empowers the Magistrate to summon parties if he is satisfied that there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, and that they are concerned in such dispute. A number of consistent decisions of this Court have held that the Magistrate's jurisdiction to determine questions of possession is dependent upon his being satisfied that there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. It would follow from these authorities that the jurisdiction to require particular individuals to attend the proceedings would equally depend upon the Magistrate being satisfied that they were concerned in the dispute. The Magistrate's duty before he initiates proceedings is not only to be satisfied that a dispute exists but to ascertain as far as possible who are "concerned in the dispute" (an expression the meaning of which it is not necessary for us in the view which we take of the facts to determine in this case) so that they may be required to attend and the question of possession may be as far as possible settled.

There is no power during the course of the proceeding to add parties unless in the initial proceeding the Magistrate is satisfied that they are concerned in the dispute any more than there is a power to substitute parties.

If in the course of the proceeding it appears to the Magistrate that it is absolutely necessary that other parties should be required [62] to attend, and he is satisfied that they are concerned in the dispute, the only course open to him is, if he be empowered in that behalf, and he is satisfied that danger of breach of peace still exists, to initiate a new proceeding.

The actual decision in the case of Ram Chunder Das v. Monohur Roy (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 29) is not inconsistent with this view; but if the learned Judges in that case intended to hold that a Magistrate could, in the course of the hearing without a fresh initial proceeding, issue notices to parties concerned, we think the Judges were wrong in entertaining such an opinion.

In the present case Jugdeo Jha was a minor. Although it is said that he was interested in the land as proprietor, it does not appear to what extent, if any, he was concerned in or with the dispute and there was nothing before the Magistrate when he initiated the proceeding to indicate that Jugdeo Jha was concerned in the dispute in any sense of the words.

Two other small questions arise in this matter. First, whether the Magistrate ought to have postponed the case. Second, whether his order is indefinite. As to the first question the Sessions Judge considers that it is not improbable that the Deputy Magistrate is right in holding that the petitioners wished to harass the other party by frequent postponements. This is sufficient reason to justify us in refusing to interfere on this ground.

The remaining ground is disposed of by the third paragraph of the Deputy Magistrate's explanation.

In the result we decline to interfere.

NOTES.

[In (1902) 30 Cal., 155 a Full Bench of five Judges regarded this decision obsolete in view of the sub-section 3 of sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. "The Judgment of the Full Bench in Protap Narain v. Rajendra Narain Singh, 24 Cal., 55, is obsolete in consequence of the modification of the law by the enactment of sub-section (3) for the obvious object of directing a public notification to be made on the locality of the order in writing. Taking proceedings under s. 145 can have been only with the intention of enabling others than those personally served with such order to come in, if they are affected by the proceedings taken. As one of the referring Judges, I would here explain that the third point put to the Full Bench proceeded only on that Judgment being in force"—per PRINSEP, C.J. BANERJEE and HILL JJ., also made similar observations.

The third point was about the continuity of the proceedings, and it was held that the proceedings were continuous.

The 'parties concerned' are not merely the parties disputing; 4 C.W.N., 753; 24 Bom., 527; see also (1900) 5 C.W.N., 900; (1901) 6 C.W.N., 101; 27 Cal., 892; 25 Cal., 423. The leading case now is (1902) 30 Cal., 155.]

PRESENT:

SIR W. COMER PETHERAM, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Ishan Chunder Sirkar and another...........Objectors

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 244—Representative of judgment-debtor—Purchaser at execution sale—Purchaser's right to be heard in support of his objections to the sale.

[63] The term 'representative,' as used in section 244 † of the Code of Civil Procedure, when taken with reference to the judgment-debtor, does not mean only his legal representative, that is, his heir, executor or administrator, but it means his representative in interest, and includes a purchaser of his interest, who, so far as such interest is concerned, is bound by the decree.

There is no reason for excluding from its signification an execution purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest.

* Full Bench Reference in Appeal from Appellate Order No. 34 of 1895.

Questions to be decided by Court executing decree. † [Sec. 244 :—The following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree and not by separate suit (namely)—

(a) questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits as to which the decree has directed inquiry;

(b) questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits or interest which the decree has made payable in respect of the subject-matter of a suit, between the date of its institution and the execution of the decree, or the expiration of three years from the date of the decree;

(c) any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to bar a separate suit for mesne profits accruing between the institution of the first suit and the execution of the decree therein, where such profits are not dealt with by such decree.]

Held, therefore, by the Full Bench, that the cases of Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355), and Narain Acharjee v. Gregory (8 W. R., 304), so far as they decide that a purchaser at an auction sale of the equity of redemption in mortgaged properties cannot come in in execution proceedings under a decree upon the mortgage as a representative of the judgment-debtor under section 244 of the Code, are not rightly decided.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by PIGOT and STEVENS, JJ., on the 10th September 1895, with the following opinion:—

The appellant on the 4th November 1889 purchased one of the mortgaged properties at a sale in execution of a money-decree against the judgment-debtor. In July or August 1890 the decree-holder applied for execution of the mortgage decree by sale in the first instance of the property purchased by the appellant. On the appellant's objection, the Court then ordered that all the mortgaged properties should be sold together; after this the execution case was struck off. In July 1894 a fresh application for execution was made by the decree-holder; a sale proclamation was issued for sale in three lots, the property purchased by the appellant being mentioned as the first to be sold. The appellant objected, and this application was rejected on the ground that he has no locus standi, as he is not a "representative" within the meaning of section 244.

In Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355) it has been held with reference to proceedings in execution of a mortgage decree, that a purchaser of the mortgagor's rights in the mortgaged property at a sale in execution of a money-decree is not a representative within the meaning of section 244; and in the present case the lower Courts have relied on the case of Narain Acharjee v. Gregory (8 W. R., 304) in support of the order made.

Were the question res integra we should hold that the appellant was entitled to come in under section 244. It is certain that he [64] has an interest in the property, the subject-matter of the proceedings; that that interest is derived from the judgment-debtor, albeit through sale in invitum; and that that interest will be bound by the proceedings, possibly at any rate to his prejudice. If so, it would be difficult to refuse him the right to bring a suit, however unprofitable it might be for him to do so having regard to the time that must elapse before he could get a hearing.

On the other hand, the object of section 244 is to prevent multiplicity of suits, and with that object it has been declared by the Judicial Committee that the section should receive a liberal interpretation as to the scope of its provisions.

We, therefore, refer to a Full Bench the question whether the cases of Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355), and Narain Acharjee v. Gregory (8 W. R., 304), so far as they decide that a purchaser at an execution sale of the equity of redemption in mortgaged properties, cannot come in in execution proceedings under a decree upon the mortgage as a representative of the judgment-debtor under section 244, are rightly decided.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Degumber Chatterji for the Appellant.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerji for the decree-holder, Respondent.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose.—The case of Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355) draws a distinction between a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree and a purchaser who buys the property under a conveyance by the judgment-debtor. [PETHERAM, C.J.—The appellant bought one of these properties, and now that all the properties are going to be sold in satisfaction of the mortgage decree, the property he bought is put up for sale first. Is that his objection?]. That is one objection. And he also wants to be put on the record. [PETHERAM, C.J.—You want to try under section 244 some questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives. Does the mere fact that you show that you are a purchaser of some portion of the property entitle you to be put on the record? Would it not be necessary to make an application [65]—not under section 244—to have the objector added as a party under the substitution section?] He wants to come on the record under section 372. [O'KINEALY, J.—It has been held that that section does not apply to execution proceedings.] That is only in the case of an execution of a decree for money. But where there is a mortgage decree the suit continues so long as the property is not sold and the money is not realised by the mortgagee. [PETHERAM, C.J.—The question comes to this—whether a purchaser of mortgaged property has a locus standi to be heard in the execution proceedings merely because he is a purchaser.] Or whether he ought to be placed on the record for that purpose. [PETHERAM, C.J.—We are not asked that.] PIGOT and STEVENS, JJ., practically decided that when they held that the objector had a right to appeal. [O'KINEALY, J.—They did not decide that; they referred it. BANERJEE, J.—If they have decided that question, what are we called upon to decide?] My contention is that the Court must now take it, having regard to the course the proceedings have taken, that the objector made an application to be added as a party. [O'KINEALY, J.—We have it on the record that he made none. Suppose section 372 applies, there can be only one appeal and that under section 588] That is so. But PIGOT and STEVENS, JJ., treated it as a second appeal. [TREVELYAN, J.—So far as I know, section 372 has been invariably held, on the Original Side of this Court, not to apply to anything after decree.] But for some purposes a suit may still under section 372 be treated as a pending suit even after a decree has been made—Gocool Chunder Gossamee v. Administrator-General (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 726 : 5 C. L. R., 569), and the order of PIGOT and STEVENS, JJ., affirming the right of the objector to a second appeal is an order which is still in existence. [O'KINEALY, J.—No, it is not. When a case is referred to a Full Bench the whole case must be decided, and nothing can be kept back. PETHERAM, C.J.—Section 244 provides that the questions between the parties or their representatives shall be decided in the execution procedings. As I understand, it has been held that section 372 does not apply after decree. It may possibly be open to you to contend that if section 372 does not apply, the representatives must [66] have a locus standi under section 244, although they have not been brought on the record. And that is what the learned Judges may have meant.] Possibly. But the only question now for the Court is whether the case of Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355) has been rightly decided. [PETHERAM, C.J.—This case raises a question mentioned in section 244, and therefore comes within the definition of a decree in section 2 of the Code.] Yes. This is not an order by which anything is decided beyond the mere question of procedure. [PETHERAM, C.J.—What do you ask this Court to do?] I ask the Court to decide that the appellant has a locus standi to be heard, and to give him the opportunity of being heard which has been denied him. It cannot be contended that he would not be bound by proceedings taken by the decree-holder for the purpose of enforcing the mortgage.

It is quite clear that a purchaser under a compulsory sale is bound by the principle of lis pendens in precisely the same manner as a purchaser under a voluntary conveyance,—Radha Madhub Haldar v. Monohur Mukerji (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 756: L.R., 15 I.A, 97); Raj Kissen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhub Haldar (21 W.R., 349); Lala Kali Prosad v. Buli Singh (I.L.R., 4 Cal., 789); Jharoo v. Raj Chunder Dass (I L R., 12 Cal., 299); Gobind Chunder Roy v. Guru Churn Kurmokar (I.L.R., 15 Cal., 94); Ram Chundra Kolatkar v. Mahadiji Kolatkar [I.L.R., 9 Bom., 141 (145)]; Kishan Lal v. Ganga Ram [I.L.R., 13 All., 28 (51)]. [TREVELYAN, J.—Your argument comes to this, that every purchaser of an interest before decree is entitled to come in after decree and ask to be made a party before the sale comes on.] Yes, it must go to that. [PETHERAM, C.J.—I should have thought that the question was, what was the mischief which section 244 was intended to prevent? I should have thought that that mischief was multiplicity of litigation. Why should not a man who owns part of the property affected be a representative quoad that part of the property?] The case of Narain Acharjee v. Gregory (8 W.R., 304) is clearly distinguishable. There the Court was not dealing with [67] a mortgage decree at all; it was only a decree for a sum of money. There was, therefore, no question of lis pendens. A person in the position of the appellant must be entitled either to come in and be made a party or to bring a separate suit; and of these two courses the more convenient and proper is to be made a party, because that would prevent multiplicity of suits. [O'KINEALY, J.--Apparently under section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, a fractional owner has the right to redeem.] Yes. The question referred to the Court, is, in effect, whether the rule which confessedly holds good in the case of a voluntary purchaser applies also to an auction-purchaser. I contend that the purchaser of an equity of redemption is the representative of the mortgagor. There is no authority to the contrary; and there is no reason for making any distinction in this respect between the two classes of purchasers. In the case of Enayet Hossain v. Girdharee Lall [12 Moo. I. A., 366 (378): 2 B.L.R., P.C., 75 (78)] it is expressly laid down that "In the opinion of their Lordships, there is no foundation in principle or authority for any such distinction," i.e., any distinction to be made in favour of a person claiming under an execution sale as contradistinguished from the representatives of any person claiming under an ordinary assignment or conveyance. True, their Lordships were there dealing with a question of limitation; but the principle is equally applicable here. And this proposition is not affected by the decision in the case of Dinendro Nath Sannial v. Ram Kumar Ghose (I.L R., 7 Cal., 107: L.R., 8 I.A., 65). A purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree has been held to be a "representative in interest" of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 21 of the Evidence Act, -Unnopoorna Dassee v. Nufur Poddar (21 W. R., 148).

On the question of adding parties, it is clear that persons whose interests are affected may be made parties under section 372, Ahmedbhoy Hubibhoy v. Vullabhoy Cassumbhoy (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 323), Rabbaba Khanum v. Noorjehan Begum (I.L. R., 13 Cal., 90). On the 15th September 1890 the appellant objected that his share of the property should not be sold first. His objection was allowed, and an order was made that the whole of the property should be sold together. So that [68] he was recognised as having a right to appear and be heard; and both sides were heard. And that order was not appealed from.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerji for the respondent, the assignee of the mortgage decree.—The objector is not a representative within section 244 of the Code. Clause (c) of the section mentions, as questions that may be determined under that section, "questions between the parties to the suit or" (not and) "their representatives." That contemplates the death of the judgment-debtor, and shows that the legislature meant "personal representatives," some one who fully represents the estate and would be bound by any orders made. The last clause of the section also has the same meaning and intent. It does not include a purchaser, whether he purchased privately or in execution of a decree. In other words, the Legislature points to those against whom the decree is to be executed; and those persons are mentioned in sections 231, 232 and 234 of the Code. They are the persons contemplated in the case of Narain Acharjee v. Gregory (8 W. R., 304) which is not really distinguishable.

As to adding parties after decree, that cannot be done. A fresh suit must be brought, Goodall v. Mussoorie Bank [I L R., 10 All., 97 (105)], [PETHERAM, C.J.—That was not a suit on a mortgage decree. And the decision is based on the argument that after decree no suit is pending.] That is so. Parties cannot be added after final judgment, though they may be added at any time before it,—Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Birmingham (L. R., 15 Ch. D., 423), Annual Practice, 1896, p. 368. The present proceedings for sale of the property cannot be considered a continuation of the original suit. [PETHERAM, C.J.--But if the suit and the decree in it may be for some purposes treated as in existence, how can you say there is no suit pending?] I contend that so far as the mortgaged properties are concerned, when the order absolute is made under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, the mere fact that the decree-holder may get another decree sometime afterwards is no reason why the decree should not be treated as the final decree in the suit. The words "pending the suit" in [69] section 372 of the Code relate to a suit in which no final order has been made, - Gocool Chunder Gossamee v. Administrator-General (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 728 : 5 C. L. R., 569). The word "representative" as used in clause (c), section 244 of the Code, only means any person who succeeds to the right of any of the parties to the suit after the decree is passed—Kameshwar Persad v. Run Bahadur Singh (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 458). Again, how can it be said that the objector is a representative on the record? He never applied to be put on. The mere fact that he made objections in the lower Court does not entitle him to be treated as a representative on the record. As his name was not on the record it is impossible to say that he ever became a representative of any party to the suit, within the meaning of section 244, clause (c) of the Code; Halodhar Shaha v. Harogobind Dass Koiburto (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 105).

There are many cases where a distinction has been drawn between a voluntary purchaser and a purchaser at an execution sale; for instance, Dinendro Nath Sannyal v. Ramcoomar Ghose (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 107 : L. R., 8 I. A., 65); and it has also been held that a purchaser at a Court sale is not a party or the representative of a party within the meaning of section 244 of the Code; Vishvanath Chardu Naik v. Subraya Shivapa Shetti (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 290); Hira Lal Chatterjee v. Gourmoni Debi (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 326).

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose in reply.

C. A. V.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by Banerjee, J., (Petheram, C.J., and O'Kinealy, Macpherson and Trevelyan, JJ. concurring).

The respondent in this appeal is the assignee of a mortgage decree ordering sale of the mortgaged properties. The appellant is the purchaser of one of the mortgaged properties at a sale in execution of a money decree against the mortgagor, the date of his purchase being subsequent to that of the mortgage decree.

Upon a previous application by the respondent for execution of [70] the decree by sale of the property purchased by the appellant, the Court on the appellants' objection ordered that all the mortgaged properties be sold together; and after that order, the execution case was struck off.

A fresh application for execution having been now made, a sale proclamation was issued for sale in the three lots, the property purchased by the appellant being mentioned as the first to be sold. The appellant objected, and his objection was rejected by both the Courts below on the ground that he has no locus standi under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Against that decision of the Courts below this appeal has been preferred; and the learned Judges before whom the appeal came on for hearing were of opinion that the decision was wrong. But as it is supported by the rulings of this Court in the cases of Narain Acharjee v. Gregory (8 W. R., 304), and Gour Sunder Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355), they have referred the matter to a Full Bench.

The referring order, it is true, refers to the Full Bench only the question "whether the cases of Gour Sunder Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury and Narain Acharjee v. Gregory, so far as they decide that a purchaser at an execution sale of the equity of redemption in mortgaged properties cannot come in execution proceedings under a decree upon the mortgage as a representative of the judgment-debtor under section 244, are rightly decided," whereas under Rule II of the Rules of the Court relating to Full Bench References (Chapter V of the Rules of this Court as published in 1891), the whole appeal ought to have been referred to it; but that does not make any difference in this case, seeing that the question referred to us is the only material question in the appeal, and the determination of the appeal depends upon the determination of that question. If the appellant is the representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 244 (c), then as the questions raised by him in the first Court were questions relating to the execution of the decree, they must be determined by that Court, and he is clearly entitled to be heard. If, on the other hand, he is not a representative of [71] the judgment-debtor within the meaning of that section, this appeal will fail as well on the merits as on the preliminary ground that no appeal lies.

The answer to the question stated in the reference, and the decision of this appeal, depend upon the meaning of the word 'representative' as used in section 244 with reference to the judgment-debtor. It may have only the meaning ordinarily attached to the expression 'legal representative;' that it includes only the heir, executor or administrator of the judgment-debtor, but not the purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest, whether the purchase is made at a private sale or at an execution sale, as was held by the Allahabad High Court in Zauki Lal v. Jawahir (I. L. R., 5 All., 94), and Jagat Narain v. Jagrup (I. L. R., 5 All., 452); or it may mean a representative in interest, and include a purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest who, so far as that interest is concerned, is bound by the decree, whether the purchase is made at a private sale or at an execution sale, as was observed by PONTIFEX, J., in Rash Behary Mookhopadhya v. Surnomoyee (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 403); or it may have a meaning intermediate between these two, being neither so narrow as the former, nor quite so broad as the latter, that is, it may mean a representative in interest and include a purchaser at a private sale of the judgment-debtor's interest who is bound by the decree, but not a purchaser at an execution sale, as was held by this Court in Gour Sunder Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355). One thing, however, is clear; even if the word has either of the two comprehensive meanings and includes a purchaser of the interest of the judgment-debtor, such a purchaser must be one who is affected by the decree; but a purchaser of the interest of a party to a suit who is not affected by the decree cannot in any sense be regarded as a representative of that party within the meaning of section 244. Upon this point the authorities are all at one—see Rash Behary Mookhopadhya v. Surnomoyee

(I.L.R., 7 Cal., 403), Zauki Lal v. Jawahir (I.L.R., 5 All., 94), Shivram Chintaman v. Jivu (I.L.R., 13 Bom., 34). And this is conceded in the argument on behalf of the appellant, which proceeded on the assumption that the appellant as [72] purchaser of part of the mortgaged property after the passing of the mortgage decree was bound by that decree.

The questions that arise for consideration, therefore, are—

First.—Whether the term 'representative' as used in section 244 when taken with reference to the judgment-debtor means only his legal representative, that is his heir, executor or administrator, or whether it means his representative in interest and includes a purchaser of his interest who, so far as such interest is concerned, is bound by the decree; and,

Second.—Whether, if the term has this latter meaning, there is any reason for excluding from its signification an execution purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest.

As to the first question, one reason for taking the term in its limited sense as including only the heir, executor or administrator, is thus stated by OLDFIELD, J., in his judgment in Jagat Narain v. Jagrup (I. L. R, 5 All., 452):— "In my opinion the word representative used in section 244 was not intended to include purchasers of a judgment-debtor's property. We find special provision in the Code for enabling transferees of decrees by assignment or operation of law to execute their decrees by section 232, and for a decree-holder to execute a decree against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor (section 234). Had it been intended to give power to execute a decree against an assignee of a judgment-debtor, some similar provision to that in section 234 would probably have been made to effect that object, and its omission, coupled with the fact which is significant that 'legal representatives' as used in section 234 is confined to the heirs of a deceased judgment-debtor, may lead to the inference that the word 'representative' in section 244 has no more extended meaning than heir, devisee or executor, which also is the proper signification." Another reason in favour of the same view is said to be founded on the inconvenience which would result if the opposite view were held to be correct, and the purchaser of any small portion of the judgment-debtor's property were held entitled to come in as a representative of the judgment-debtor.

[73] These reasons are no doubt entitled to consideration. But it should be borne in mind that it is not every purchaser of the judgment-debtor's property that is sought to be included in the term "representative" of the judgment-debtor under section 244. It is only where the purchaser of the judgment-debtor's property is, so far as such property is concerned, bound by the decree that the purchaser according to the appellant's contention should be held to come within the meaning of the term, and in such a case it is difficult on principle to maintain that the purchaser is not a representative in interest of the judgment-debtor, or to deny him a hearing if he has any objection to urge against the execution. He is bound by the decree and is affected by the execution proceedings so far as they relate to the property purchased by him; while, on the other hand, the party who stands on the record as the judgment-debtor may be wholly unconcerned so far as the execution goes against such property, for the simple reason that he has no longer any interest in it. In such a case the execution is really proceeding against the purchaser, though nominally against the judgment-debtor on the record; and to allow it to go on without hearing the objections of the purchaser when he may be prepared to show that execution ought not to proceed as prayed, by reason of the decree being barred or satisfied, or for any other good reason, would be to take a course fraught with such manifest hardship to the purchaser that I should hesitate to affirm it as correct, unless the law was quite clear on the point. But is the law so clear? I cannot say that it is. The Code of Civil Procedure in section 244 uses the term 'representative,' which may well include a 'representative in interest,' that is, a purchaser of the interest of the judgment-debtor in any property, which is affected by the decree, and this is the view taken by Mr. Justice PONTIFEX in Rash Behary Mookhopadhya v. Surnomoyee (I.L.R., 7 Cal., 403). The only case in this Court to which our attention has been called as apparently taking the opposite view is that of Narain Acharjee v. Gregory (8 W. R., 304); but upon examination that case does not appear to be one in point. There the decree sought to be executed was, as the Court found, a mere money decree, and the purchaser, [74] who was held not to be a party to the suit nor the personal representative of a party, and therefore not entitled under section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 to appeal against the order of the lower Court disallowing his objection, was a purchaser of the interest of the judgment-debtor in certain property not covered by the decree. As for the case of Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I.L.R., 16 Cal., 355), though it decides that an execution purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest is not his representative within the meaning of section 244, yet it also expressly decides that a purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest of a private sale is. I may add here that the object of section 244 being to prevent multiplicity of litigation, it should, as has been observed both by this Court and by the Privy Council—see Punchanan Bandopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (I.L.R., 17 Cal., 711 (718)) and Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683)—receive a liberal interpretation.

Thus, while the balance of authority in this Court, if not decidedly in favour of, is certainly not opposed to, the view that a purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest, who so far as that interest goes is bound by the decree, is his representative within the meaning of section 244, the balance of reason is clearly in favour of that view.

It remains now to consider whether there is any valid reason for limiting the signification of the term 'representative' so as to exclude an execution purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest. As far as I can see there is no distinction in principle between the case of a purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest at a private sale and that of a purchaser of his interest at an execution sale, so long as they are both bound by the decree in regard to the interest acquired by purchase. At one time there was some conflict of opinion as to the application of the doctrine of lis pendens to the case of the latter [see the case of Gourmoney v. Read (2 Taylor & Bell, 83), referred to in the judgment of this Court in Rajkishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhub Holdar (21 W. R., 349)]. But the question must now be taken to be practically settled by the decision of the Privy Council in Radha Madhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerji (I. L. R., 15 Cal, 756 : L. R., 15 I. A., 97), and it must be held that an execution purchaser [75] is bound by the doctrine of lis pendens quite as much as a purchaser at a private sale. The appellant made his purchase after the decree in the mortgage suit and before it was satisfied. His purchase is therefore subject to the rights created by the decree. But it is not necessary to discuss this point any further, as there is no question raised on either side as to the appellant being bound by the decree, and the arguments on both sides proceeded on the assumption that his purchase was subject to the rights created by the decree.

Of the two cases mentioned in the referring order I have already considered one, namely, the case of Narain Acharjee v. Gregory (8 W. R., 304), and that is clearly distinguishable from the present. The other case, namely, that of Gour Sundar Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355), is no doubt in point, and requires examination. The ground of decision, so far as the point under consideration is concerned, is stated by the learned Judges in their judgment in these words: "The plaintiff Hem Chunder Chowdhury is a purchaser in execution of a money decree against the mortgagors. He is consequently not a voluntary purchaser, and as has been held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, his title is not one of privity with the mortgagors, but in some respects adverse to them. We think, therefore, that he cannot be considered as a representative of the judgment-debtors, mortgagors within the terms of section 244. The cases to which we refer are Dinendro Nath Sannial v. Ram Kumar Ghose (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 107: L. R., 8 I. A., 65), and Anandmayi Dasi v. Dharandra Chandra Mukerji (8 B. L. R., 122: 16 W. R. P. C., 19), and we may also refer Lala Prabhu Lal v. Mylne (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 401)."

It is true that an execution purchaser makes his purchase, not from the judgment-debtor and often against his wish, and he is not bound by some of the acts of the judgment-debtor, such as alienations made by the latter to defeat the decree; but that does not show that his rights are not derived from the judgment-debtor, or that he is not the representative in interest [76] of the judgment-debtor in any sense or for any purpose. Even a purchaser at a private sale is not bound by any prior alienation made by the vendor to defraud him (see section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act); but that does not show that such purchaser is not a representative in interest of the vendor. As for the cases relied upon in the judgment in Gour Sunder Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355), the two Privy Council decisions do not in my opinion afford any basis for the broad proposition deduced from them. The first mentioned case, Dinendro Nath Sannial v. Ram Kumar Ghose (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 107: L. R., 8 I. A., 65), decides that the rights of a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree are in some respects superior to those of a purchaser at a private sale, the former acquiring the property freed from all alienations or incumbrances effected by the judgment-debtors subsequently to the attachment in execution of decree. In the second case, that of Anandmayi Dasi v. Dharandra Chandra Mukerji (8 B. L. R., 122: 16 W. R., P. C., 19), their Lordships say "that the title of a judgment-creditor, or a purchaser under a judgment-decree, cannot be put on the same footing as the title of a mortgagor, or of a person claiming under a voluntary alienation from the mortgagor," and they hold "that the possession of a purchaser under such circumstances is really not the possession of a person holding in privity with the mortgagor or holding so as to be an acknowledgment of the continuance of the title of the mortgagor."

These cases only show that the rights of an execution purchaser are in some respects different from those of a purchaser at a private sale; but because that is so, it does not follow that the execution purchaser is not to be regarded as a representative in interest of the judgment-debtor even in those respects in which, and for those purposes for which, his rights are no higher than those of the judgment-debtor whose right, title and interest he has purchased; where, as in this case, it is admitted that the purchaser at a sale in execution of a money decree is bound by the mortgage decree sought to be executed, in the same way as the judgment-debtor is bound, it is difficult to understand [77] why he should not be treated as a representative in interest of the judgment-debtor.

The third case relied upon in the judgment in Gour Sunder Lahiri v. Hem Chunder Chowdhury (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 355), namely, that of Lala Prabhu Lal v. Mylne (I. L. R, 14 Cal., 401), does not require any detailed examination, as it is based chiefly upon the two Privy Council decisions just referred to.

On the other hand, in the recent case of Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 909), their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that the equitable principle of estoppel laid down in the case of Ram Coomar Koondoo v. Macqueen (11 B. L. R., 46: 18 W. R., 166), which applies to any person is equally binding on the purchaser of his right, title and interest at a sale in execution of a decree.

For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that the question stated in the referring order should be answered in the negative, and that the appellant should be held entitled to be heard in support of his objections as a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 244 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

I would accordingly decree this appeal with costs, set aside the orders of the Court below, and send the case back to the first Court with directions to hear and determine the objections urged by the appellant.

NOTES.

[' REPRESENTATIVES '—

The term 'legal representative' is defined in the C. P. C., 1908, sec. 2, cl. 11. For the purposes of sec. 244, C. P. C., 1882 ; (sec. 47 C. P. C., 1908) the term 'representative' was interpreted in several cases.

"To determine whether a particular person is a representative of a party to the suit, the two tests to be applied are, first, whether any portion of the interest of the decree-holder or of the judgment-debtor, which was originally vested in one of the parties to the suit, has, by act of parties, or by operation of law, vested in the person who is sought to be treated as representative ; and, secondly, if there has been a devolution of interest, whether so far as such interest is concerned, that person is bound by the decree" :—(1909) 9 C. L. J., 485 per MOOKERJEE, J.

It has been held that the purchaser is bound by the estoppel binding on the judgment-debtor, etc. :—(1909) 10 C.L.J., 150 ; (1907) 7 C.L.J., 644.

The question of onus is not affected by the representative character :—(1900) 5 C.W.N., 403 ; (1907) 6 C.L.J., 659.

The following persons were held to be representatives on the test of being bound by the decree :—

(a) purchaser at execution sale :– (1902) 29 Cal., 813 ; (1902) 7 C.W.N., 54 ; (1907) 30 Mad., 507 . 17 M.L.J., 291 :

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd July, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY.

Sheo Shankar Gir............Plaintiff

Ram Shewak Chowdhri and others............Defendants.[1]

Hindu law—Endowment—Alienation by de facto Manager of an endowment—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Art. 91.

The principles of Hunooman Persaud Pandey's case (6 Moo. I. A., 393) apply to the alienation of property by the de facto manager of an Hindu endowment.

Unni v. Kunchi Amma (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 26) and Sikher Chund v. Dulputty Singh [I. L. R., 5 Cal., 363 (370)], cited.

[78] The possession of such manager cannot be treated as adverse to the endowment.

Sembie.—Article 91* of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) has no application to a suit to set aside such alienation.

THIS was a suit by the mohunt of a religious endowment for recovery of an endowed property alienated by one Balraj Gir, a previous mohunt, and for a declaration that the deed of sale under which the alienation was made was invalid, collusive and ineffectual. One of the pleas taken in defence was that the suit was barred by limitation, and the principal point of law discussed in appeal was the question of limitation. The suit was instituted on the 3rd December 1892. The facts and pleadings are sufficiently given in the judgment of the High Court.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. W. C. Bonerjee and Babu Umakali Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Mr. Jackson and Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singha for the Respondents.

Mr. Bonerjee.—The suit is not barred by the three years' rule in the Limitation Act. Article 91 of Schedule II has no application to the present claim, as the cancellation of the deed of sale is not essential. Unni v. Kunchi Amma (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 26) following the principle laid down in Sikher Chund v. Dulputty Singh [I.L.R., 5 Cal., 363 (370)] is in point. See also Sundaram v. Sethammal (I.L.R., 16 Mad., 311), Abdul Rohim v. Kirparam Daji (I.L.R. 16 Bom., 186). [TREVELYAN, J., referred to a judgment recently delivered—Regular Appeal 103 of 1893, decided 3rd July 1896.] That case lays down that it is to be seen in each case whether cancellation of the deed is an essential element. The plea of adverse possession is also unfounded. Mulji Bhulabhai v. Manohar Ganesh (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 322).

Mr. Jackson for the Respondents.—Balraj after his deposition held the property without any title; he was therefore in adverse possession from 1873. The first zaripeshgi was in 1866; that [79] was never paid off, and the

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
To cancel or set aside an instrument not otherwise provided for.	Three years ...	When the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him.]

possession of the defendants as zaripeshgidars also became adverse. The case of Mulji Bhulabhai v. Manohar Ganesh (I.L.R., 12 Bom., 322) is not good law, it gives a fresh start to the successor. As to Art. 91, the plaintiff in this case cannot succeed without setting aside the deed of sale. The Mohunt, Balraj, was not a stranger, and his acts are valid so long as they are not set aside. The plaint and issues show that cancellation is essential in this case. Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Hurrihur Pershad Narain Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 629). The Full Bench case of Meda Bibi v. Imaman Bibi (I. L. R., 6 All., 207) supports this view. See also Jagadamba Chaodhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy Chowdhri (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 308); Raghubir Dyal Sahu v. Bhikya Lal Misser (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 69); and Janki Kunwar v. Ajit Singh (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 58: L. R., 14 I. A., 148). The cases of Unni v. Kunchi Amma (6 Moo. I. A., 393) and Sundaram v. Sethammal (I. L. R, 16 Mad., 311) were of a different nature. Hasan Ali v. Nazo (I. L. R., 11 All, 456) and Radhabai v. Anantrao Bhagvant Deshpande [I. L. R., 9 Bom., 198 (231)] were also cited.

Mr. Bonnerjee was heard in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) so far as it was material for this report, was as follows :—

This suit was brought by the present mohunt of the Kaplossar Asthan in the Nepal Terai for the purpose of obtaining possession of mouzah Mahtour, which is situate in the district of Tirhoot. The plaint asks—

1. That it may be declared that Mahtour forms a deotar estate belonging to the Kaplessar Asthan.

2. That it may be declared that the deed of sale, dated the 5th of March 1881, was altogether invalid and collusive and ineffectual, and that under it the defendants have acquired no right in that estate.

3. That the Court may be pleased to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff in respect to the entire mouzah Mahtour. This last prayer we read as a prayer for possession.

[80] The defendants plead that the suit is barred by limitation, and that they have acquired a right by adverse possession. They also plead that mouzah Mahtour is not deotar property, and deny all the allegations contained in the plaint. Lastly, they plead that the deed of sale under which they claim was executed for legal necessity by the then mohunt of the Asthan.

The Subordinate Judge has held that the property in suit is deotar property appertaining to the Asthan, but that the suit is barred by limitation, and that a portion of the money advanced by the defendants was actually applied for payment of the rents of the Asthan property and of debts due by the mohunt. He therefore dismissed the suit.

There can be no doubt that this mouzah was deotar property. The sanad by which it was given many years ago, viz., 1166 Fusli, to a mohunt named Harjih Gir who was a predecessor of the present plaintiff in the mohuntship, distinctly shows that the property was given for the purpose of the Asthan. It was given to the mohunt as such, and the succession was prescribed to be in his disciples. The purposes of the trust were to feed fakirs and mendicants. This was a trust for charitable purposes, the successive occupiers of the mohuntship being the trustees.

We also agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in holding that mouzah Mahtour belongs to the Asthan Harlaki, which is a dependency of Asthan Kaplessar. It is clear that the mohunt of Kaplessar was de jure mohunt of Harlaki.

A predecessor of the plaintiff in this mohuntship was one Balraj Gir. He was deposed from the guddi by order of the Maharajah of Nepal, on the 22nd of February 1873. It is the case of both sides that the Maharajah of Nepal had power to appoint and depose mohunts of the Kaplessar Asthan; and as a matter of fact it is clear that in his name such appointments and depositions were from time to time made. It is not for us to consider the propriety of the action of the Maharajah of Nepal.

The guddi of this Asthan was held upon a very uncertain tenure, and at the will of the Maharajah or his counsellors a mohunt might at any moment lose his office. On Balraj Gir's deposition one Balwant Gir succeeded him. Balwant Gir was succeeded by Sham [81] Gir, but in 1886 an order was made for the reinstatement of Balraj. Balraj died before he could be reinstalled, and a sanad was granted to the plaintiff. It appears from the evidence in this case that although Balraj between 1873 and 1886 was neither de jure nor de facto mohunt of Kaplessar, he did not cease to exercise control over the property belonging to Harlaki. The deed, which is the subject of the present suit, was executed by Balraj in 1881 when he was not de jure mohunt of Harlaki, although, as far as we can see from the evidence, he was de facto mohunt and had not ceased to exercise his functions as mohunt. On the 5th of March 1881 he executed a deed of sale of mouzah Mahtour in favour of the defendants.

Although it is unnecessary in the view which we take of the facts of this case to determine the question of limitation, we think it desirable that, as it has been argued, we should express our opinion with regard to it. In the first place it is quite clear to us that there is no question of adverse possession. The only way in which it is attempted to set up adverse possession is by adding the tenure of Mahtour by Balraj, after his deposition in 1873, to the possession held by the defendants since 1881, that is to say, by holding that from 1873 the possession of Balraj became adverse. But Balraj continued to hold, not adversely to the endowment, but as de facto trustee thereof. He continued as mohunt, and in his dealing with the property in 1881 he acted in that capacity. That being so, it is difficult to see how his action can in any way be treated as being adverse to the endowment. A person who wrongly holds as trustee and pretends to act as trustee cannot be entitled to reprobate the right which he asserts and to contend that he holds adversely to his cestui que trust. In our opinion this is perfectly clear, and no question of adverse possession arises up to 1881. Although the defendants had for some time held this land as zur-i-peshgidars they did not assert any rights adverse to the endowment. Even if the effect of the sale of 1881 were to start an adverse title, twelve years had not elapsed when the suit was instituted.

We also think that we must hold that Article 91 of the Limitation Act has no application to the present case. A forcible argument was addorssed to us on behalf of the respondents in order to induce us to hold that that Article applied, and a large number [82] of authorities were cited to us. In no one of them do we find that Article 91 has been applied to an alienation by the manager of an endowment, the manager of an infant heir, a Hindu widow, or any other of the persons whose powers are placed in the same footing by Hunooman Persaud Pandey's case (6 Moo. I. A., 393), and the cases which follow the decision in that case. On the contrary, in two cases we find express authority that twelve years is the period of limitation in a case of that kind. The case of Unni v. Kunchi Amma (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 26) is a case in many respects similar to the present, and in a case in this Court, Sikher Chund v. Dulputty Singh [I. L. R, 5 Cal, 363 (370)], a Division Bench considered that Article 91 was inapplicable. If the person who executes the document had no authority in law to execute it, the plaintiff need not sue to set it aside, but may treat it as of no effect.

The next question raised is as to the position Balraj occupied at the time of the execution of the deed in question. He was not de jure mohunt, but he was de facto mohunt of the subordinate Asthan Harlaki to which Mahtour belonged. We see no reason why the observations of the Privy Council in Hunooman Persaud Pandey's case with reference to the manager for an infant heir should not apply equally to a de facto manager of an endowment. The persons with whom the mohunt deals are not bound to look further than the authority which is apparent to them. It is impossible to expect a person dealing with a mohunt who is in possession of land in British territory to know much, or indeed to care much, about what action is from time to time being taken by the Nepal Raj with regard to the status of the mohunt. At page 412 of 6 Moore's Indian Appeals their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "Upon the third point it is to be observed that under the Hindu Law the right of a bonâ fide encumbrancer who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly for the purpose of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge, had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure title."

The same reasons which would induce the Court to support [83] the case of a de facto manager of an infant heir would, in our opinion, justify it in supporting the case of a de facto mohunt, especially where that mohunt had recently been de jure mohunt, and the alteration of his rights had been effected by a foreign Government in the main with reference to territory within the jurisdiction of that Government.

The only remaining question is whether this deed can be supported as being based on necessity.

[After considering the evidence on this question, which is not material to this report, their Lordships continued:] We think that this evidence shows that there was a necessity for the sale. There were in existence bonds which had been given for necessary purposes and which could be enforced, and there was a decree. The family of the defendants had for many years been financing this Asthan. They acted not only bonâ fide, but it appears to us they exercised a good deal of care in the different transactions. There is nowhere in the case for the plaintiff anything to suggest that his predecessor on the guddi acted improperly in raising money or otherwise than for necessity.

We think therefore that on the merits this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

S. C. C. — Appeal dismissed.

[I. The Privy Council in overruling (1903) 30 Cal., 990 stated (in a suit by a reversioner to recover property alienated by a Hindu widow after her death) that as between Art. 91 and Art. 140 or 141, the test is not simply whether the alienation was void or voidable. The mere fact of the alienation being voidable (25 Cal., 1) was held there to be insufficient, in the absence of an election on the plaintiff's part. The way he elected was shown by his bringing a suit. Neither did it matter that in that suit there was a prayer for a declaration that the ijara was inoperative as against him. Res judicata—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 13, Explanation (2) —Different subject matters of suits —Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Article 124 -Suit for declaration of baradari rights Subsequent suit for assertion of khadimi rights —Sale of office to which are attached conduct of religious worship, and performance of religious duties—Mahomedan Law —Custom

Section 13 Explanation (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to cases in which the plaintiff having on a former occasion sued for certain [84] relief on the strength of one title afterwards claims the same relief on the ground of another title of which he might have availed himself in the former suit It does not apply to cases where the subject-matters of the two suits are different

The plaintiffs in the year 1881 instituted a suit for a declaration of private baradari rights in connection with the daily receipts and offerings at a certain Mahomedan place of worship alleging that the defendants had dispossessed them on the 27th September 1881, but they did not assert any claim as khadims The suit was decreed but the decree was reversed on appeal On the 7th March 1892 the plaintiff instituted a suit for a declaration that they were the khadims of a certain durga and as such entitled to perform the duties attached to that office for 21 days in each month and during that period to receive the offerings made by worshippers at the durga They also claimed an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with them in the exercise of that office The plaintiffs claimed their khadimi rights partly by inheritance and partly by purchase a custom of transferability by sale having been long recognized

Held that the relief claimed in the second suit was not res judicata the subject matters of the two suits being distinct

R, 2 I A 283) distinguished

Held, also, that the second suit being a claim to an hereditary office fell under Article 124 of the Limitation Act and was not barred by limitation

Semble, that a Mahomedan office to which are attached substantially the conduct of religious worship and the performance of religious duties is not legally saleable, any custom to the contrary notwithstanding and that therefore in so far as the title of the plaintiffs depended upon purchase the suit failed

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 1401 of 1894, against the decree of R H Greaves Esq, District Judge of Sylhet, dated the 28th of May 1894 affirming the decree of Babu Kailash Chundra Mozumdar, Subordinate Judge of that District dated the 10th of July 1893

[85] THE facts of this case and the arguments are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Moulvi Syed Shamsul Hudda for the Appellants.

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhry and Moulvi Mahomed Habibullah for the Respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Macpherson and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

The plaintiffs in this suit pray for a decree declaring them to be the khadims of the durga of Hazrat Shah Zilal, and declaring them also as khadims to be entitled to perform the duties attached to that office for twenty-one days in each month, and during the same periods to receive the offerings (nazar-niaz) made by worshippers at the durga. They also ask for an injunction restraining the principal defendants from interfering with them in the enjoyment of these offerings as well as in the performance of their khadimi duties.

The suit has been decreed by both the Courts below. The defendants now in appeal to this Court question the correctness of these decrees on the grounds that the suit is barred by the operation of the rule of res judicata; that it is barred by limitation; and that the rights which form the subject-matter of the suit are not transferable either by sale or by inheritance, more particularly through a female.

The plaintiffs' case is that the rights which they claim of serving at the durga and of collecting and enjoying the offerings made by worshippers have devolved upon them in part by inheritance from the original khadims of the durga, and in part by purchase. They assert that the office of khadim is hereditary, and that it has always carried with it a right to share in the offerings in question. They also allege that for a long time the transferability of the khadimi rights by sale has been recognized. They deduce their immediate title from one Khair Mahomed and his sister Akhara Banu, the latter of whom was the wife of the first plaintiff and the mother of the second, third and fourth plaintiffs. Khair Mahomed, it is alleged, was originally entitled as a khadim to a two-thirds share in the service and offerings of the durga for ten [86] and half days in each month, his sister Akhara Banu being entitled to the remaining one third share. On her death in the year 1280 B. S., (1873) her share, it is said, devolved upon the plaintiffs and a daughter, since deceased, as her heirs. The other ten and half days' share which goes to make up the twenty-one days' share in suit had belonged to the first defendant, but in execution of certain decrees obtained against him by Khair Mahomed and Akhara Banu, it was brought to sale on the 21st April 1875, and purchased in the proportions of two-thirds and one-third by Khair Mahomed and the heirs of Akhara Banu, respectively. In this manner Khair Mahomed became the owner ultimately of a fourteen days' share in the service and offerings of the durga.

This share, it is alleged, was afterwards in the year 1877 bought by the 1st plaintiff at a sale in execution of a decree held by him against Khair Mahomed.

According to the case thus made, it appears therefore that the first plaintiff claims to be entitled in his own right by purchase to a 14 days' share, and jointly with his co-plaintiffs to a 7 days' share, of which one-half came to them by inheritance from Akhara Banu, and the other half was acquired by purchase from the first defendant. It is alleged that the plaintiffs enjoyed the interests in the office of khadim jointly with the other khadims as they accrued to them from time to time in the manner abovementioned, until they were forcibly interfered with and dispossessed by the defendants. Various dates were assigned in the plaint in the alternative as the date of the accrual of the cause f action.

It is, however, unnecessary to specify them, since at the argument of this appeal, the 12th Assin B. S. corresponding with the 27th September 1881, was treated by both parties as the date of the plaintiff's actual dispossession, and as the date accordingly from which the period of limitation applicable to the suit would begin to run.

The defence to the suit raised substantially the same questions as are now raised by the pleas taken in appeal.

The first question for our consideration is whether the suit is barred by the rule of res judicata. In support of this plea it is urged that in a previous suit brought by the plaintiffs in the year 1881, shortly after their dispossession, against some of the present defendants, and the predecessors in title of the others, they [87] claimed unsuccessfully precisely the same right which they now claim, to collect and enjoy the offerings made at the durga, and it is argued that, although in the present suit they have claimed the right on the footing that they are khadims of the durga, and in that character entitled to the offerings, while on the previous occasion they did not put forward their khadimi title, this can make no difference, since the 2nd Explanation to section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure would preclude them from now availing themselves of the title as being a matter which on the previous occasion they might and ought to have made ground of attack.

In our opinion these contentions are unsustainable, because in point of fact the subject-matters of the present and the former suit are different. It is apparent from the pleadings and decisions in the suit of 1881 that what the plaintiffs there sought was the establishment only of their right to the enjoyment of the offerings made at the durga—a right described in the course of the suit as a "private baradari right," independently of any title they might possess to the office of khadim. The existence of such a right was denied by the defendants, and the suit failed because the plaintiffs were unable to prove that a right of that nature existed. Such clearly was the interpretation placed both by the parties and the Courts which dealt with the case upon the issue upon which the decision of the suit turned; namely, "Is it true that there is a specific right called baradari right in connection with the daily receipts of Shah Jalal's durga?" Passing by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, whose decree was in favour of the plaintiffs for the recovery of possession of the baradari right for 21 days, the ground upon which the District Judge dismissed the suit when it came before him in appeal, is thus stated in his judgment: "I consider that the plaintiff has proved the right of himself and of his two minor sons and minor daughter by purchase as acquired from khadims to the khadimi baradari rights for 21 days in the month; but as the plaintiff has not sued under khadimi right, he and his children cannot obtain any decree for any private baradari rights."

The case then came before this Court in second appeal, and the decree of the District Judge was affirmed. The learned Judges in delivering judgment thus describe the nature of the suit. [88] "The plaintiffs in this case seek to recover what they call a baradari right, which they claim to exercise for 21 days during each month in respect of a Mahomedan place of worship." They then proceed: "The defendants denied the existence of any such right, and put the plaintiffs very distinctly to the proof of the right set up by them. The origin of the right is not stated in the plaint, and there is no grant or pretended grant." Then they go on to say: "The Judge in the Court below, having considered the evidence, was of opinion that although this evidence might prove a baradari right in a khadim (a khadim being a person responsible for the ministration and the service of the sacred place), yet that the evidence failed to prove a baradari right of a private nature, that is a baradari right existing in and exercised by a private individual who was not connected with or responsible for the service or worship conducted at the sacred place." Then after referring to the nature of the evidence by which possibly such a right as that claimed by the plaintiffs might have been sustained, and observing upon the absence of all such evidence, the learned Judges say: "We do not, however, rest our decision upon this point. We decide that there is no point of law which can be raised here, seeing that the Judge below has carefully considered the evidence, and has come to the conclusion that the evidence does not support a baradari right of a private nature and unconnected with the office of khadim, this being the right which the plaintiffs assert."

In the suit now before us, what is asserted is a right to the possession and enjoyment of the office of khadim and to perform the duties and receive the emoluments of that office without disturbance or interference on the part of the defendants, and if in fact restoration to the office involves the recovery of the enjoyment of the worshippers' offerings, that is a consideration with which in relation to the present question it does not seem to us we need concern ourselves.

The subject-matter of the present and the previous suit being then distinct, the 2nd Explanation to section 13 has, in our opinion, no application to the case. It is not a case in which the plaintiffs having on a former occasion sued for a certain relief on the strength of one title, afterwards claim the same [89] relief on the ground of another title of which on the former occasion he might have availed himself, and it is to cases of that nature that the application of the explanation is confined.

Certain cases were cited by the learned vakil for the appellant in support of his argument, to which it is necessary shortly to refer. Most of them, it may be said, are cases in which the property claimed in the later suit was identical with that claimed in the earlier, and they merely afford illustrations of the application of the principle contained in Explanation II to section 13, and may be distinguished upon that ground. Thus in Denobundhoo Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dossee (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 152) the question before the Full Bench was "whether a plaintiff who has brought a suit to recover property upon the strength of one title and has been defeated in that suit can bring a suit to recover the same property upon the strength of another title of which he might have availed himself at the time the former suit was brought but which he did not set up in the plaint then filed?" This question was answered in the negative by a majority of the Full Bench. But the subject-matter of both the suits there in contemplation was identical, and the case therefore cannot be regarded as an authority in the present case. So in Woomatara Debia v. Unnopoorna Dassee (11 B. L. R., 158) the plaintiff claimed in the later suit the same property which she had unsuccessfully claimed in a previous suit under a different title. It was the same in Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 79: L. R., 19 I. A., 234), where the plaintiff on the strength of an agreement between the defendant and the original debtor, who was a Hindu widow, by which the former on being placed in possession of the property held by the widow as heir to her husband had undertaken to discharge her debts, sued for the balance of a debt for which he had previously sued both the widow and the defendant, alleging then as his cause of action against the latter that he was in possession of the property upon which the debt was charged. That suit had failed as against the defendant, and it was held that the later suit was barred as the agreement relied on ought under Explanation II to section 13 to have been made a ground of attack in the previous suit. The subject-matter of the later suit was a [90] portion of the debt claimed in the earlier. Similarly in Doorga Persad Singh v. Doorga Konwari (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 190 : L. R., 5 I. A., 149) the property in suit in both suits was the same. The question being whether the plaintiff, who was a party to the former suit in which the present defendant had obtained a decree for possession as against him and others as heiress of the last proprietor, was debarred from setting up in the later suit a family custom for the purpose of showing that he was entitled to possession in preference to her, and it was held that the former suit constituted a bar. The last case of this class which was cited, Muthumadeva Naik v. Sivathmuthumadeva Naik (7 Mad., H. C. 160) is merely another example of the same principle. The cases of Vijaya Raghanadha Bodha v. Katamar Natchiar (11 Moo. I. A., 50), Soorjoomonee Dayee v. Suddanand Mahapatter (12 B. L. R., 304 : L. R, I. A., Sup. Vol., 212) and Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lal Roy (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 144 : L. R., 2 I. A., 283) were relied upon. These cases go to show that when a question has necessarily been decided in effect though not in express terms between the parties to a suit, it cannot be raised again although in a different form between the same parties in another suit. But this rule can have no application in the present case. In the suit of 1881 the question of the title of the plaintiffs as khadims was not raised either directly or indirectly. They sued then as strangers to the office, and failed in their suit in consequence of having put their claim exclusively upon that footing.

Then as to the question of limitation. The suit is in substance for a declaration of the plaintiffs' right to and for possession of the office of khadim. They claim it as an hereditary office, and that that is its character has been found by the Courts below, a view from which we see no reason for dissenting. The suit therefore falls under Art. 124 of the second Schedule of Act XV of 1877, and since it was instituted within 12 years from the 27th September 1881, the date of dispossession, it is within time.

With respect, next, to the validity of the sales upon which the plaintiffs rely and under which they seek to make title, it appears to us that, speaking generally, an office to which are attached [91] essentially the conduct of religious worship and the performance of religious duties is not legally saleable. This principle has been followed in many cases relating to shebaitships and other offices connected with Hindu worship, though there is apparently no reported case in which the question has been decided in relation to a Mahomedan office. But the reasons which have led the Courts to refuse to recognise such sales in the case of Hindus are of general application and apply equally to the case of Mahomedans. In the case of Juggurnath Roy Chowdhry v. Kishen Pershad Surmah (7 W. R., 266) for example, it was sought to bring to sale, under a decree for a personal debt, the judgment-debtor's right as shebait to perform the services of a certain idol and also to sell his right to the surplus proceeds of the sheba. The Court held that rights of that nature were not so saleable, MACPHERSON, J., observing in delivering judgment : "Such a sale would practically destroy the endowment, or have the effect of defeating the whole object of its creation. There would be no guarantee that the service would be properly kept up, for the purchaser, whoever he might be, even if a Mahomedan or a Christian, would have the right of performing the worship of this Hindu idol." Again in Kuppa Gurukal v. Dorasami Gurukal (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 76), where the sale was of a private nature, and it was sought to sustain it on the ground that the purchaser was of the same caste and sect as the vendor, and therefore qualified to discharge the duties of the office, the Court was of opinion that that consideration was not in itself sufficient to validate the sale, assigning as their reason that "To hold so would tend to public mischief in inducing needy incumbents of hereditary religious offices, who desire to sell them, to give a dishonest recognition to qualifications which in fact were not the qualifications demanded by the nature of the office." So in Mancharam v. Pranshankar (I. L R., 6 Bom., 298), in which the alienation, which however was not by way of sale, was upheld, the Court after referring to several cases with approval in which the inalienability of religious offices had been maintained, and to the reasons upon which those decisions proceeded, remarked: "It may be admitted also that it would not be desirable to lay down any such rule regarding such alienations as would involve the Courts in nice questions of [92] caste distinctions bearing upon the capacity of a particular individual to perform the worship of and prepare food for a Hindu idol." Several other cases to the same effect were cited to us by the learned vakil for the appellant, but we have referred to these more particularly because they disclose most fully the reasons by which the Courts have been influenced in holding that such sales as those now in question are not valid. And it is clear that these reasons apply with equal force to all religious offices whatever may be the form of religious faith with which they are connected. The only case to which we were referred in which the alienation of such an office was allowed to stand was that of Mancharam v. Pranshankar (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 298). That case was however of a peculiar nature, and the alienation was not, as has been observed above, by way of sale. The alienee took under the will of his uncle on the death of the latter. He was a member of the founder's family and stood in the line of succession to the office, and it was upon these grounds that the alienation was upheld. But it may be inferred from what was said by the learned Judges in the course of their judgment with respect to the transferability by sale of such offices, that their decision would have been otherwise if the transfer then before them had been by sale.

It would certainly appear from the description of the duties attached to the office of khadim contained in the plaint in the present case as well as from the enumeration of those duties contained in the written statement of one of the defendants, the accuracy of which was not questioned, that some of the duties essentially connected with the office are of a religious nature. Among those mentioned by the plaintiffs, is, for example, "the reading of namaz and the Koran in due form for the spiritual benefit of the Hazrat," while in the written statement referred to among many duties which could not be performed by a person other than a Mahomedan are mentioned: "Consecrating things offered as nazar niaz and reading durud." It was not indeed disputed that the office is of a religious nature, and it appears to us, therefore, that in so far as the sales now in question depend for their validity upon the general law, they cannot be sustained.

It was, however, sought in the Courts below to support them [93] apparently on the ground of custom. There was no issue directed specifically to this question. But the lower Courts have held the office to be transferable by sale, because instances have occurred in which it had been so transferred. We very much doubt whether a custom or practice sanctioning the sale of a religious office for the pecuniary benefit or for the private debts of the incumbent could under any circumstances be sustained, and we may refer in this connection to what was said by the Privy Council in the case of Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (I. L. R., 1 Mad., 235: L. R., 4 I. A., 76). Speaking of the duties and powers of the trustees of a religious foundation, and after quoting from the case of Muttu Ramlinga Setupati v. Perianayagum Pillai (L. R., 1 I. A., 209) the following passage: "But the constitution and rules of religious brotherhoods attached to Hindu temples are by no means uniform in their character, and the important principle to be observed by the Courts is to ascertain, if that be possible, the special laws and usages governing the particular community whose affairs become the subject of litigation and to be guided by them," their Lordships say: "Their Lordships are of opinion that no custom which can qualify the general principle of law has been established in this case, and they desire to add that if the custom set up was one to sanction, not merely the transfer of a trusteeship, but, as in this case the sale of a trusteeship for the pecuniary advantage of the trustee, they would be disposed to hold that that circumstance alone would justify a decision that the custom was bad in law." It appears to us, however, that it is unnecessary that we should decide the question. For, assuming that the custom or practice set up could be sustained at law, the evidence to which our attention was called, and upon which the Courts below proceeded is, in our opinion, insufficient to establish a custom or practice which would validate these sales. The only instances of which evidence was given in which the transfer of the office took place by public sale appear to have been those in which the plaintiffs themselves and the persons through whom they claim immediately were concerned, and even the instances of private transfers relied upon, which however appear to us to [94] stand on a very different footing and would seem to have been confined to the co-sharers in the office were few.

The result must, we think, be that in so far as the title of the plaintiff depends upon the purchase of the interests of the 1st defendant and of Khair Mahomed in the years 1875 and 1877, respectively, that is as to a 17½ days' share out of the 21 days claimed, the suit fails.

The only remaining question is as to the 3½ days' share claimed by inheritance from Akhara Banu. It was contended that Akhara Banu being a female was incapable of holding the office, and was incapable therefore of transmitting an interest in it to her heirs, and Mr. Justice AMEER ALI'S work on Mahomedan Law (Vol. I., p. 348) was referred to in support of this position. It is there no doubt said that when the duty of officiating at religious festivals is attached to the office of mutwalli, for which office a woman is generally eligible, she is precluded by her sex from holding the tantial, and this is put apparently on the ground that the office of mutwalli being one of personal trust, the duties of the office cannot be discharged by deputy, so as to make a person incapacitated by sex from performing those duties herself, capable of holding the office. Whether this would be so with respect to the office of khadim may be a question, but we think we should not be justified under the circumstances of this case in deciding it. The question was decided by the Court of First Instance in favour of the plaintiffs. That Court held that Akhara Banu had succeeded to the office by right of inheritance, and that her heirs were entitled to succeed her on her death. Whether the Subordinate Judge was right in this view or not, it appears to have been acquiesced in by the defendants. At all events there is nothing to show that it was raised in the Lower Appellate Court, and we think, therefore, that we should not be well advised in allowing it to be raised again at this stage.

In the result the appeal will be decreed and the suit dismissed with respect to 17½ days out of the 21 days' share claimed in the worship and offerings of the durga, with respect to the remaining 3½ days' share the appeal is dismissed. The appellants having succeeded substantially in the appeal are, we think, entitled to their costs in this Court as well as of both the Courts below in proportion [95] to their success. It has been agreed between the parties to the appeal that the 3½ days in each month decreed to the plaintiffs shall be counted from the beginning of the terms consisting of 21 days in each month claimed by the plaintiffs by their plaint, and we decree accordingly.

H. W. Appeal allowed.

Probate—Revocation of Probate—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), section 50, Expl. 4 " Just Cause"—Mismanagement by executor.

Mismanagement by the executor of an estate is not, under section 50, Expl. (4) of the Probate and Administration Act, a just cause for revoking the probate. Held, therefore, that the order of revocation made by the District Judge for that cause, was made without jurisdiction and must be set aside.

The words "just cause" as explained in section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act are not illustrative merely, but exhaustive.

DURGA DAS CHATTERJEE died in March 1890, having, on the 6th April 1885, made his last will and testament, of which he appointed his eldest son, Annoda Prosad Chatterjee, executor. Probate of the will was granted on the 8th December 1890. In 1891, Kali Krishna Chatterjee, a minor grandson of the testator, applied, through his guardian, for a revocation of the probate; but the application was dismissed on the 25th January 1892. Later in 1892, Thakomoni Debi, the testator's widow, brought a suit for revocation of the probate and for the removal of the executor from his office. That suit was dismissed on the 24th June 1893 On the 20th February 1894, Kali Krishna Chatterjee, who had meanwhile attained majority, filed a petition under section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, for the removal of the executor, for revocation of the probate granted to him, and for the appointment of a receiver. The grounds of the petition were the misconduct of the executor and his mismanagement of the estate. On the 27th July 1894, the District Judge of Bankura, by [96] an order of that date, ordered that the probate obtained by the defendant should be revoked.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Babu Joygopal Ghose for the Appellant.

Babu Tarakishore Chowdhry for the Respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Ghose and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Bankura revoking probate of the will of one Durga Das Chatterjee. The will bears date the 6th April 1885, and the testator died in March 1890. Thereafter, the testator's eldest son, Annoda Prosad Chatterjee, the appellant before us, obtained probate as executor of that will on the 8th December 1890. Subsequently, Kali Krishna Chatterjee, the grandson of the testator (son of another son, Baroda), a minor, through his guardian applied in the year 1891 for revocation of the probate, and his application was dismissed on the 25th January 1892. Then a suit was brought in 1892 in the Subordinate Judge's Court by Thakomoni Debi, the widow of the testator, for the purpose of obtaining revocation of the said probate and removing the present appellant from his post as executor and that suit also was dismissed on the 24th June 1893. Now, Kali Krishna Chatterjee having come of age, has filed the present petition for revocation of the probate. The application purports to be made under clause 4 of the Explanation to section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act; and the learned District Judge has revoked the probate under that clause, on the ground that the executor, Annoda Prosad Chatterjee, has been guilty of misconduct and mismanagement as such executor, and that, therefore, he is not a fit and proper person to retain the management of the estate.

On appeal, it is contended that the District Judge had no jurisdiction, under clause 4, section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, to make the order he has made; and we think that this contention is sound. Clause (4) runs as follows: "That the grant has become useless and inoperative through circumstances." We think that the District Judge has misunderstood the real meaning [97] of these words. The meaning of the words "useless and inoperative through circumstances" are explained in the illustrations attached to the section; and we are unable to say that mismanagement by an executor comes within the purview of clause 4, section 50 of the Act. No doubt the question may arise whether the words "just cause," as explained in section 50, are exhaustive, or illustrative. If they are illustrative, and not exhaustive, it might be said that the District Judge had jurisdiction to remove the executor on the ground of mismanagement, but certainly not under clause 4. We think, however, that these words are exhaustive; and this view is supported by the fact that the Legislature thought it necessary to amend section 50 of Act V of 1881 by Act VI of 1889 by adding to the explanation a fifth clause relating to the wilful omission by an executor to exhibit an inventory or account, and to the exhibiting of a false inventory or account. Had the words "just cause," as explained in section 50, been merely illustrative, there would have been no necessity to add to it this fifth clause.

Further, we observe that sections 146 and 147 of the Probate and Administration Act make an executor or administrator liable for devastation or neglect to get in any part of the property, which we think also shews that the Legislature did not intend to include within the purview of section 50 of the Act a case of mismanagement by an executor. In this view of the matter, we think that the order of the learned Judge is based upon a misconception of the law, and that therefore it must be set aside.

We may add that this decision will not debar the respondent from making an application to the District Judge under clause 5, section 50 of the Act, or from making any other application as he may be advised.

The appeal is decreed with costs.

Second Appeal—Remand to the Appellate Court—Additional evidence in Appellate Court—Finding of fact upon evidence taken after remand—Procedure in the second Court of Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 568, 584, 585, 587.

In a second appeal, the High Court set aside the decrees of the lower Courts on the ground that certain issues raised in the suit were not considered by those Courts, and remanded the case to the Lower Appellate Court for a proper decision of the case. The Lower Appellate Court took evidence on the issues not tried before, and came to findings of fact on that evidence.

Held, that the Lower Appellate Court tried the case, not as an original case, but as an appeal, and acting under the powers given to it took fresh evidence.

Held, that on second appeal the High Court is precluded by the Code of Civil Procedure from going into facts, and that restriction of power is not confined only to cases where evidence is taken in the first Court.

Gopal Singh v. Jhakri Rai (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 37) followed. Balkishen v. Jasoda Kuar (I. L. R., 7 All., 765) referred to. Hinde v. Brayan (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 52) not followed.

THE facts material to this report and the arguments on either side appear from the judgment of the High Court. The material portion of the previous order of the High Court remanding the case to the Lower Appellate Court was:

" For the foregoing reasons, the judgments of the Courts below cannot stand, and for the proper decision of the case the following questions require determination :—

" First. —Whether the sale to the plaintiff was made with intent to defeat or delay the defendants who were judgment-creditors of Sheolochan, and whether the plaintiff purchased otherwise than in good faith and for fair value.

" Second.—Whether the conduct of the plaintiff, in asking for and obtaining time to complete his purchase with an offer to pay [99] off all the decree holders of Sheolochan, in any material way misled the defendants or influenced their conduct as to their mode of seeking satisfaction of their decree against Sheolochan ?

" If either question is answered in the affirmative the plaintiff must fail, but if both are answered in the negative, he will succeed.

" The result then, is, that the decrees of the Courts below must be set aside, and the case sent back to the Lower Appellate Court for the determination of the case in accordance with the directions contained in this judgment."

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Pugh, Babu Hem Chandra Banerjee, Babu Raghunandan Pershad and Babu Jogendra Chandra Ghose for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee for the Respondents.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1107 of 1895, against the decree of G. G. Dey, Esq., District Judge of Shahabad, dated the 13th of March 1895, affirming the decree of A. C. Mitter, Esq., Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 21st of December 1891.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows :—

This case comes up to us on appeal from an order made by the District Judge of Shahabad on a remand by this Court.

The first and only important question in the case is whether the appellant is entitled to treat the appeal as a first appeal on the question decided by the Lower Appellate Court on the evidence which has been taken subsequent to the remand. As we expressed ourselves after the argument on this portion of the case had been concluded, we are of opinion that the ordinary rules of second appeals apply to this appeal, and that it is not competent for us to interfere with the findings of the Lower Appellate Court on the facts.

The question has arisen in this way:—

Two of the issues framed, the 1st and the 7th, were not considered by either of the lower Courts. When the case came up on appeal to this Court, the learned Judges forming the Division Bench by which the appeal was heard, after discussing the other questions in the appeal, considered that those issues should be tried. They framed two issues, which evidently were intended to put in clear and unambiguous language the questions which the parties had raised in the 1st and 7th issues. The first of [100] those issues as raised in this Court was, "whether the sale to the plaintiff was made with intent to defeat or delay the defendants, who were judgment-creditors of Sheolochan, and whether the plaintiff purchased otherwise than in good faith and for fair value ;" and the second was, "whether the conduct of the plaintiff, in asking for and obtaining time to complete his purchase with an offer to pay off all the decree-holders of Sheolochan, in any material way misled the defendants or influenced their conduct as to their mode of seeking satisfaction of their decree against Sheolochan ?" Having pointed out that the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court could not stand, the learned Judges set aside not only the decree of the Lower Appellate Court, leaving the appeal to be determined on those issues by that Court, but also the decrees of the first Court. They did not send the case back to the first Court whose decree was set aside, but they sent it to the Lower Appellate Court "for the determination of the case in accordance with the directions contained in this judgment." The learned Judges did not in their judgment expressly say whether fresh evidence was to be taken, but inasmuch as no evidence had been taken with regard to one of the issues at any rate, the 1st, the taking of fresh evidence was obviously contemplated.

It is contended before us that the practical effect of this order is to make the Lower Appellate Court retry the case on remand as an original Court, and that there is an appeal to this Court on the facts. The learned Judges of this Court did not order the case to be tried by the Lower Appellate Court otherwise than in exercise of the jurisdiction which it possessed in this case as a Court of Appeal, and the case when it went down was treated in the Lower Appellate Court as an appeal. The learned Judge treats it as an appeal throughout his judgment, and, as far as we can see, the parties did the same.

The idea that this was an appeal on the facts was not present to the minds of the legal advisers of the parties when this appeal was first presented to this Court. Although, of course, the appellant ought not to be impeded by any mistaken view, if it was a mistaken view, of his legal advisers, at any rate this indicates that the parties treated this order of remand as an order to [101] the Lower Appellate Court to try the appeal before him. In our opinion the Lower Appellate Court tried the case as an appeal, and acting under the powers given to it took fresh evidence. So the question reduces itself really to this, whether, when a Lower Appellate Court takes fresh evidence, the High Court can in second appeal consider that evidence. There is no doubt that that question has been expressly determined by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Gopal Singh v. Jhakri Rai (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 37); and the same question was determined by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Bal Kishen v. Jasoda Kuar (I. L. R., 7 All., 765). There are remarks made in a case, Hinde v. Brayan (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 52), which might tend to a contrary conclusion.

We are of opinion that the decision of this Court is one which we ought to follow. It has not, as far as we know, been doubted by any subsequent decision, and we believe it to be in accordance with what was intended by the Civil Procedure Code. If it was intended that there should be any general rule that in every case where evidence is taken on a question of fact the parties would be entitled to the decision of two Courts, such general intention would have been expressed in the Code. On second appeal we are precluded by the Code from going into facts, and that restriction of our powers is not confined only to cases where the evidence is taken in the first Court. If it was intended that we should go into and discuss the evidence taken by the Lower Appellate Court, we should expect to find an exception providing for that event included in the section which deals with our powers in second appeals. In our opinion we cannot go into the facts. So it remains for us to see whether there is any exception to be taken to the findings arrived at by the lower Court. Those findings are expressly directed to the issues which were laid down for the decision of the Lower Appellate Court by this Court. As to the first issue the first portion of it, it is true, is answered in favour of the appellant, but the second portion is answered against him, and it is found that he did not purchase in good faith or for fair value. Therefore, the first question is not answered in the negative, one portion of it being answered in [102] the affirmative It follows, therefore, according to the decision in this case that the plaintiff fails. We are not competent, in appeal after remand, to question in any way the decision of this Court in the case.

Some observations were addressed to us as to whether the arrangement in this case could be treated otherwise than one come to in good faith. There is undoubtedly evidence upon which the Lower Appellate Court could arrive at the conclusion it has come to in this matter. Leaving aside everything else, the arrangement as to the gift of the garden and house to the son is one which any Court dealing with facts must have viewed with the greatest suspicion, even if it did not affirm that it tainted the whole transaction with fraud. An arrangement of that kind could only have been come to for the purpose of defeating at any rate some classes of creditors. It is difficult to conceive how it could be otherwise. That circumstance of itself is abundant evidence upon which the learned Judge could arrive at the conclusion he has come to.

With regard to the other question, that has been found in the affirmative. Therefore the plaintiff fails.

In our opinion this appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs. In order to prevent any misapprehension as to the effect of our judgment, we think we ought to make it clear by saying that the appeal is dismissed, and the suit stands dismissed with all costs.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 17th September, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

Calcutta Trades Association

Attachment—Subjects of attachment—Pay of Military Officer in Indian Staff Corps—Officer not officer of Regular Forces—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 266, clause (h)—Army Act (1881) section 151—Public Officer.

An Officer of the Indian Staff Corps is a "Public Officer" within the meaning of clause (h) of section 266 of the Civil Procedure Code, read with [103] the interpretation clause (section 2) of the Code. His pay is therefore subject to attachment in execution of a decree against him, but the operation of the attachment must be restricted to pay received from the Indian Government. The pay of an Officer of the Regular forces is not so subject to attachment.

The attachment in this case was allowed subject to a decree previously passed against the defendant by which, under section 151 of the Army Act, half his pay was ordered to be deducted and applied in payment of the amount due under that decree—the repeal of that section not affecting a decree previously passed under it, and the right to enforce such a decree continuing until satisfaction has been obtained.

THIS was an application in chambers for the attachment in execution of a decree of the pay of Major H. G. Ryland, an Officer of the Indian Staff Corps and Assistant Commissary General at Allahabad, in the hands of the Pay Examiner, Bengal Command, Military Accounts Department, Calcutta. In another suit against him a decree had been passed, in execution of which half his pay had, under section 151 of the Army Act, 1881, been ordered to be deducted and applied in satisfaction of the decree. Section 151 has since been repealed by subsequent Army Acts. The following note furnished by the Registrar (Mr. Belchambers) sets out fully the present state of the law.

"In 1875 the question whether the pay of a Military Officer was liable to attachment in execution under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859), was considered by the High Court of the North Western Provinces. The result is thus stated:— "The pay of a Military Officer is not expressly made liable to attachment under the provisions of that Act. If it be so liable it would be necessary for an attaching creditor to show that the pay falls within the provisions of section 205 of the Act and is a debt due to, or in some form or other the property of, the judgment-debtor. It is a general rule that a debt which the debtor cannot sue for cannot be attached, and, as far as we are able to ascertain, the pay of an Officer does not become his property until it actually reaches his hands. He is not in a position to maintain any action or suit for its recovery * * Until it can be established that the pay is a debt or property within the meaning of section 205, it cannot be attached under the provisions of Act VIII of 1859 "—Bansi Lall v. Mercer (7 All. H.C., 331).

" Subsequently by section 151 of the Army Act, 1881, it was provided that: " A Civil Court or Court of Small Causes, upon adjudging payment of any sum by any person subject to Military law, other than a soldier of the regular forces, may either award execution thereof generally, or, may direct [104] specially that the amount named in the direction, being the whole or any part of the said sum, shall be paid by instalments or otherwise out of any pay or other public money payable to the debtor, and the amount named in the direction not exceeding one-half of such pay and public money, shall, while the debtor is in India, be stopped and paid in conformity with the direction."

" This was a special enactment, the object of which was to enable a Civil Court either to stop the pay or other public money payable to an Officer, or award execution generally under the ordinary rules of procedure.

" That section has now been repealed by the Army (Annual) Act, 1895, but without affecting the right to enforce unsatisfied decrees previously obtained which is preserved by section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, (52 and 53 Vict., C. 63). An Officer is thus freed from the operation of that section except as to liabilities incurred under its provisions previous to its repeal. That being so, what is the effect of this alteration in the law in regard to his pay? Is that placed beyond the reach of his creditor?

" It appears that by the Army (Annual) Act, 1895, the Army Act was amended not only by the repeal of section 151 but also by the modification of other sections, including 136, to which was added the words " or by any law passed by the Governor-General of India in Council." That section with the added words, is as follows: " The pay of an Officer or soldier of Her Majesty's regular forces shall be paid without any deduction other than the deductions authorised by this or any other Act or by any Royal Warrant for the time being or by any law passed by the Governor-General of India in Council."

" This authorizes deductions to be made from the pay of an officer. Under this section, without the added words, only such deductions could be made as were 'authorized by this' (the Army) ' Act or by any other (English) Act, or by any Royal Warrant for the time being,' but now, with the added words the pay of an officer is also made liable to deductions under ' any law passed by the Governor-General of India in Council.'

" This suggests the question whether any law has been passed by the Governor-General in Council under which deductions can be made from the pay of an Officer.

" Act VIII of 1859, under which it was held that the pay of an Officer was not liable to attachment, was repealed. Its provisions, as re-enacted with extensive additions and modifications, are now contained in Act XIV of 1882. One of the additions to the Interpretation Clause is as follows: ' Public Officer ' means a person falling under any of the following descriptions, namely, * * * ' Every Commissioned Officer in the Military and Naval Forces of Her Majesty while serving under Government.'

[105] " A wide meaning is given to the term ' Government,' which includes the Government of India as well as the Local Government.

" Section 205, referred to in the decision of the High Court of the North West Provinces, has also been modified, and in its present form, as section 266, contains new provisions. It states what is liable to be attached in execution, including ' debts ' and ' saleable property ' and adds—' Provided that the following particulars shall not be liable to such attachment or sale.' The particulars are mentioned in various clauses; those mentioned in clause (h) with which we are immediately concerned being as follows: ' The salary of a public officer or of any servant of a Railway company or local authority to the extent of—

' (I) The whole of the salary where the salary does not exceed twenty rupees monthly;

' (II) Twenty rupees monthly where the salary exceeds twenty rupees and does not exceed forty rupees monthly; and

' (III) One moiety of the salary in any other case.

"This clause, read with the Interpretation Clause, which extends the meaning of 'Public Officer' so as to include a Military Officer, would seem to alter the previously existing conditions and to place a Military Officer on the same footing as any other Public Officer whose salary is liable to be attached under section 266. This would be so but for the words in the Interpretation Clause 'while serving under Government.'

"Military Officers not only hold their Commissions from the Crown; but Officers of the regular force, who perform purely regimental duties, also receive their pay from the Crown out of money granted by Parliament. It cannot be said that such officers are serving under the Government of India or any Local Government; or that the pay of such Officers is liable to be dealt with under the provisions of the Code applicable to Public Officers.

"Officers, whether of the British or Indian forces, are, after two years service, of which one must be in India, and a further period of probation, eligible for Commissions in the Staff Corps of one of the Indian Presidencies. Officers so commissioned leave their regiments and are employed, according as the Government of the Presidency to which these corps belong direct, in any Military or Civil employment irrespective of their ranks in the Staff corps"—Manual of Military Law, p. 259.

"Officers so employed answer the description of 'Public Officer' within the meaning of the Interpretation Clause:—

Presumably these officers while serving under Government receive pay from Government and not from the Crown, but if they also receive pay from the Crown, to such pay the decision of the High Court of the North Western Provinces would still be applicable, but not to pay receivable from [106] Government which would stand on the same footing as the pay of a Public Officer and would be liable to be dealt with as such."

Mr. Upton (Messrs. Sanderson & Co.) appeared for the applicant in chambers.

Sale, J.—This is an application for an attachment of the pay of a Military Officer in execution of a decree.

I have been furnished with a note by the Registrar, Mr. Belchambers, which gives, I think, a correct view of the present state of the law on the subject. It would appear that while the pay of an Officer of the regular forces is not liable to attachment the pay of an officer of the Indian Staff Corps is liable to attachment, the reason for the distinction between the two cases being that an Officer of the Staff Corps is a Public Officer within the meaning of clause (h), of section 266 of the Civil Procedure Code read with the Interpretation Clause, whereas an Officer of the regular forces is not.

The defendant, Major Ryland, who is described as "Assistant Commissary General, Allahabad," is, I understand, an Officer of the Staff Corps, but it appears that in another suit a decree has been obtained against him by which, under section 151 of the Army Act, half his pay was ordered to be deducted and applied in satisfaction of the amount due under the decree. Section 151 has since been repealed, but the repeal of that section, as pointed out in Mr. Belchambers' note, does not affect a decree previously passed under it. The right to enforce such a decree in the manner therein provided continues, until full satisfaction has been obtained.

The attachment asked for may be made, but it must be subject to the decree to which I have referred, and its operation must be restricted to pay which the defendant receives from Government.

Attorneys for the Applicant: Messrs. Sanderson & Co.

The 12th August, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY.

Sabhapat Singh ....Plaintiff

Abdul Gaffur and others............Defendants.*

Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 11—Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884)—Election of Municipal Commissioners—Right to vote and stand as candidate at an election – Suit for declaratory decree.

At an election of Municipal Commissioners held under the Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), S, one of the candidates, was declared to have been elected : a poll was demanded and S was again declared by the presiding officer to have been duly elected. An objection was then taken by the defeated candidates before the Magistrate of the district on the ground that some of the voters gave more votes than there were vacancies, and also on the ground that S was not qualified to be registered as a voter and to stand as a candidate for election. The Magistrate set aside the election on both grounds ; and S brought a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration of his right to vote and stand as a candidate and for a declaration that he was duly elected.

Held, that the suit was one of a civil nature, and under section 11† of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882) such a suit would lie in the Civil Court.

Held, also, that the Magistrate should not have been made a defendant in the suit, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration that the election of the plaintiff was good and valid ; but that the decree of the first Court granting a declaration of plaintiff's right to vote and stand as candidate was correct.

THIS was a suit for adjudication and declaration of plaintiff's right to vote and stand as candidate at an election of Municipal Commissioners held in Chuprah in December 1893, and for a declaration that he was duly elected at that election. The facts necessary for this report are fully given in the judgment of the High Court.

[108] Both the lower Courts decided adversely to the plaintiff's claim, and the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee and Babu Nalini Nath Sen for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader (Babu Hem Chandra Banerjee), Babu Tarak Nath Palit and Babu Kritanta Kumar Bose, for the Respondents.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee.—The Lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction. Section 15 of the Bengal Municipal Act, as amended by Bengal Act IV of 1894, saves the jurisdiction

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 722 of 1895 against the decree of G. W. Place, Esq., District Judge of Sarun, dated the 5th of February 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Chuckerbutty, Munsif of Chuprah, dated the 14th of September 1894.

† [Sec. 11 :—The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is barred by any enactment for the time being in force.

Explanation.—A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies.]

of the Civil Court. [TREVELYAN, J.—Does a suit lie for a public office like this?] Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is wide enough for declarations like these, and section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code gives a right of suit in all cases of a civil nature. There is a suit allowed on the Original Side of this Court under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, and it is not probable that a different law was intended for the mofussil. [TREVELYAN, J.—That seems to be the old jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to issue a writ of mandamus.] At all events, there is nothing to prevent a suit under section 11 of the Procedure Code, and section 15 of the Municipal Act is in favour of my contention. Then as to the merits of the case, the question of the legality of the election could have been decided by the presiding officer only and in a summary way then and there—see Rules 32 and 34, passed under the Bengal Municipal Act. All proceedings taken by the Magistrate after the order of the presiding officer are ultrâ vires. Even if the polling was bad in law, there having been no objection on that ground before the presiding officer, the declaration duly made by him was final in this case. As to the plaintiff's qualification, his name was registered as a voter and was included in the list of candidates. Rules 13 and 20. The objection raised was founded upon a want of qualification as a voter, but the register was a final record of voters, and no such objection could be raised at the election.

Babu Hem Chandra Banerjee for the respondent, the Magistrate of Sarun.—The question of qualification refers to the particular election held on the 14th December 1893: the Court cannot declare the plaintiffs to be qualified for future elections for which there [109] would be new lists. [BEVERLEY, J., referred to Rule 8.] The District Magistrate, Mr. Manisty, has been sued by name. He is not the Magistrate now, but supposing the suit to be directed against the Magistrate in his official capacity it ought to have been brought against the Secretary of State, and there should have been a notice as required by the law. Then the present suit itself is not one which can be dealt with by the Civil Court; no damages are claimed by plaintiff, but simply a question of election to an honorary public office is raised. Reading the sections of the Act and the Rules passed in 1889, it does not appear that election matters were intended to be brought before the Civil Court. The present suit is nothing better than an application for a temporary injunction under section 493 of the Civil Procedure Code, but no injury has been done; the order of the Magistrate as to the illegality of the election was a good order, and even if the suit lay for a declaration, this Court would in the exercise of its discretion decline to make any declaration in this case.

Babu Tarak Nath Palit for the respondents 2 and 3 followed the Government Pleader.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was delivered by Trevelyan, J.—This appeal raises a question of importance. The object of the suit was to obtain a declaration that the plaintiff was qualified to vote and to stand as a candidate at the election of Municipal Commissioners which was held in Chupra in December 1893. The plaintiff also asked for a declaration that at that election he had been duly elected.

The Munsif before whom the case first came gave the plaintiff a declaration as to his qualification, but held that the election at which the plaintiff contended that he was elected had not been validly held. The District Judge before whom the case came on appeal and cross-appeal has dismissed the whole suit. The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court, and the questions which have been argued before us are, firstly, whether a suit of this kind will lie at all in the Civil Court, and, secondly, whether, assuming that the Civil Court has jurisdiction to deal with questions as to the qualifications of voters and candidates and the validity of [110] elections, this is a case in which the Court can, and ought to, give a declaration of the kind asked for here.

The facts necessary for the purposes of our decision are not many. The plaintiff, when he became a candidate for this election, was on the Register of persons qualified to vote, and, therefore, it would follow under the law (Bengal Act III of 1884, section 15) that he was a person qualified for election to be a Commissioner. There were three vacancies. At the election the presiding officer, on a show of hands, declared three persons, Bunsidhur Gupta, Suraj Prashad, and Sabhapat Singh, the present plaintiff, to be elected. A poll was claimed against two of these three candidates, namely, Suraj Prashad, and Sabhapat Singh. No poll being claimed against Bunsidhur Gupta, he was declared duly elected. The election then proceeded for the purpose of filling up the remaining two vacancies. There can be no doubt that under rule 24 of the Rules of the 14th August 1889, which were made in pursuance of the Municipal Act and which have the force of law, each voter is entitled to vote for as many candidates as there are vacancies. The same Rule provides that he may give all or any number of the votes to which he is entitled to any one candidate, and that being so, and there being after Bunsidhur Gupta had been declared duly elected only two vacancies, it follows that each voter had two votes. As a matter of fact some, if not all, of the voters gave three votes. This mistake arose from the circumstance of there originally having been three vacancies. At this election the two vacancies were declared to have been filled up by the plaintiff and Suraj Prashad. That was on the 14th December. On the same day the defeated candidates put in a petition to the Magistrate, first of all complaining of the error of each voter being allowed to give three votes when they were only entitled to two. They also made a complaint with regard to the votes for Suraj Prashad, a matter which is not before us now, and they added an objection to the present plaintiff's right to be a candidate, that is his right to be on the Register. These objections were considered by the Magistrate, who held that the objection to the qualification of the plaintiff was a valid one, and that the election was irregular. He set aside the election and directed a fresh election to be held. The plaintiff then brought this suit making [111] as party defendants thereto the three defeated candidates at the election at which he had been elected, and the Magistrate of the district, Mr. Manisty, the then Magistrate, being described by name as a defendant. The Munsif restrained the fresh election by a temporary injunction. That injunction only operated up to the time when the Munsif gave his decision. The Munsif having in his decision held that the election was a bad one, a new election, we are told, has been held. These are the facts.

The first question is, does a suit lie at all for a purpose of this kind. This question must be determined with reference to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, which enacts that "the Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is barred by any enactment for the time being in force." The learned Government Pleader who appears in this case, as we understand, for the Magistrate and the learned Vakil Babu Tarak Nath Palit, who appeared for two of the defeated candidates, were unable to draw our attention to any enactment barring the cognizance of a suit of this kind by a Civil Court. There is no doubt that the suit is one of a civil nature. It is for the purpose of maintaining a civil right of a most important description, and in reality when we come to examine it there can be no reason whatever why a civil court should not determine a question of the kind. This Court in its Original Jurisdiction has power given to it by the Specific Relief Act (section 45) to determine a right like this and many other questions connected with the exercise of a similar franchise in this city. It would, as pointed out to us, be somewhat extraordinary to suppose that whereas rights of voters and candidates in this city can be amply safe-guarded and questions with regard to them determined in Calcutta, there can be no way of upholding and maintaining rights in the districts. The contention of the defendants would make the election officers the sole tribunal for the determination of a question of this kind. For this we know of no authority. Before we can say that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is excluded, it is necessary for us to find that there is an enactment barring their jurisdiction. There is nothing in the Municipal Act or any other enactment which would bar such jurisdiction, and [112] we can well understand that the Legislature did not desire to exclude all remedy for what might be a serious wrong. Moreover, on the question as to whether the Legislature intended to exclude the jurisdiction of Civil Courts, we have the language of a subsequent enactment on the same subject by the same Council. It is true that that enactment was passed after this particular election was held, but there are occasions where expressions used by the Legislature in subsequent enactments can be used for the purpose of interpreting earlier enactments. In 1894 an Act was passed amending the Act under which this election was held, and by that amending Act the following proviso was inserted in section 15, which deals with the matters now in question, namely, the mode of electing Municipal Commissioners: "Provided that nothing contained in this section, nor in any rules made under the authority of this Act, shall be deemed to affect the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts." That obviously shows that it was in the mind of the Legislature which passed this amending Act, that the Civil Courts had some jurisdiction (whatever it may be) with regard to elections under section 15, that is, the section relating to the election of Municipal Commissioners. This reference can only relate to suits. The provisions of section 45 of the Specific Relief Act do not apply to elections under the Act now in question, so the only way Civil Courts can exercise jurisdiction with regard to Municipal elections outside Calcutta is by way of suit. We invited the learned Government Pleader to suggest to us any suit except a suit of the class now in question over which the Civil Courts, according to his contention, might have jurisdiction in determining any question under section 15. He was unable to suggest any possible suit other than a suit of the kind we are now discussing. To carry his argument further the learned Government Pleader invited our attention to a letter from the Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal to all the Commissioners of Divisions. There can be no doubt that a letter of that kind could not be used for the construction of an Act. As a matter of fact there is nothing in it in the smallest degree favouring the view of the defence, and it only shows, as is shown by the amending Act, that it was contemplated that the Civil Courts had some jurisdiction, at any rate, in matters of this kind.

[113] Lastly, we would refer to the terms of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which, if anything, furnishes an argument in favour of the suit. That section says: "Any persons entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny his title to such character or right, and the Court may, in its discretion, make therein a declaration that he is so entitled." The words "legal character" are wide enough to include the right of franchise and also a right of being elected as a Municipal Commissioner. The defendants are persons who, both before and after the institution of the suit, denied the title of the plaintiff to such character. Therefore, we think that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act tends to show that a suit like the present can be brought under that section.

Holding, as we do, therefore, that a suit lies, the next question which arises is, against whom does it lie? The suit has been brought against the defeated candidates, at whose instance the Magistrate set aside the election, that is to say, at whose instance the Magistrate interfered with the right which is claimed in this suit. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act allows a suit against any person denying or interested to deny the right of the plaintiff to any legal character. So far as the persons who filed the petition to the Magistrate are concerned the suit must lie against them, if it lies at all. They denied the right of the plaintiff and put in force machinery which excluded his exercise of that right. Of all persons they must be the proper persons to be sued for the purpose of determining questions as to the right, which they have denied. It is said by Babu Hem Chandra Banerjee that the suit is not properly instituted against the Magistrate, and that it ought to have been instituted against the Secretary of State. The learned Judge also seems to have been of that opinion. It does not appear that at the time when the law requires objections of that kind to be taken, any objection was made to the omission of the Secretary of State from the category of defendants, so an objection as to his being omitted cannot now be entertained, and, indeed, we are not prepared to say that the Secretary of State was a necessary party. The question remains as to whether the Magistrate ought to have [114] been made a defendant. Some question was raised in the lower Courts as to whether the Magistrate ought to be made a party by name; and the learned Judge has held that it was incorrect of the plaintiff to sue the Magistrate by name. This is not a suit, as we understand, brought against Mr. Manisty personally, and although it may be an error, it is merely surplusage to put in the name of the gentleman who happens to be holding the office of Magistrate. No one has in any way been misled by the mistake of adding Mr. Manisty's name on the record. We find that the gentleman who succeeded him in office puts in a written statement which he described as being filed on behalf of the Magistrate of Sarun. He at that time, in May 1891, accepted the position that the Magistrate was being sued and not Mr. Manisty personally; and as far as we can make out it was the Magistrate of the District who has conducted this defence. Therefore, we think, that the case must be treated as if the Magistrate was sued.

It is exceedingly doubtful whether there is any right at all against the District Magistrate as such. What he did was done in pursuance, or at any rate purported to be done in pursuance, of authority given to him by law. There is a question whether he had any authority to do what he did, and whether the presiding officer was not the only person who could have acted in the matter; but even if that be so, the Magistrate acted bonâ fide in pursuance of what he believed to be the duties of his office, and therefore he would not be liable to an action in respect of it. He would certainly not be liable to any action for damages, and as far as a declaration against him is concerned, this is not a matter in which he really had any interest. It is true that in a written statement he raises a defence, but the Vakil for the appellant does not insist upon a decree against him. We think it very doubtful whether such a decree could be given, and certainly as a matter of policy it would not be right for us to do anything which would compel Magistrates of districts to be brought in in suits of this kind when the contest is really one between the parties who have opposed one anoher at an election. So far therefore as this appeal is against the Magistrate, we think it must be dismissed.

To proceed with the case as regards the other defendants, we have held that the suit lies and lies against them. So far as the [115] suit is for a declaration that the election of the plaintiff was a good election we agree with both the lower Courts that the plaintiff is not entitled to that declaration.

There is no doubt that the election was invalidated by the defect to which we have referred, namely, that the voters were allowed three votes although there were only two vacancies at the time. Even if we accede to the contention of the appellant that this question of the validity of the election could only have been determined there and then by the presiding officer under the terms of Rule 34 of the Rules to which we have referred, and although he may be correct in his contention that the subsequent proceedings before the Magistrate were ultrâ vires, yet we think we ought not to give a declaration that the election was a good one unless we are satisfied that it was free from reproach in every respect. There can be no doubt that the voters wrongly were allowed more votes than they were entitled to, and that was a defect which in our opinion ought to have vitiated the election at the time, and would have justified the presiding officer in setting it aside. We ought not to do anything to validate an election which is open to this very grave objection.

To deal with the further questions, the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to vote at this election as being on the Register. The defendants' objection was that the plaintiff did not come within the definition of a " resident " to be found in Rule 1, paragraph (d) of the Rules of the 14th August 1889 to which we have referred. It is unnecessary for us to discuss the application of that Rule to this case, as in the first place this question has been determined in favour of the plaintiff, and, in the second place, it was not an objection which could be raised at that stage. Rule 13 provides: " The register as amended by the Magistrate after the hearing and decision of claims and objections shall be considered as the final register of persons entitled to vote at the election, and no person whose name does not appear in the register shall be permitted to vote." The plaintiff's name was on the register.

Then as regards his right to be a candidate for election, we come to Rule 20, which says: " The final list of candidates shall be published in each Ward and at the Municipal Office, or if there is no Municipal Office, at such place as the Magistrate may appoint, at least [116] one week before the date fixed for the commencement of the elections. No candidate whose name is not contained in such list shall be eligible for election." The plaintiff's name was included in that list.

Then with regard to the manner of holding elections we find it laid down how objections are to be made and what objections can be made. Rule 32 says: " When a poll is demanded the names of the voters and the votes given by them shall then and there be recorded by the presiding officer, or by the members of the election committee under his personal supervision. All objections to voters, shall, if possible, be summarily decided by the presiding officer after reference to the register. No objections shall be entertained other than objections arising out of matters subsequent to registration under Rule 10." So far therefore as voters are concerned the presiding officer cannot deal with matters antecedent to the registration. Then Rule 34 says: " The presiding officer shall then and there declare such candidates as have a clear majority of votes to be duly elected." (That is what he did as a matter of fact in this case.) " Provided that if the majority for any candidate consists only of votes to which objections have been raised, and if the presiding officer has been unable to decide such objections summarily as provided by Rule 32, he shall adjourn the proceedings and report the matters to the Magistrate." But this Rule must be read with Rule 32, which states clearly that no objections can be entertained at an election other than objections arising out of matters subsequent to registration. It is true that the objection raised was not an objection to the plaintiff quâ voter but quâ candidate. But that objection was based upon his right to vote, and so it follows, we think, that the objection could not be taken at the time of the election. The effect of the objection put forward by the defendants was to dispute the right of the plaintiff not only to be a candidate but also to be a voter in the Municipality. This, in our opinion, is a matter reaching far beyond the election of December 1893. It is a matter which affects not only the plaintiff's right to vote as long as that register of voters remains unaltered, but which may seriously affect his right to vote and to be a candidate on future occasions. From every point of view we think it is a right in respect of which he is entitled to demand an adjudication by a Civil Court. [117] The learned District Judge, although he agrees with the Munsif in holding that the plaintiff was at the time of the election duly qualified both as voter and candidate, gives no reason for refusing to the plaintiff the relief to which he was entitled on the basis of that finding, and for setting aside the decree of the Munsif. In our opinion the decree of the Munsif is correct and must be restored so far as the defendants other than the Magistrate are concerned. We have already said that the appeal as regards the Magistrate must be dismissed. But we think that in this litigation, particularly for the reason that the plaintiff has failed to obtain a declaration that he was duly elected to be a Municipal Commissioner, which was the main object of this suit, the right order to make is that each party do bear his own costs.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the first Court restored so far as concerns the defendants other than the Magistrate. As regards the Magistrate this appeal is dismissed, except that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is altered by setting aside that portion of it which orders the plaintiff to pay the Magistrate's costs, the costs throughout being borne by the parties respectively.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 11th and 19th August, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Dhoroney Dhur Ghose

Practice—Inspection of Property—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 499—Judicature Acts, Order 50, Rule 3—Form of order for inspection.

The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for damages alleged to have been caused to his house by the erection by the defendant of an adjoining house. On an application by the defendant for an order allowing him or his agents 'to enter into the house of the plaintiff for the purpose of inspecting, examining and surveying the alleged injuries and for the purpose of examining the materials employed therein and the formations thereof and to dig excavations for the purpose of exposing the foundations,' it was objected by the plaintiff that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order, as the [118] house of which inspection was sought was not the 'subject of the suit' within section 499† of the Civil Procedure Code, and that if the order could be made for inspection of the house it could not be made for inspection of the house including the zenana apartments, and further that no order could be made for the excavation of the foundations.

Held, that the house and premises of the plaintiff formed the "subject of the suit" within the meaning of section 499, and under that section the Court had power to make the order applied for. Held, also, that this was a case in which the order should be made.

THE suit in which this application was made was instituted for the recovery of Rs. 5,000 as damages for certain injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff's house No. 110-2, Shambazar Street, by the manner in which the defendant constructed his house No. 110/4, Shambazar Street. The application was made on notice by the defendant for an order that the defendant or his agents might be at liberty to enter into the house of the plaintiff for the purpose of inspecting, examining and surveying the injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff's house, and also for the purpose of examining the materials employed therein and the formations thereof, and to dig excavations for the purpose of exposing such foundations. The defendant stated in his affidavit that he had frequently applied to the plaintiff to allow him inspection of his house for the purpose of examining the nature and extent of the Power to make order for detention, &c., of subject-matter, and to authorize entry, taking of samples and experiments.

† [Sec. 499 :—The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, and on such terms as it thinks fit,

(a) make an order for the detention, preservation or inspection of any property being the subject of such suit;

(b) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid authorize any person to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any other party to such suit; and

(c) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, authorise any samples to be taken, or any observation to be made or experiment to be tried, which may seem necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence.

The provisions hereinbefore contained as to execution of process shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to persons authorized to enter under this section.]

damages alleged to have been sustained, and that the plaintiff had refused to do so; that he denied that any injury had been caused to the plaintiff's house by any act or omission or negligence on his part in constructing his house No. 110/4 Shambazar Street; that the plaintiff had built his house in a careless and unworkmanlike manner without proper foundations or a proper bed of concrete over a loose soil; and that it would be unsafe for the defendant to go to trial without evidence as to the nature of the alleged injuries and the nature of the construction of and materials employed in the plaintiff's house.

The affidavit of the plaintiff was to the following effect: That the defendant had made excavations close to the wall of the plaintiff's house by which the land and buildings of the plaintiff were deprived of necessary support; that such excavations were carried out in a negligent and careless manner, and that by reason thereof the plaintiff's house was injured, its foundations [119] sank and an archway fell; that he denied that he had built his house in a careless or unworkmanlike manner; and that his house was used as a family dwelling house, and it would put him and the female members of his family to considerable trouble and inconvenience if the defendant or his agents were permitted to enter his house.

Mr. Dunne, for the Defendant, applied for an order in the above terms.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. R. N. Mittra, for the Plaintiff, opposed the application.

Mr. Pugh.—The Court has no jurisdiction to make the order asked for under section 499 of the Civil Procedure Code, and if an order can be made for the inspection of the house it cannot be made for inspection of the zenana apartments. No order can be made allowing the defendant to make excavations for the purpose of inspecting the foundations. The house is not the 'subject' of the suit within section 499. That section is taken from order 50, rule 3 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, but is not identical in terms with it. The words in order 50, rule 3 are "order for the detention, preservation, or inspection of any property or thing being the subject of such cause or matter or as to which any question may arise therein." The terms there are much wider than in section 499. That section deals with an order for the inspection of any 'property' being the subject of the suit; sub-sections (b) and (c) deal with an order authorising any person to enter upon any land or building for the purpose of taking samples or trying experiments. The section does not apply to a case like this. No such order as this could have been made in England before the Judicature Acts. Ennor v. Barwell (1 De. G. F. & J., 529). Since the Judicature Acts it is otherwise—Lumb v. Beaumont (L. R., 27 Ch. D., 356). In the case of the Nawab of Murshidabad v. Hurdut Dass (unreported, HILL, J, 16th July 1891) inspection was refused. Daniell's Chancery Practice, 6th Ed, Vol. II, p. 1804, was also referred to.

Ameer Ali, J.—The suit in which this application is made has been brought by the plaintiff to recover Rs. 5,000 for [120] damages alleged to have been caused to his house 110-2, Shambazar Street, in Calcutta, by the construction by the defendant of his premises now numbered 110-4.

The plaintiff states in substance that owing to the manner in which the defendant's house has been built the foundations of his house have sunk, and one at least of the arches has given way, and various cracks have appeared in his premises, for the repairs of which he has been put to considerable expense, and he estimates his damages at Rs. 5,000. The defendant's case, as stated in his written statement, is that the plaintiff erected his house on a defective foundation, and that the cracks which have appeared are primarily due to that circumstance and also to defective workmanship. He denies in toto that any damage has been caused to the plaintiff's premises in consequence of or as resulting from the house which he has built. As early as May 1895 the defendant applied to the plaintiff's attorney to allow him inspection of the plaintiff's premises with the object of testing how far his case as to the cause and extent of the alleged damages was correct. This was not complied with and the defendant has been compelled to seek the assistance of the Court. In a matter like this I should have expected that the plaintiff would have been advised to allow the inspection asked for readily and unhesitatingly, for obviously any objection or hindrance would be regarded with suspicion, and be likely to operate against the plaintiff. That the plaintiff and his advisers should have taken up an attitude from which it might be inferred that inspection would not suit their purpose is to say the least ill-advised.

Mr. Pugh, who appeared to oppose the application, did so on the ground that this Court had no jurisdiction to make a compelling order for inspection. That is a proposition which seemed to me to be opposed to the practice of the Court, and upon enquiry made by the Registrar at my request it appeared that orders for inspection had been made without objection, and that one had been made so recently as the 10th September 1895 by SALE, J., in the case of Greesh Chunder Seal v. Zemin.

In that case the jurisdiction of the Court was not questioned. [121] It has now been questioned, and it is necessary to consider what the Court's jurisdiction is in regard to this matter. The application is made under the provisions of section 499 of the Civil Procedure Code, which is as follows: "The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, and on such terms as it thinks fit -(a) make an order for the detention, preservation or inspection of any property being the subject of such suit: (b) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, authorize any person to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any other party to such suit . and (c) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, authorize any samples to be taken or any observation to be made, or experiment to be tried, which may seem necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence. The provisions hereinbefore contained as to execution of process shall apply mutatis mutandis, to persons authorized to enter under this section." This section is taken from and is similar to Rule 3 of Order 50 of the Rules passed under the English Judicature Acts. That rule runs thus: "It shall be lawful for the Court or a Judge, upon the application of any party to a cause or matter and upon such terms as may be just, to make any order for the detention, preservation or inspection of any property or thing, being the subject of such cause or matter, or as to which any question may arise therein, and for all or any of the purposes aforesaid to authorize any persons to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any party to such cause or matter, and for all or any of the purposes aforesaid to authorize any samples to be taken, or any observation to be made or experiment to be tried which may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence."

In section 499 of the Civil Procedure Code the words are "inspection of any property being the subject of such suit." In the English rule the words are "inspection of any property or thing, being the subject of such cause or matter, or as to which any question may arise therein." The words are disjunctive.

Mr. Pugh contended that the last words not being contained in section 499 the powers contained in rule 3 were not intended to be given by the Code. I entirely differ from that view. It seems to me that the words "or as to which any question [122] may arise therein" were omitted because it was thought that the words "the subject of such suit" were sufficiently comprehensive to cover all matters in issue in the suit. Now, it is said that the house of which inspection is sought is not the subject of the suit. Damages are sought in respect of alleged injuries to or constructive trespass on premises belonging to the plaintiff of which inspection is asked. The damages sought to be recovered must relate to some thing existing in substance which in reality would form the subject of the suit. In my mind it would be wrong to say that the house is not the subject-matter of the suit. If the substance is kept in view the meaning of the section is perfectly clear, i.e., that the matter in dispute is damages alleged to have been caused to the premises of the plaintiff in consequence of the acts of the defendant. The cases in England under the English rule clearly lay down the principle under which orders of this kind are made, and it seems to me that those cases are applicable to cases arising here. In the case of Bennitt v. Whitehouse (28 Beav., 119) inspection was sought by the plaintiff of the defendant's premises on the ground that without ascertaining the correct manner in which the defendant was working the colliery it would be impossible for the plaintiff to go to trial. The application was opposed, and the Master of the Rolls in giving his judgment stated that "it is established by the cases, that if a person is making use of his property to the injury of the property of his neighbour, the latter is entitled to an inspection in order to ascertain the extent of the injury."

That was with reference to a plaintiff's right, but it would, it seems to me, apply equally to a defendant's case. A defendant when he comes into Court is entitled to be in a position to test the statements of the plaintiff made in his plaint, and obviously the defendant in the present case cannot do so unless allowed to see the alleged cracks, &c. To refuse inspection would seriously prejudice the defendant at the trial. To allow inspection cannot possibly injure the plaintiff's case, if true. The grounds on which the application is opposed are contained in the last two paragraphs of the plaintiff's affidavit. In one of them he says he would be inconvenienced, as he is living in the house with his [123] family. In the other he says that if excavations are made they might injure the house. The Courts have always taken precautions against injury or inconvenience, and Mr. Dunne at the very outset offered to be put on conditions. In the case of Lumb v. Beaumont (L. R., 27 Ch. D., 356), which seems to me very analogous to the present case except that the application there was made by the plaintiff, and the order was made notwithstanding the objection of the defendant's Counsel that under the circumstance the Court ought not to make the order, PEARSON, J., held that the case of Ennor v. Barwell (1 De. G. F. & J., 529), which Mr. Pugh also cited, had no application, nor in my opinion has it any application to the present case. The unreported case referred to by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff has not been found. In the case of the Nawab of Murshidabad v. Hurdut Dass (unreported. HILL, J., 16th July 1891) referred to by Mr. Mitter the circumstances were totally different. The plaintiff had administered interrogatories to the defendant to compel him to give particulars of the land claimed by the plaintiff. Having failed in that he applied under section 499 for inspection, but HILL, J., thought that he ought not to give the plaintiff the order to enable him to obtain particulars which he had failed to get by interrogatories. There was in that case no question of jurisdiction. The only question was whether the Court in its discretion should make the order. I, therefore, hold that the Court has power under section 499 to make an order for inspection whenever it thinks that inspection should be had of the premises in suit, and that there is nothing in the objection which has been taken. I propose, therefore, to make this order: That leave be given to the defendant to inspect the premises of the plaintiff so far as the cracks and damages alleged by the plaintiff are concerned upon giving forty-eight hours' notice to the plaintiff; such inspection to be made by the defendant or his agents with the assistance of any expert he may employ, and on three several occasions at such hours as would not put the family of the plaintiff to any inconvenience and when they are not employed in the necessary duties appertaining to a Hindu family; the defendant in making any excavations he may be advised to make for the purpose of inspecting the foundations will abide by the opinion of [124] any expert of the plaintiff that they should not go further; the cracks and openings in the walls and excavations made by the defendant to inspect the foundations to be put right at once at the defendant's expense, and the costs of the expert employed by the plaintiff to be paid by the defendant.

Costs of this application will be costs in the cause.

NOTES.

[The only change in the corresponding section in the C.P.C., 1908, O. 39 r. 7, clause (a), is that instead of the words 'being the subject of such suit' after 'property', the following words appear:—'which is the subject-matter of such suit or as to which any question may arise therein'.]

SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE.

The 8th January, 1896.

PRESENT:

SIR W. COMER PETHERAM, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP, AND MR. JUSTICE PIGOT.

Mahomed Hossain and others.

Contract—Sale of unascertained goods—Appropriation by vendor—Passing of property—Breach of Contract—Power of re-sale—Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 107—Measure of damages.

The contract was for sale by description of 15 bales of grey shirtings (to arrive) at an agreed price. It was found that the 15 bales which were tendered by the plaintiff did answer the description, but the defendants refused to accept them, alleging that they were wrongly marked. Under the contract of sale the plaintiffs had an express power of re-sale. After giving notice to the defendants they had the goods re-sold at auction and bought them in themselves as the highest bidders. Then they brought an action for the difference between the contract price and the price realized at the re-sale, framing the suit as for loss on re-sale and not for damages for breach of the contract.

Held, the defendants having refused to accept the goods, the property in them remained in the vendors (plaintiffs), and the re-sale had no effect whatever. To such a case as this neither section 107* of the Contract Act nor the proviso for re-sale in the contract itself can have any application. Such power is required when the property in the goods has passed to the purchaser subject to the lien of the vendor for the unpaid purchase money. The plaintiffs were entitled to receive only the difference between the market price of the day and the contract price, and that was the true measure of damages.

THIS was a reference by the Second Judge of the Calcutta [125] Small Cause Court under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882) and section 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The facts of the case and the questions referred appear from the following letter of reference :—

"This is a suit to recover the loss sustained on a re-sale of goods sold by the plaintiff to the defendant, and the question referred to the High Court seems to me to be briefly this: Can a vendor exercising his power of sale buy the goods himself at a public auction duly advertized, the whole transaction being perfectly open and bonâ fide?

"The facts are these: The plaintiff by a contract, dated the 20th October 1893, sold to the defendant 15 bales (to arrive) of grey shirtings at Rs. 4-11 per piece. The 15 bales arrived, and were appropriated to the defendant, but the defendant refused to take delivery, alleging that the goods were wrongly marked.

"The plaintiff gave notice of re-sale on the 11th July 1894, and instructed Messrs. Mackenzie Lyall & Co. on the 16th July to sell 15 bales, specifying the numbers of 13 only out of the 15 bales appropriated to the defendants, the numbers of 2 other bales being excluded apparently by mistake.

"The sale was duly advertized every day for a week and the bales were sold at public auction on the 23rd July by Mackenzie Lyall & Co. at their usual sale of piece-goods to the plaintiff, who was the highest bidder amongst several bidders, at Rs. 4-4-3 per piece, on account of and at the risk of the defendant.

"The plaintiff under the contract for sale had an express power of re-sale in the following words. If they (the goods) are not taken delivery of and paid for as herein agreed, the sellers may re-sell them, or any portion of them, or at their option cancel this contract, and they have absolute discretion as to when and how to re-sell the goods. The buyers, in case of any re-sale, shall pay to the sellers any loss or deficiency arising from such re-sale, together with interest at 12 per cent per annum. Should there, however, be any surplus after payment of the contract price, charges, costs and expense of re-sale, the same shall belong to the sellers.

"I found that the defendant wrongfully refused to take delivery, that the sale to the plaintiff was a good sale and perfectly bonâ fide, and I gave a decree to the plaintiff for Rs. 600 as the loss on the 13 bales only, contingent upon the opinion of the High Court upon the points referred.

"No evidence was given as to what the plaintiff did with the goods subsequent to the re-sale. There was no suggestion either that the plaintiff concealed the fact of his being the purchaser or that the price obtained was not a proper price; but it was contended for the defence upon the authority of [126] Buchanan v. Avdall (15 B. L. R., 276) that the re-sale was vitiated by the fact of the plaintiff being himself the purchaser, and Mr. Sowton, the defendant's attorney, has submitted the following questions for the opinion of the High Court:—

"1. Have the plaintiffs a right to recover on their plaint before the Court the loss alleged to have been sustained by them at the sale held on the 23rd of July by Mackenzie Lyall & Co., without accounting for what ultimately became of the goods.

* [Sec. 107 :—Where the buyer of goods fails to perform his part of the contract, either by not taking the goods sold to him, or by not paying for them, the seller, having a lien on the goods, or having stopped them in transit, may, after giving notice to the buyer of his intention to do so, re-sell them, after the lapse of a reasonable time, and the buyer must bear any loss, but is not entitled to any profit, which may occur on such re-sale.]

Re-sale on buyer's failure to perform.

"2. Whether in case the plaintiffs have a right to recover, the amount of damages should not be limited to the expenses incurred at the re-sale.

"3. Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover any damages at all by reason of their having re-sold only 13 out of the 15 bales.

"As to the 3rd question, it is sufficient to say that the plaintiffs had power to sell a portion only of the goods under the express provision in the contract.

"As to the 2nd question, if the re-sale is bad the plaintiff cannot recover from the defendant the expenses incurred by him in effectuating such re-sale.

"The 1st question really resolves itself into this: Is the sale to the plaintiff a good re-sale? For a loss however great incurred by the plaintiff by the ultimate sale of these goods could only possibly enable him to recover the loss sustained upon a former re-sale if such re-sale is held to be bad.

"The case of Buchanan v. Avdall does not decide that a vendor exercising his power of re-sale can never become the purchaser of the goods himself, and I cannot find any decision to that effect, but it decided that the re-sale could not be upheld under the particular circumstances of the case; the particular circumstances being that the vendor hurried on the sale with the least possible notice and purchased the goods under another person's name at a price far below the real value of the goods.

"Apart from the wide power of re-sale given to the plaintiff under the contract in this case, the position of a vendor in the exercise of his power of re-sale under section 107 of the Contract Act is not that of a trustee for the vendee, neither does he sell qua pawnee, for the whole of the sale proceeds are his, and he would seem to be in a better position than that of an agent for the vendee: see Lamond v. Davall (9 Q. B., 1030), and yet an agent for sale of land even may purchase from his principal if he deals openly with him at arm's length and after a full disclosure of all that he knows with respect to the property: Murphy v. O'Shea [2 L. & J., 422 (425)].

"For these reasons I think a vendor exercising his right of re-sale may himself become the purchaser of the goods, if (as in this case) he shows that he has [127] re-sold the goods in the manner best calculated to secure the highest price possible."

Mr. C. P. Hill for the Defendants.—The sale to the defendants being a sale of unascertained goods the property in them did not pass on mere appropriation by the vendor, because that appropriation was not assented to by the purchasers: see section 83 of the Contract Act. The property remained and was in the vendor at the time of the alleged re-sale; there was therefore in fact no re-sale: see section 77 of the Contract Act. No suit for loss on re-sale would lie. The action might have been for breach of contract. In such an action the damages would be the difference between the contract price and the market price. If the plaintiff were now allowed to amend his plaint and to treat the suit as one for damages for breach, the plaintiff would still fail on the evidence as it stands, no evidence of market price having been given.

Mr. R. Allen for the Plaintiffs.—The goods were appropriated to the defendants and the property in them had passed. The re-sale was a valid re-sale. If the suit be treated as one for damages for breach, then the price fetched at the auction sale is good evidence of the market price, and damages may be assessed on that.

The opinion of the High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., PRINSEP, J., and PIGOT, J.) was delivered by

Petheram, C.J. (Prinsep, J., concurring).—My answers to the questions are:—

1. The plaintiffs cannot on the plaint before the Court recover the loss alleged by them to have been sustained at the sale held on the 25th July.

2. In an action properly framed the amount of damages would not be limited to the expenses incurred at the sale.

3. In an action properly framed the plaintiffs would not be prevented from recovering damages because they only professed to sell 13 out of the 15 bales.

The case has been entirely misunderstood, and neither of the questions proposed really arises in it at all.

The contract was for the sale of 15 bales of grey shirtings, and would have been satisfied by the delivery of any 15 bales which answer to the description in the contract.

It is found by the Judge that the 15 bales which were tendered [128] by the plaintiffs did answer the description, but as they were at once refused by the defendants and were never taken by them into their possession, the property in the goods never passed to the purchasers but remained in the vendors in the same way that it was vested in them before the tender. The case is the simple one of a breach of a contract to accept and pay for goods sold by description at an agreed price in which the measure of the damage is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time of the breach. As the property in the goods remained in the vendors that which took place at the sale had no effect whatever, as the plaintiffs were merely offering their own goods for sale, and when they were knocked down at their bid, they only bought in their own goods. To such a case as this neither section 107 of the Contract Act nor the proviso for re-sale in the contract itself can have any application, as no such power is required to enable a man to sell his own goods. Such powers are required when the property in the goods has passed to the purchaser subject to the lien of the vendor for the unpaid purchase money, and it is to that class of cases that both the proviso and the section apply.

In the present case the right of the plaintiff was to recover the difference, if any, between the contract price and the market price at the time of the refusal. No such case was made in the plaint or at the hearing, and there is no evidence of the market price unless the fact that a certain price was obtained at the auction can be so treated, but, as Mr. Hill pointed out, that cannot be, as it was not tendered for that purpose and no question as to the market rate was raised.

The proper course in this case would have been to amend the plaint by adding an averment that the market price at the time of the breach was less than the contract price, and by adding a claim for damages on that basis. Then at the trial evidence might have been given of what the market price was at the time when the goods were refused, and the judgment should have been for the difference if any was shown to have existed.

Small Cause Court, Presidency Towns—Practice and Procedure—Judgment contingent upon opinion of the High Court—Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882), section 69—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 373, 617, 618, 622.

The Small Cause Court passed a decree for the plaintiffs, but contingent upon the opinion of the High Court. On the reference the High Court decided that upon the plaint before the Court the plaintiffs could not recover Held, that the Small Cause Court on the receipt of the copy of the judgment of the High Court was bound to enter judgment for the defendants.

IN this case the Small Cause Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs, but contingent upon the opinion of the High Court under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882). Upon the reference it was held by the High Court that the plaintiffs could not recover on the plaint before the Court. The judgment of the High Court was transmitted to the Small Cause Court, and subsequently the Officiating Second Judge of that Court allowed the suit to be withdrawn with liberty to the plaintiffs to bring a fresh suit. Thereupon the defendants obtained this rule under section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why the order of the Small Cause Court allowing the suit to be withdrawn should not be set aside.

Mr. Allen for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee for the Defendants.

Ameer Ali, J.—The question involved in this rule is of some importance. The parties showing cause brought a suit in the Small Cause Court for damages alleged to have accrued to them in consequence of the refusal of the defendants in that suit, the now applicants, to take delivery of certain goods they had agreed to purchase from the plaintiffs. On such refusal the plaintiffs re-sold the goods, and then sued for the difference between the [130] contract price and the price obtained at the re-sale. It appears that at the re-sale the plaintiffs themselves bought in the goods The objections raised by the defendants at the hearing of the suit were overruled by the learned judge of the Small Cause Court, who held that there was no objection to the plaintiffs having themselves purchased the goods on the re-sale, and that they were entitled to recover the amount claimed.

The judgment, however, was made contingent on the opinion of the High Court. When the reference to the High Court came on for hearing, it was found that none of the questions submitted for consideration really arose in the suit. And the High Court's answer to the first question was "the plaintiffs cannot on the plaint before the Court recover the loss alleged by them to have been sustained at the sale held on the 25th July."

The learned Judges then proceeded to say : "In an action properly framed the amount of damages would not be limited to the expenses incurred at the sale. * * * In an action properly framed the plaintiffs would not be prevented from recovering damages because they only professed to sell 13 out of the 15 bales. * * * The case has been entirely misunderstood, and neither of the questions proposed really arises in it at all. * * * The proper course in this case would have been to amend the plaint by adding an averment that the market price at the time of the breach was less than the contract price, and by adding a claim for damages on that basis. Then at the trial evidence might have been given of what the market price was at the time when the goods were refused, and the judgment should have been for the difference if any was shown to have existed."

The judgment of the High Court was transmitted to the Small Cause Court, and the Officiating Second Judge read it out, and on the 29th of January 1896 after certain adjournments allowed the suit to be withdrawn with liberty to the plaintiffs to bring a fresh suit. Thereupon on the 21st of May last the defendants obtained a rule from this Court calling on the other side to show cause why the order of the Small Cause Court made in the suit should not be set aside, and why this Court should not pass such other order thereon as it should think fit.

The rule was granted under section 622 of the Civil Procedure [131] Code on the ground that the Judge had acted without jurisdiction, or if with jurisdiction then "illegally or with material irregularity."

Mr. Allen showed cause for the plaintiffs, and his contention is that the Small Cause Court Judge acted rightly in making the order under section 373 of the Civil Procedure Code. It must be borne in mind that the reference to this Court was made under section 617 of the Civil Procedure Code coupled with section 69 of the Small Cause Court Act. It is unnecessary to refer particularly to section 617, but the provisions of section 618 should be considered. That section runs thus :—

"The Court may either stay the proceedings or proceed in the case, notwithstanding such reference, and may pass a decree or order contingent upon the opinion of the High Court on the point referred ; but no execution shall be issued, property sold, or person imprisoned, in any case in which such reference is made, until the receipt of a copy of the judgment of the High Court upon such reference "

Section 619 is as follows: "The High Court shall hear the parties to the case in which the reference is made in person or by their respective pleaders, and shall decide the point so referred, and shall transmit a copy of its judgment under the signature of the Registrar to the Court by which the reference was made: and such Court shall, on the receipt thereof, proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court."

It should be observed that the words "the case" in the last part of the section refer to "the case" in the first part, showing clearly that what is intended is the suit and not the subject of the reference. In this case the evidence had been taken, and the Judge had come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree and had accordingly passed a decree in their favour.

The High Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the loss alleged on the plaint before the Court. In other words they held that the plaintiff's suit as it then stood must fail. They proceeded to give reasons and to state what might have been done if the plaintiffs had taken another course, but the conclusion was that the plaintiff having taken the course he had, the suit must fail, and this they expressed most clearly in their judgment which was transmitted to the Small Cause Court.

[132] Section 619 provides that on transmission of a copy of the judgment of the High Court, "under the signature of the Registrar to the Court by which the reference was made, such Court shall, on the receipt thereof, proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court."

It has been contended that under that section, on receipt of the judgment of the High Court, the Small Cause Court was bound to declare its own judgment rescinded, but having done that it was then at liberty to proceed with the case as it liked. This contention carried to its legitimate extent must land us in serious difficulties. A case may, as in the present instance, proceed to decree contingent upon the opinion of the High Court. That Court may hold that the action as framed was not maintainable. If the contention be well founded, the Small Cause Court may, after a suit has been decided, give the plaintiff leave to amend his plaint and proceed with the suit de novo. This may happen any number of times, for there would be nothing to restrict the discretion of the Small Cause Court. Such an eventuality would not be likely to occur in practice except rarely, but it may be referred to as a fair test to apply in the construction of the section. I cannot accept the argument put forward by learned Counsel, as it seems to me the meaning of the section is perfectly plain, and I must deal with the question from a common sense view.

The Small Cause Court had passed a decree for the plaintiffs contingent on the opinion of the High Court. The High Court held that upon the case presented by the plaintiffs they could not recover. As the result, judgment could only be entered for the defendants, and the Small Cause Court was bound on receipt of the decision of the High Court to dispose of the case in accordance therewith. The method suggested by Mr. Allen would render it possible to help parties who have made mistakes and who have had their cases heard and obtained the decision of the Court on the basis of those mistakes; but that certainly is not contemplated by the section, which requires the Court to "proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court." Had the case been referred in an interlocutory or intermediate stage the final judgment being withheld until the decision on the point referred to the High Court, the Small Cause Court would then have been in possession [133] of the case, but having pronounced judgment contingent upon the opinion of the High Court, which opinion was against that judgment, there was only one course to take.

It seems to me that the Small Cause Court did not possess the jurisdiction it exercised, and that it did not act in conformity with section 619 in disposing of the matter as it did. The order which it purported to make was therefore bad for want of jurisdiction, and must be set aside. The matter must go back with this expression of opinion.

Rule made absolute with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 4th May, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

In the Matter of Basharat Ali Chowdhry (a Lunatic).*

Lunatic—Residence—Lunatic resident in mofussil—Guardian of Lunatic's Person—Position of Guardian towards local Court appointing him—Temporary Suspension of Guardian—Jurisdiction of District Judge—Irregularity—Act XXXV of 1858, sections 10, 15 and 22—Superintendence of High Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 622.

Although Act XXXV of 1858 contains no express provisions as to the place of residence of a lunatic governed by the Act, it contemplates that he shall reside within the jurisdiction of the Court that has found him to be a lunatic.

The guardian of such a lunatic's person is, in matters connected with the guardianship, subordinate to the District Court which appointed him.

A guardian, having obtained leave from the District Judge to take the lunatic out of the jurisdiction for a specified time, was, at the expiration of that time, ordered to return with the lunatic to his residence within the local jurisdiction. He failed to comply with the order. Without further notice, the District Judge, by certain orders which he gave by letter and telegram through the manager of the lunatic's estate, suspended the guardian from his office, and directed him to make over the custody of the lunatic to the manager. The guardian made over the custody accordingly; [134] and then applied to the High Court under section 622† of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside those orders, and restore the custody of the lunatic to him at Calcutta (outside the jurisdiction of the Court to which the lunatic was subject). The High Court declined to interfere, even though the orders were made irregularly; because no case for its intervention had been made out, and because the lunatic ought not to be removed out of the local jurisdiction.

BASHARAT ALI CHOWDHRY was a lunatic, so found under Act XXXV of 1858. Syed Mahomed Hashim was appointed guardian of his person in 1890, and Mr. Sandys manager of his property in 1893. In November of 1894 the District Judge of Tipperah—within whose jurisdiction the lunatic resided—gave the guardian permission to take his ward for a tour in the North-West Provinces for four months, from November 1894 to February 1895. The tour was begun accordingly; but about the 22nd December 1894 the guardian and his ward went to Calcutta, where they remained until March 1895. On the 18th February 1895 the guardian wrote to the District Judge a letter asking for an extension of leave until the end of March, on the ground that the son of the lunatic desired his father's presence at his daughter's salt-tasting ceremony. The District Judge refused the extension, and directed the manager to telegraph to the guardian to return to

* Civil Rule No. 814 of 1895.

†[Sec. 622:—The High Court may call for the record of any case in which no appeal lies to the High Court, if the Court by which the case was decided appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity; and may pass such order in the case as the High Court thinks fit.]

Power to call for record of cases not appealable to High Court.

Comilla immediately. The guardian thereupon procured a medical certificate from Dr. Crombie to the effect that there was no objection to the lunatic's remaining in Calcutta, and that he (Dr. Crombie) was informed that the lunatic's mental condition was improved by the change. The guardian forwarded this certificate to the District Judge in the hope of obtaining the extension of leave which had previously been refused.

The District Judge again sent orders, through the manager, by letter and telegram, directing the guardian to return. The guardian did not at once obey the order to return, and it was repeated on the 4th March. Being asked, on the 11th March, why he did not return, the guardian replied that his ward was under medical treatment. After some further communications had passed between the manager (acting under the orders of the District Judge) and the guardian, the manager on the 14th March enquired of Dr. Gibbons (who was attending the lunatic) [135] whether he could return to Comilla, and Dr. Gibbons replied that he did not recommend the journey. On the 18th March the guardian wrote to the District Judge a letter complaining of the interference of the manager, and enclosing an opinion or certificate of Dr. Gibbons, to the effect that the lunatic had expressed a desire not to return to Comilla but to remain in Calcutta, that it would be advisable to allow him to please himself in the matter, and that forcing him to live in a place to which he appeared—from the remarks made to Dr. Gibbons—to have contracted a marked dislike, was calculated to retard his recovery.

On the 21st March the District Judge gave the manager a letter of authority to go to Calcutta and take back the ward with as little delay as possible. The letter ended with these words: "Syed Mahomed Hashim, at present guardian of the person of the ward, is hereby suspended till further orders." Mr. Sandys left for Calcutta the following day, and on the 25th March, he telegraphed to the District Judge a request for an order directing the guardian to hand over the ward to him. The District Judge telegraphed to the manager the order asked for. In pursuance of that order, the manager took over the custody of the ward from the guardian, and took him back to Comilla on or about the 28th March.

In April 1895 the guardian presented a petition to the High Court, complaining that the District Judge was not competent to pass the order of suspension, that he had no jurisdiction to order the manager to take over charge of the lunatic from the guardian, and that the District Judge before suspending the petitioner should have held a proper inquiry into the matter and given the petitioner an opportunity of being heard: he therefore prayed the Court to send for the papers relating to the matter, to set aside the orders made by the District Judge, to direct that the lunatic be made over to the petitioner at Calcutta, and to make such other order as it thought fit.

The Court (NORRIS and GORDON, JJ.) issued a rule on the District Judge and on the manager to show cause why the orders contained in the District Judge's letter and telegram dated respectively the 21st and 25th March should not be set aside, and why the custody of the lunatic should not be made over to the [136] guardian at Calcutta; and the Court further ordered the District Judge to transmit without delay all the papers connected with the matter.

The rule was heard on the 17th June 1895, when neither the District Judge nor the manager appeared to show cause either in person or by Counsel or Pleader. The District Judge had submitted to the Court a written explanation of the matter; but the Court, holding that such explanation could not be looked at, and that it was not a proper method of showing cause, made the rule absolute.

On the 15th August 1895, the District Judge and the manager applied for a review of the order making the rule absolute on the grounds that the Court had no jurisdiction to order the custody of the lunatic to be given to the guardian at Calcutta; that the applicants had in fact good and sufficient cause to show against the order if they were allowed to lay the facts before the Court; and that it was by a bonâ fide mistake on the part of the District Judge that he not only did not show cause in regular form, but also instructed Mr. Sandys that it would be unnecessary for him to appear either.

The Court granted a rule for a review, which was on the 20th December 1895 admitted by GORDON, J., sitting alone. NORRIS, J., having in the meantime retired from the Bench—his Lordship holding that the matter had not been heard on the merits, and that it ought to be.

The matter, thus re-opened, eventually came on before MACPHERSON and HILL, JJ., on the 30th April 1896.

Sir Griffith Evans, Mr. Wilson, and Moulvie Mahomed Mostafa Khan, showed cause against the rule obtained by the petitioner, the guardian.—Act XXXV of 1858 deals with lunatics not residing within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court: and although it provides for the care of the lunatic's person and the management of his property, there is no provision for allowing the lunatic to go out of the local jurisdiction. The English law must, therefore, be looked to; and under it a practice has grown up of allowing the committee of a lunatic to take the lunatic out of the jurisdiction upon giving security to bring him back when called upon. The general rule, both as to infants and lunatics is that they must not be removed [137] without leave of the Court out of the jurisdiction, Pope on Lunacy (2nd Ed.), p. 144: Tudor's Leading Cases (6th Ed.), II, 747. Here the District Judge allowed the lunatic to be taken out of the jurisdiction; and when the guardian disobeyed the order to bring his ward back, the Judge, having no power to issue a warrant, sent the manager of the lunatic's property to take charge of him and conduct him home. It is true that the Act does not specifically provide a power to suspend the guardian: but there is a power to discharge him, and that must include the power of suspension. The guardian now contends that the District Judge's orders are ultra vires: and he asks for the lunatic to be sent back from Comilla, where he ought to be, to Calcutta, where he ought not to be. He has sought the assistance of this Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, which contemplates the decision of a case, but this is not a case. Even if the Court had the power to order the lunatic to be brought to Calcutta, this is not a case in which the Court would exercise that power. The same rule must apply here as exists in England with regard to not interfering with the local jurisdiction, and the reason is that, so long as the guardian is not within the local jurisdiction, he is out of control: moreover the lunatic was not subject to the Supreme Court; and this Court not having jurisdiction over mofussil lunatics, cannot order his removal from Comilla. And as to setting aside the order of suspension, that would be quite useless except as a preliminary step to bringing the lunatic to Calcutta, which ought not to be done. It is merely an interlocutory order and therefore this Court cannot deal with it under s. 622. In re The Nizam of Hyderabad (I.L.R., 9 Mad., 256). If this order is a final order, this Court cannot deal with it until the appeal is preferred which is given by s. 22 of Act XXXV of 1858. And if it is not a final order, the petitioner must wait until a final order is made, and then prefer his appeal. The cases on section 622 are collected in Mr. Justice O'KINEALY'S work on the Code (4th Ed.), p. 547. Nothing would be gained by setting aside the order: it was merely a direction to hand over the lunatic at that time, and it was complied with.

As to the merits of the case, the affidavit put in by Mr. Sandys [138] shows that upon his arrival in Calcutta he found that the guardian was neglecting his ward, and abusing his position as guardian to promote his own interests and pleasure; that the ward was badly housed in an insanitary quarter; that the deponent was informed by the lunatic's personal servants that the guardian had used threats to his ward, and had represented to him that he was to be taken back to Comilla by force. The affidavit further declares that all acts done by the manager had been done under the direct orders or with the immediate approval of the District Judge.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Mr. St. John Stephen, and Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder, in support of the rule.—The Court has ample power under the Charter to interfere, and it ought to have the inclination. The wishes of the lunatic should have been consulted in any matter affecting his health. He wished to remain in Calcutta, and his medical adviser said he had better stay: but he was not allowed to. Again, until a guardian is duly discharged, he is entrusted with the care of the lunatic. Had he been discharged, instead of merely suspended, he could have applied for a habeas corpus. To that application there would have been no answer: indeed there is no answer to the case now. To argue that a power of removal includes a power of suspension is to beg the question. [MACPHERSON, J. It may have been improper for the Judge to give his orders to the guardian through the manager; but surely they are both subordinate to him?] Certainly not: the Act does not say anything of the kind. [MACPHERSON, J.—So long as there was a guardian, no Court, other than that of the District Judge, could interfere.] No; but the guardian has never been removed, even up to now. The Court cannot remove him conditionally; and it must do so upon notice or not at all,--see s. 18 of the Act. [MACPHERSON, J.—Does not the power to remove include the power to suspend?] No. Suppose the petitioner is suspended, who is the guardian? If he is not doing his duty he may be removed: but he must be served with a rule to show cause why he should not be removed. It is clear, then, that no order of suspension is possible, because there would be no one duly appointed to take charge of the lunatic; and that, even if the power of removal included the power of suspension, the suspension must be upon good cause, and the procedure must be the same as in the case of discharge, that is to say the Judge must proceed properly under [139] section 18 of the Act. Further, the very irregularity of these acts deprives the petitioner of the right of appeal given him by section 22 of the Act: the Court can therefore get rid of them either under section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, or under section 15 of the Charter. There has been material irregularity, and therefore this Court can interfere – In the matter of Arathoon (2 Boul., 74). No man's rights should be affected without his having a full and fair opportunity of being heard,—Cooper v. Wandsworth Board of Guardians [32 L. J. C. P., 185: 14 C.B. (N. S.) 180]. Besides, a telegram is no order of Court; there is no appeal against a telegram. And the District Judge's letter is not an order under the Act either; indeed it is no judicial order at all.

The only thing to be considered in these cases is the benefit of the lunatic. Dr. Gibbon's certificate was ample justification for the petitioner's non-compliance with the Judge's letter. No act of the Court should be against the lunatic's welfare, but it was decidedly against his welfare to make him undertake a long and fatiguing journey like that from Calcutta to Comilla. It is argued that the guardian was in contempt: I deny that. It is then suggested that he wished to remain in Calcutta for his own interests. But even if he did stay in Calcutta that is no reason for depriving him of the custody of his ward. In In re Bruere (L. R., 17 Ch. D., 775) a person resident out of the jurisdiction was appointed committee of a lunatic upon his giving security. If Mr. Sandys had acted in England as he has acted here, he would have been in high contempt,—see Elmer's Law of Lunacy, p. 58. The petitioner had no other course open to him than the one he has adopted. He very reasonably asks to be restored to the guardianship; and he is willing to give security to the satisfaction of the Court if the Court will allow the lunatic to remain in or near Calcutta.

The Advocate-General then applied for leave to read an affidavit in reply filed by the petitioner. The Court gave him leave, and also gave permission to Counsel on the other side to comment on the affidavit. The petitioner, in the affidavit, denied in toto the statements sworn to by Mr. Sandys; he complained of that gentleman's interference, because the petitioner was in [140] no sense subordinate to him: he deposed that it was not his pleasure or interest to remain in Calcutta, inasmuch as in March 1895 his wife, who resided at Comilla, was seriously ill, and she died in April 1895; and he set up Dr. Gibbon's certificate or report as a justification for his conduct in keeping his ward in Calcutta.

C. A. V.

On the 4th May 1896 the judgment of the Court (Macpherson and Hill, JJ.) was delivered in the following terms:—

We have read the affidavits and have heard learned Counsel on both sides, and are clearly of opinion that this is not a matter in which we should interfere even if we could properly do so.

It appears that Basharat Ali Chowdhry, a resident of the Tipperah District, was many years ago declared under Act XXXV of 1858 to be a lunatic by the Chief Civil Court of that District. When the occurrences complained of took place, Mr. Sandys was the appointed manager of his estate, and the petitioner, Syud Mahomed Hashim was the appointed guardian of his person. The latter under the Act was charged with the care and maintenance of the lunatic ward, but unquestionably he was in the performance of his duties in complete subordination to the Civil Court, which appointed him and could remove him for sufficient cause.

On the 18th November 1894 the petitioner and the lunatic were allowed to leave the Tipperah District, for a 4 months' tour in the Upper Provinces, the object being to give the lunatic the advantage of change of air and scene. On the 22nd December they went to Calcutta and remained there till the 18th February 1895, when the petitioner applied to the District Judge for the extension of the time allowed for tour. This was refused, and he was directed to return immediately with his ward. We need not refer in detail to the correspondence which then ensued, and which is set out in the affidavits; it is enough to say generally that the petitioner was, through Mr. Sandys, repeatedly directed to return with his ward, and that he made repeated excuses for not doing so, mainly on the ground that the ward was unwilling to go, and that he had been placed under medical treatment, which rendered it inadvisable that he should go.

On the 21st March the District Judge sent Mr. Sandys to [141] Calcutta to bring back the ward, and gave him a letter which concluded thus: "Syud Mahomed Hashim, at present guardian of the person of the ward, is hereby suspended until further orders." On the 25th he telegraphed to Mahomed Hashim to make over the ward to Mr. Sandys immediately. The ward was made over and taken back to Tipperah, and a copy of the Judge's letter of the 21st was sent by Mr. Sandys to the petitioner. We are asked to do two things,—to reinstate the guardian, and to direct that the lunatic be made over to his care in Calcutta: for that purpose the lunatic must be taken out of the jurisdiction of the Court which has control over him to a place where that Court would have no control over either him or the guardian. We have to consider the interests of the lunatic quite apart from the interests of the guardian, and it in no way follows that the interests of both are the same.

Act XXXV of 1858 certainly contemplates that a lunatic who is brought under the operation of the Act should remain where he ordinarily resides, that is within the jurisdiction of the Court which has found him to be a lunatic, and which has appointed the manager of his estate and the guardian of his person. The Act does not provide for residence out of the jurisdiction, although there may be cases, in which this is very desirable for a time at least. In England it has been allowed, on the committee giving security to produce the lunatic when called upon to do so.

Possibly this Court would interfere if a strong case was made, and a District Court had unreasonably and improperly refused permission. We need not however consider what the power of the Court in this respect is, as in our opinion no case for the exercise of it in the interest of the lunatic has been made. We are not satisfied that it was in March 1895, much less than it is now, necessary for the lunatic to remain in Calcutta. It would require much stronger proof than is furnished by the affidavit of the petitioner to induce us to direct the removal of the lunatic from the jurisdiction of the Court which has control over him. We may add that the District Judge has shown no disinclination to allow the lunatic to leave the jurisdiction when it was considered for his benefit to go, and there is no [142] reason to suppose that he will not continue to do what he considers beneficial to him.

Even, therefore, if we considered that the Judge should have allowed the lunatic to remain in Calcutta in March 1895, we could not, on the materials before us, direct that he be sent back there.

Now as regard the guardian. Some strong comments have been made on the action of Mr. Sandys, the irregularities in the proceedings of the Judge, and the injustice said to have been done to the petitioner, and we think it right to express briefly our view of the matter.

The Judge was certainly under the impression that the petitioner wished to remain in Calcutta for his own convenience rather than for the benefit of the ward, and a perusal of the affidavits has failed to convince us that the impression was wrong.

From the 22nd December to the 18th February we hear nothing of the lunatic being under medical treatment, and the application of the last mentioned date had nothing to do with his condition mental or bodily. When that failed he was taken to a leading practitioner, who gave a very guarded certificate to the effect that there was no objection to the lunatic remaining longer in Calcutta, and that his mental condition was improving under the effect of change. The latter view was obviously, however, not the result of personal observation, and must have been based on information received. The certificate when submitted to the Judge did not produce the desired effect, and it is not till the 11th March that there is any suggestion of the lunatic being put under medical treatment for the infirmity from which he had been suffering for so many years. On the 17th March a certificate was obtained from another leading practitioner, and we do not doubt the truth of what is stated in it. To our minds it does not, however, prove very much, and furnishes no sufficient excuse for the disobedience of the guardian. The lunatic ward had not been and was not then suffering from any illness which prevented his return, and the idea of putting him under treatment for his mental infirmity was clearly an afterthought.

We must, however, say that the Judge's mode of communicating with the guardian through Mr. Sandys was not right, and [143] probably created unnecessary friction. The guardian was not subordinate to the manager, and many of the orders, which were very peremptory, did not even purport to be in the Judge's name, although it was doubtless known that they emanated from him. The manager also sent him a letter containing serious reflections on his character, which certainly ought not to have been sent.

It is argued that the order for suspension was illegal and that the guardian has been greatly prejudiced, as, if there had been an order for removal properly communicated, he would have had a right of appeal. We do not think he is entitled to any consideration on this account. He was, when suspended, acting in contempt of the Judge's authority, and he has never since made submission to it. He has not attempted to account to the Judge for his conduct or asked to be reinstated, and he cannot, under the circumstances, gain anything by the omission to make a final order for his removal. He wants, indeed, now to be reinstated on his own terms, which are, apparently, that he is to remain in Calcutta, and that the lunatic ward is to be brought from Tipperah and made over to his care here. This cannot be allowed.

The rule is discharged. We make no order as to costs.

H. W. Rule discharged.

[In (1908) 32 Mad., 253, it was held that the District Judge who appointed a guardian for a lunatic under Act XXXV of 1858 had jurisdiction to make an order requiring such guardian to obtain his permission before marrying the lunatic

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1895), section 22, clause (2) —Co-owner's purchase of occupancy right, Effect of.

There is no law which prevents one of several co-proprietors from holding the status of a tenant under the other co-proprietors of land which appertains to the common estate.

The effect of the purchase, by one co-owner of land, of the occupancy right, is, not that the holding ceases to exist, but only the occupancy right which is an incident of the holding. Sitanath Panda v. Pelaram Tripati (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 869) referred to.

[144] THE plaintiff owned an 8-annas share of a certain taluk, and the defendant No. 1 owned the remaining 8-annas share. The latter brought a suit against his tenant for his share of the arrears of rent; and in execution of the decree which he obtained, he put up the holding for sale and purchased it himself. The plaintiff then sued the defendant for khas possession to the extent of his share in the jote, alleging that under section 22, clause 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the holding was extinguished by the defendant's purchase.

* Appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent No. 50 of 1894, against the decree of the Hon'ble HENRY BEVERLEY, one of the Judges of this Court, dated the 12th of June 1894, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1927 of 1893.

The Munsif, however, held that although the occupancy right had merged, the holding was not extinguished, and that therefore the defendant was entitled to hold on as a tenant. The suit was accordingly dismissed. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge, that decision was reversed on the ground that the defendant purchased nothing, the only effect of the purchase being to extinguish the entire tenancy.

The defendant appealed to the High Court; and on the 12th June, BEVERLEY, J., set aside the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge and restored those of the Munsif. The valuation of the appeal did not exceed Rs. 50.

The judgment of Beverley, J., was as follows :—

This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to obtain khas possession to the extent of his share in a certain jote of five bighas of land in which the principal defendant had put up to sale and purchased the occupancy right of the tenant, the principal defendant being the plaintiff's co-sharer in the taluk in which the said jote is situated. The plaintiff based his suit upon the provisions of section 22, clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The Munsif held that although the clause in question declares that in a case like the present the occupancy right transferred to the defendant has ceased to exist, there is nothing in the section to warrant the proposition that the holding itself is extinguished. He held, therefore, that the principal defendant who had purchased the jote was entitled to hold it as a tenant, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to obtain khas possession of his share. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit. That decision was reversed by the Subordinate Judge, who has held that under the clause in question the pincipal defendant purchased nothing, the effect of that purchase being to extinguish the entire tenancy. He [146] says: "If the right of occupancy fails, it is difficult to make out what other right remains ; certainly the defendant cannot claim the status of an ordinary tenant against the will of the co-sharers, and if he is once allowed to hold on as a tenant, the result will be that he will continue to do so for ever until partition, for the other co-parceners will have no right to turn him out, and the provisions of section 22, clause (2) in that case will become nugatory."

The question which arises in this suit has recently been considered by me in several cases. No doubt the wording of the section in question is somewhat obscure and not altogether free from doubt, but having further considered the matter, I am still of opinion that the view taken by the Munsif in this case is the right one. Section 22, clause (1) declares that when an occupancy holding is held immediately under a proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, and the entire interest of the landlord and the raiyat, meaning the occupancy raiyat, in the holding become united in the same person by transfer, succession or otherwise, the occupancy right shall cease to exist ; but nothing in this clause is to affect prejudicially the rights of any third person. By this clause, therefore, as I understand it, when an occupancy holding is purchased by a full proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, such proprietor would be at liberty to deal with the land as though the occupancy right had ceased to exist, in other words, he would be at liberty to let the land again unfettered by any occupancy right, subject to the rights of any under-tenant, who may be on the land. If there are under-tenants, this condition would seem to show that the holding is not extinguished by the transfer.

Clause (2) then goes on to say : "If the occupancy right in land is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, it shall cease to exist, but nothing in this sub-section shall prejudicially affect the rights of any third person."

Here, again, it is the occupancy right and not the holding which the section says is extinguished by the transfer; and just as in the former case, the saving of the rights of under-tenants would seem to show that the holding itself is not extinguished by the transfer. Nor is it reasonable to suppose that the Legislature intended that the purchase of an occupancy holding by one co-sharer should enure to the benefit of the other co-sharers [146] who had paid nothing for it. It is not unusual for one co-sharer to hold land as a raiyat under himself and the other co-sharers, and the saving of the rights of third parties would appear to extend to the right of the co-sharers to their share of the rent.

It seems to me, therefore, from these considerations, that the effect of the clause in question is not to extinguish the holding altogether but merely to divest it of the incidents attached to an occupancy holding; in other words, the purchaser will continue to hold it divested of those incidents. Whether or not the consequences will be those stated by the Subordinate Judge seems to me to be an immaterial consideration. The principal defendant in this case, having purchased the holding, is entitled, in my opinion, to the benefit of his purchase and whatever rights the plaintiff may have against him. I do not think that section gives him the right to eject him from any portion of the land or to obtain direct possession of the land jointly with the defendant.

It seems to me, therefore, that the plaintiff's suit was properly dismissed, and this appeal must be allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be reversed, and that of the first Court restored, the suit being dismissed with costs in all Courts.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed under section 15 of the Letters Patent. The case was heard by PETHERAM, C.J., and RAMPINI, J., who, after hearing the pleader on each side, sent the appeal to be heard before a Bench of five Judges.

Moulvie Seraj-ul-Islam for the Appellant.—The view of the law taken by BEVERLEY, J., is not correct. The effect of such a purchase as the present could not be to make the landlord-purchaser a raiyat in relation to his co-owners. The judgment seems to contemplate the right of occupancy as consisting of two things,—(1) the tenant's right, and (2) that portion of the right by which the right of occupancy is perfected; and that this latter portion, if taken away, leaves something on the strength of which the purchaser may retain possession of the land. A non-occupancy right may develop into an occupancy right. [TREVELYAN, J.—That only means that new incidents are added to the tenure, not that [147] it becomes a new tenure. GHOSE, J.—In that case does the non-occupancy right come to an end?] It is perfected in that way. The question is what is it that has ceased to exist? The proviso to section 22 means that if, for instance, the occupancy tenant has sub-let his land, then a sale of the land does not affect the sub-lessees. [TREVELYAN, J.—By your argument, not only does the purchaser get nothing by his purchase, but, by the very act of purchasing, he destroys what he has purchased. GHOSE, J.—And for the benefit of the other co-owners. Suppose the occupancy raiyat mortgaged his interest. What would be the position of the mortgagee?] He would not be affected. [GHOSE, J.—Suppose he afterwards sells the right under a decree?] It is only the right of the landlord-purchaser that is affected ; that is clear from the saving clause of the section. If this judgment is correct, then a co-proprietor becomes a non-occupancy raiyat under the other co-proprietors, without their consent ; and that he cannot be. [GHOSE, J.—Suppose a third party made the purchase; he would become your tenant without your consent.] Yes ; but a co-proprietor cannot. Otherwise the occupancy right having ceased to exist the non-occupancy right would become transferable ; but such a right is not transferable directly or indirectly. The very definition of a non-occupancy raiyat shows that by such a purchase a proprietor cannot become one.

The fact that the other co-owners benefit by the defendant's purchase is not to be considered in determining the question before the Court. If this judgment stands, one co-owner can deprive the others of their rights by purchasing the occupancy rights of the tenants ; and such a result could not have been intended by the Legislature.

Baboo Jasodanandan Paramanick for the Respondent.—The only reported authority on the point is the case of Sitanath Panda v. Pelaram Tripati (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 869) which is clearly in my favour. The doctrine of merger—in the sense of total extinction of the right of occupancy—is unknown to the law of this country,—Womesh Chunder Goopto v. Rajnarain Roy (10 W. R., 15), Mokoondy Lall Doobey v. Crowdy (17 W. R., 274), Savi v. Punchanun Roy (25 W. R., 503). . What happens in the event of two rights existing [148] in the same person is, that the lesser right is in abeyance. A co-owner may hold land as a tenant under himself and the other co-owners,—Lal Bahadoor Singh v. Solano (I.L.R., 10 Cal., 45) ; Gur Buksh Roy v. Jeolal Roy (I.L.R , 16 Cal., 127). The question of merger was considered in Jibanti Nath Khan v. Gokool Chunder Chowdry (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 760), and the Court held that a putni interest did not merge in the larger estate when both fell into the same hands. In Maseyk v. Bhagabati Baisnanya (I.L.R., 18 Cal , 121) it was held that, although a raiyat may have acquired an izara of a portion of the estate, still he is entitled to compute in his favour the period during which he held the right of occupancy, and thereby complete the statutory period of twelve years and so acquire the right of occupancy. Lastly, nothing is more common than for one joint landlord to hold land under the general body of proprietors. If this Court decides that proprietors are forbidden to buy holdings, vested interests will be seriously prejudiced. (Two unreported cases,—Appeals from Appellate Decrees 1139 and 1140 of 1895 decided by HILL, J., on the 18th March 1895, and Ram Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Huro Sundari Debya, Appeal from Appellate Decree 37 of 1893 were also cited.)

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, GHOSE, HILL and GORDON, JJ.) :—

Macpherson, J.—In my opinion the decision of Mr. Justice BEVERLEY is right. There is no law in this country which prevents one of several co-proprietors holding the status of a tenant under the other co-proprietors of land which appertains to the common estate. In the reported cases many instances will be found in which lands have been so held and in which the possession of the co-proprietor as a tenant has been recognised. Sub-section 2 of section 22 of the present Tenancy Act does, however, provide that if an occupancy-right is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor, the occupancy-right shall cease to exist. It is not said, and the sub-section cannot be understood to mean, that the holding shall cease to exist, but that the occupancy right, which is an incident to the holding, will cease to exist; and there is nothing in the sub-section inconsist- [149] ent with the continuance of the holding divested of this right of occupancy which attached to it. The saving clause in the sub-section "that nothing in it shall prejudicially affect the right of any third person," indicates also that the holding would, for some purposes at all events, continue to exist. This view of the construction of the section was taken in an unreported case, appeal from Appellate Decree No. 37, decided by Mr. Justice NORRIS and Mr. Justice BANERJEE on the 30th March 1894 ; and the same view was also taken in the case of Sitanath Panda v. Pelaram Tripati (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 869).

Although the facts of those cases are not precisely similar to the facts of the present case, the view taken of the provisions of sub-section 2, section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was the same as that which I have expressed. I, therefore, think that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Trevelyan, J.—I entirely agree with Mr. Justice MACPHERSON.

Ghose, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Hill, J.—I am also of the same opinion.

Gordon, J.—I also agree.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), schedule II, Article 14—Estates Partition Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1876), sections 116, 150—Right of Suit—Suit for possession.

A suit for possession of lands of which the owners have been dispossessed in pursuance of an order of the Collector under section 116 of the Estates Partition Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1876) will lie, even though no suit is brought to set aside the Collector's order under section 150.

Article 14 † of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) does not bar such a suit.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1872 of 1894, against the decree of Babu Jaggaddurlabh Mozumdar, Additional Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 27th of June 1894, affirming the decree of Moulvie Ali Ahmed, Munsif of Samastipur, dated the 18th of May 1893.

† [Art. 14 :—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
To set aside any act or order of an officer of Government in his official capacity, not herein otherwise expressly provided for.	One year ...	The date of the act or order.]

THIS was one of seven cases tried together by consent of parties. The plaintiffs were proprietors of mouzas Nathudoar and [150] Para Ram Bhaddar, and the defendants were proprietors of mouza Parkotimpur Parmanand. Plaintiffs' case was that during the course of a partition under the Estates Partition Act (VIII of 1876), their lands were included within the defendants' mouza and plaintiffs' ryots were dispossessed from those lands in Baisakh 1286 (April 1879). The present suits were brought in 1890 for declaration of right and for recovery of possession of the lands. The defendants, among other objections, pleaded that the plaintiffs having failed to bring any suit to set aside the order passed by the Collector under section 116 of the Estates Partition Act, within one year as laid down in Article 14, Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), these suits were barred by limitation. The lower Courts decreed the plaintiffs' claims.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee for the Appellants.

Babu Saroda Charan Mitra for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

The only two points pressed before us in these appeals are:—

1. That the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding by its judgment of 8th February 1892 that the suits were not barred by Article 14 of the Limitation Act and in remanding them for trial on the merits.

2. That the Courts below have not tried the question whether the plaintiffs' suits are barred by twelve years' adverse possession on the part of the defendants.

On the first point it is to be remarked that the present appellants did not appeal, as they might have done, against the order of remand. It is contended, however, that under the provisions of section 591 of the Code they are entitled to object to that order when appealing against the final decree. Assuming that to be so, we are not prepared to say that the order of the lower Appellate Court was wrong.

The question turns upon certain provisions of the Estates Partition Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1876). It is contended that under section 116 of that Act the lands now in dispute were treated by the Collector as part of the appellants' estate at the [151] time of partition, and that the plaintiffs cannot recover possession of them until the order of the Collector is set aside.

Section 150 of the Act provides that "any person who is aggrieved by any order of a Revenue Officer passed under section 116, may bring a suit in a Court of competent jurisdiction to modify or set aside such order of the Revenue Officer." But the law nowhere says that if no such suit is brought the order of the revenue officer shall be binding as between the proprietors of the estate under partition and third parties. So far from that being the case, section 117 contemplates the contingency of the proprietors of the estate under partition being "dispossessed by a decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction" of disputed lands which have been treated as part of the estate by the Collector's order under section 116, and makes provision as to what should be done in the event of such a contingency.

It seems clear, therefore, from a consideration of that section alone that a suit for the possession of lands of which the owners have been dispossessed in pursuance of an order of the Collector passed under section 116 will lie, even though no suit is brought to set aside the Collector's order under section 150. In fact, the dispossession might not actually take place till more than a year after the Collector's order, and it seems to us that it would be unreasonable to hold that in such a case the aggrieved party would have no remedy if he had omitted to sue to have the Collector's order set aside. On the contrary, the Act appears to contemplate that the claimant of such lands "may" either sue to set aside the Collector's order, or wait till he is in fact dispossessed and then bring a suit to recover possession. We are of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiffs in these suits were not bound to sue to have the Collector's order set aside, and that the suits are not barred by Art. 14 of the Limitation Act. The first ground of appeal therefore fails.

As regards the second ground we do not find that any claim by 12 years' adverse possession was put forward in the written statements, in which limitation was only pleaded on the ground that the plaintiffs should have sued within one year to set aside the Collector's order of 12th June 1869. The issue framed was no doubt in general terms " whether these suits are barred by [152] limitation," but that issue was tried solely with reference to Art. 14 of the Act It is true that the lower Appellate Court before remand made certain remarks in its judgment regarding the 12 years' limitation, and advantage has been taken of those remarks to urge this point before us in second appeal. But it seems to us on a consideration of those remarks that the lower Appellate Court intended to find as a fact that the plaintiffs had been dispossessed within 12 years, and that the suits were not barred under Art. 144 And it is quite clear that after the remand this point was not pressed or argued in either Court. We think, therefore, that under these circumstances the appellants are not entitled to have the suits remanded again for the trial of this question.

The result is that the appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 50—Presumption—Occupancy raiyats--Raiyats holding at fixed rates—Incidents of tenancy—Transferability of tenure—Alienation of part of a tenure—Suit for khas possession and for declaration that alienation was invalid—Form of decree.

In a suit brought in 1893 for declaration that a holding was not transferable and that the alienation of a portion thereof was invalid, and also for khas possession of the land on the ground of such alienation, it was found that the rate of rent payable for the holding had never been changed since 1831, and that there was nothing to rebut the presumption raised by section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). Held **:—

(1) That the alienation did not work a forfeiture, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to khas possession, but they were entitled to the declaration that the alienation was not binding upon them.

(2) That the presumption created by section 50 does not operate to convert an occupancy raiyat into a raiyat holding at fixed rates, nor does it render the tenancy subject to the incidents of a holding at fixed rates as prescribed by section 18 of the Act.

[153] IN this suit the plaintiffs, as landlords, prayed for a declaration that a certain holding was not transferable, and that the purchase made by the defendants of a portion of the holding was illegal and invalid; they also prayed for khas possession of the land. The lower Courts found that the rate of rent payable for the holding had never been changed from the year 1831, which was more than 20 years before the suit, and, applying the presumption provided by section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, held that the holding was a permanent one with a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity, and was therefore transferable under the law. They also held that the sub-division of the tenure did not effect a forfeiture, and dismissed the suit in toto.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

The facts and arguments in the case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Umakali Mukerji for the Appellants.

Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singh for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants had purchased 10 bighas out of a holding of 32 bighas odd, which was the kasht land of Achhey Lal Jha and Rati Lal Jha. They claimed that the holding could not be alienated or sub-divided without their consent as landlords, and they accordingly prayed for a declaration that the defendants' purchase was illegal and invalid, and that inasmuch as the 10 bighas had been abandoned by the original tenants, khas possession of this land might be given to the plaintiffs.

The Jha tenants were not made parties to the suit.

The suit has been dismissed by the lower Courts on two grounds: In the first place it is found that the holding in question was transferable by law, and in the second place that, although the sub-division of the tenancy, having been made without the landlord's written consent, was not binding upon him (section 88, Bengal Tenancy Act), still such alienation of a part of the tenure did not work a forfeiture: Kabil Sardar v. Chander Nath Nag Chowdhry (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 590).

[154] In this latter finding we think the lower Courts were right, and the plaintiffs were therefore not entitled to a decree for possession, but we think the suit should not have been dismissed in toto. The very finding to which we have referred entitled the plaintiffs to the declaration which they asked for, that the alienation to the defendant was not binding upon them. In this view it was immaterial whether or not the entire holding was transferable. Moreover, in coming to the conclusion that it was so transferable, we are of opinion that both the lower Courts have fallen into an error of law in applying the presumption created by section 50 of the Act to convert an occupancy raiyat into a raiyat holding at fixed rates. As we pointed out in a recent case, the class of "raiyats holding at fixed rates" is specially defined by section 4 of the Act as meaning "raiyats holding either at a rent fixed in perpetuity or at a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity;" in other words, the rent or rate of rent must be fixed in perpetuity at the commencement of the tenancy. We entertain grave doubts whether this class of raiyat can be created by the operation of section 50. All that that section says is that a raiyat who has held at the same rent or rate of rent since the time of the Permanent Settlement shall not be liable to have his rent increased except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the holding. It does not say that such a raiyat is a raiyat holding at fixed rates, or that the tenancy shall be subject to the incidents of a holding at fixed rates as prescribed by section 18 of the Act. In this respect, therefore, we think that the judgments of the lower Courts are wrong.

On the findings we are of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration that the alienation to the defendant is not binding upon them, and we accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts, and substitute therefor a declaratory decree as stated above. And we think that the plaintiffs are entitled to their costs in all Courts.

Security for good behaviour—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), sections 110 and 123—Power of Sessions Judge to remand—Taking further evidence—Conditions and limitations imposed upon persons required to give security.

Under section 123 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Sessions Judge is not competent to remand a case for further inquiry. Such evidence as he may require he must take himself.

No conditions and limitations can be imposed upon persons ordered to give security under section 118 † of the Code.

* Criminal Revision No. 542 of 1896 against the order of Mr. H. Holmwood, Sessions Judge of Gya, dated 16th April 1896.

† [Sec. 118:—If, upon such inquiry, it is proved that it is necessary for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour, as the case may be, that the person in respect of whom the inquiry is made should execute a bond, with or without sureties, the Magistrate shall make an order accordingly:

Order to give security.

Provided—

First—that no person shall be ordered to give security of a nature different from, or of an amount larger than, or for a period longer than, that specified in the order made under s. 112:

Secondly—that the amount of every bond shall be fixed with due regard to the circumstances of the case and shall not be excessive:

Thirdly—that when the person in respect of whom the inquiry is made is a minor, the bond shall be executed only by his sureties.]

IN this case the petitioner was ordered by the Deputy Magistrate of gya to execute a bond with sureties for his good behaviour for a period of three years. By his order the Magistrate required the sureties to be persons of adequate means, position, and respectability residing in the neighbourhood of the petitioner and able to exercise a control over his behaviour. The records of the case were submitted to the Sessions Judge for confirmation of the above order under section 123 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the Sessions Judge refused to confirm the order upon the materials on the record, and remanded the case to the Deputy Magistrate for further inquiry. The Deputy Magistrate having examined additional witnesses and otherwise carried out the directions of the Sessions Judge re-submitted the records of the case to him, and he thereupon confirmed the order of the Deputy Magistrate. The petitioner moved the High Court and obtained a rule upon the ground that under section 123 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Sessions Judge was not empowered to remand the case to the Deputy Magistrate to take additional evidence, and that the conditions and limitations imposed upon persons who might become sureties were not recognized by the law.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal appeared on behalf of the Petitioner.

[156] The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Jenkins, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is a rule calling upon the Magistrate of the District of Gya to show cause why the order of the Sessions Judge of that district under section 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure remanding a case under that section for further inquiry by the Deputy Magistrate should not be set aside, on the grounds, first, that under section 123 the Judge was not competent to remand the case to the Deputy Magistrate to take evidence; and, secondly, that the conditions and limitations imposed upon persons who may have to give security are not recognized by the law.

Under section 123 the Judge, if he thinks it proper, after examining the proceedings sent to him by the Magistrate, may require any futher evidence that he thinks necessary, before passing orders on the case. Ordinarily where a Court requires further evidence, that evidence must be taken by the Court itself. Under the Code where a higher Court has power to direct an inferior Court to take evidence, specific powers are given. This may be seen by comparing sections 123, 375 and 428 of the Code. In this case no such specific powers are given, and we think that the Judge has no power to remand such a case to the Deputy Magistrate.

The second point on which the rule was granted is answered by the Magistrate of Gya himself in the following words: The limitations imposed by the Deputy Magistrate with respect to sureties do not prevent the petitioner from offering any person as surety, but simply convey to him an intimation as to the class of persons, who in the opinion of the Deputy Magistrate should be offered as sureties.

We are not now deciding whether the applicant in this case was prevented by the order of the Deputy Magistrate from offering any person he thought fit as surety. What we are deciding is whether the order of the Deputy Magistrate is right or wrong; and we think that if the Magistrate had directed his attention to that part of the rule and not changed it into one regarding the powers of the applicant, he would have done well.

[157] We think that the order of the Sessions Judge is wrong on both points. We make the rule absolute, and direct that the case be taken up by the Sessions Judge and re-tried. Such evidence as he may require he must take himself.

Bengal Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1878), section 53—Spirituous Liquor—Medicinal preparation containing alcohol.

The term "spirituous liquor" in section 53 of the Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 187) is not intended to include a medicinal preparation merely because it is a liquid substance containing alcohol in its composition. The case would be different if alcohol were manufactured separately for the purpose of being used in the preparation of a medicine.

THE petitioner, who was a kobiraj by profession, was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Goalundo under section 53 of the Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1878) for manufacturing, by the process of fermentation, a medicinal preparation called sanjivani sura, without a license, and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 15. He moved the High Court to set aside the conviction and sentence on the ground that his act did not constitute any offence under section 53 of the Excise Act.

Babu Sarat Chundra Khan for the petitioner argued that the object of the accused was to prepare a medicinal preparation, to be used for medicinal purposes, and not to be consumed as a spirituous liquor.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Gordon Leith) for the Crown.—The object of the preparation is immaterial; the process resorted to by the accused was the usual process employed for extracting alcohol, and the result showed the presence of a considerable quantity of alcohol. A spirituous liquor has been manufactured, and that is sufficient to make out an offence under section 53 of the Excise Act.

* Criminal Revision No. 335 of 1896 against the order of Babu Rajoni Nath Chatterjee, Deputy Magistrate of Goalundo, dated the 8th May 1896.

The petitioner, who has been convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Goalundo under section 53 [*] of the Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1878), for manufacturing a liquor called sanjivani sura without a license, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 15, asks us to set aside the conviction and sentence on the ground that the act of the petitioner does not constitute any offence under section 53 of the Act.

The facts of the case are thus set out by the learned Deputy Magistrate in the brief statement of reasons under section 263, Criminal Procedure Code: "The accused was found manufacturing a kind of liquor which he calls sanjivani sura, or life-reviving liquor. He has no license from the Collector to manufacture any liquor. The liquor was made by fermentation of gur and different spices. The strength of the liquor is 36 degrees below London proof. Accused's act falls under the purview of section 53 of Bengal Act VII of 1878. There is no doubt that he was making it for medicinal purposes, but the law makes no exception in his favour. The accused admits having made the liquor. He is a kobiraj by profession."

These being the facts of the case, the question is, whether any offence under section 53 of the Excise Act is established against the accused.

Section 53 of the Excise Act provides that "whoever manufactures or sells any excisable article without a license shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 500 for every such manufacture or sale" Now excisable article, as defined in section 1 of the Act, "includes spirituous and fermented liquors and intoxicating drugs as defined by the Act; " and 'spirituous liquor,' 'fermented liquor' and 'intoxicating drug' are by the same section defined thus :—

"Spirituous liquor includes any spirituous liquor imported into India or manufactured in India by any process of distillation."

"Fermented liquor includes malt liquor of all kinds, tari fresh or fermented, pachwai diluted, or undiluted, or any other intoxicating liquor which the local Government may from time to time declare to be included in this definition."

[159] "Intoxicating drugs include ganja, bhang, charas, every preparation and admixture of any of the above, or any other intoxicating drug which the local Government may from time to time declare to be included in this definition."

So that the only description of excisable article under which the liquor in question can possibly come is "spirituous liquor."

If it comes under that description the conviction is right, if not, it must be held to be wrong.

The term "spirituous liquor" is not however defined in the Act. What is given as the definition of the term is, strictly speaking, no definition at all. It merely says "spirituous liquor includes any spirituous liquor imported into

For unlicensed manufacture or sale of excisable articles. *[Sec. 53 :—Whoever manufactures or sells any excisable article without a license shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees for every such manufacture or sale.

Nothing contained in the first clause of this section or in section 11 applies to the arrangements under which tari is supplied to licensed retail vendors, or to the sale of tari, or of any preparation of the same, when supplied or used for the manufacture of gur or molasses ;†

or to the sale of any imported spirituous or fermented liquors purchased by any person for his private use, and so disposed of upon such person quitting a station or after his decease.]

† This paragraph has been substituted by Ben. Act I of 1883, s. 10, for the two paragraphs originally enacted.

India or manufactured in India by any process of distillation." So that it assumes that the term has a recognized meaning, though it does not say what that meaning is. Now whatever the exact meaning of the term may be, we do not think that it is intended to include a medicinal preparation merely because it is a liquid substance containing alcohol in its composition. We observe that the liquor in the present case was manufactured from gur or treacle mixed with other ingredients, as to the nature of which we know nothing except this, that the preparation was made for medicinal purposes. The case would have been different if the accused had been found manufacturing alcohol or spirits separately for the purpose of being used in the preparation of a medicine. That, however, is not the case here. What he is found to have manufactured by the processes of fermentation and distillation is not alcohol or spirit separately, but the compound substance, the medicine, at once. That act does not in our opinion come within the purview of section 53.

The view we take receives support from the consideration that if it was an offence to manufacture this particular liquor, it would equally be an offence under section 53 to sell it; but we do not think that on the facts found in this case a conviction for selling it without license could be maintained.

The conviction and sentence in this case must therefore be set aside, and the fine if realised must be refunded.

S. C. B. Conviction set aside.

THIS suit was brought on the 15th July 1893. It was alleged in the plaint that 15 cottahs of bhit land were leased out to the defendant for agricultural purposes, but that the defendant in Kartic, 1298 F. S. (October and November 1890), planted bamboos and mango trees upon 10 cottahs of the land without the plaintiffs' permission; that the land was thereby rendered unfit for the purpose for which it was let, and the plaintiffs served a notice of ejectment as prescribed by section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). The defendant having failed to remove the bamboos and mango trees as required by the notice, the plaintiffs in this action prayed for an order for removal of the trees and for ejectment of the defendant.

The defendant pleaded limitation, and the Munsif held that the suit was barred under article 32, schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that the suit was governed by article 120 of the said schedule, and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

[161] Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singh for the appellant contended that section 25 of the Tenancy Act referred only to acts injurious to the tenure, and not to improvements thereof as in the present case, and there was really no ground for ejectment. But even if the ground mentioned in clause (a) of that section was made out, the present case would come under article 32 and not under article 120 of schedule II of the Limitation Act. The Subordinate Judge refers to the case of Gunesh Dass v. Gondour Koormi (I.L.R., 9 Cal., 147), which followed an earlier ruling, Kedarnath Nag v. Khettur Paul Srittrutno (I.L.R., 6 Cal., 34). No reasons are given in the judgments in those cases, and the Allahabad High Court in Gangadhar v. Zahurriya (I.L.R., 8 All., 446) dissented from the earlier of them. Those cases moreover were not decisions on the Bengal Tenancy Act, and were somewhat different in their scope. The distinction between the two articles (32 and 120) is pointed out in Musharuf Ali v. Iftkhar Hosain (I.L.R., 10 All., 634).

Babu Sarada Charan Mitra for the respondents. The suit is under section 25 of the Tenancy Act, and the question is not one of conversion or perversion, but simply whether there was unfitness for the purpose of the tenancy. Such a case was not contemplated by article 32. That article is applicable to suits for compensation and not to suits for ejectment, which is a special remedy provided for in the Tenancy Act. Of the cases cited one was a case in which the claim was based on custom, and the other was a case of compensation under a special contract. Reading sections 23, 25 and 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act together, there seems to be a wholly different remedy prescribed in cases under the Tenancy Act. All the cases cited, however, are in favour of the contention that article 32 is inapplicable to the present case.

Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singh in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverely, JJ.) was as follows:—

This suit was brought to evict a tenant on the ground of his having used the land in a manner which rendered it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. The land was admittedly let for agricultural purposes, but the tenant turned it into an orchard.

[162] The lower Appellate Court has held that the land has been rendered unfit for the purposes of the tenancy, and even if we were inclined to do so, we are unable to interfere with this finding in second appeal.

The only question of law in the appeal is whether the suit was barred by limitation. The Munsif held that it was barred by article 32 of the 2nd schedule of the Limitation Act. The Subordinate Judge has held that it was not barred, and that article 120 applied.

It is argued before us that article 32 applies, and we think that it does apply. There can be no doubt but that this case is within the letter of that article, and there is nothing in the article to limit it to a suit for compensation. The article is independent of the nature of the remedy, and apparently applies equally to all classes of suits brought upon the cause of action referred to in the article. We think that this suit is clearly of the kind which the article is intended to provide for. It asks for removal of the trees on the land and for ejectment

We notice that the Legislature in enacting the Bengal Tenancy Act provided one year's limitation for a suit to eject a raiyat on account of a breach of condition in respect of which there is a contract expressly providing that ejectment shall be the penalty of such breach ; that is to say, for a suit under clause (b) of section 25 of the Act They omitted to provide in that Act any limitation for a suit under clause (a) of that section, and they may possibly have considered that the general law which provides two years' limitation sufficiently dealt with that case. If it were otherwise, there would be an extraordinary difference between the periods provided in the one case for a suit where there is a written contract, and in the other for a suit of a similar nature where there is no written contract. Moreover, apart from the words of the section, it is obvious that in a case of this kind one would expect to find the Legislature fixing a comparatively short period of limitation, as great hardships might be done to a tenant if his landlord were to stand by and take no steps until close upon the expiration of a long period of limitation.

We have been to some extent pressed by two decisions by Division Benches of this Court. The first is the decision in the [163] case of Kedarnath Nag v. Khettur Paul Sritirutno (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 34), and the second that of Gunesh Dass v. Gondour Kootmi (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 117). In neither of those cases is any reason given for the conclusion at which the Court arrived that article 32 was inapplicable. Moreover those cases are not cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act, or cases exactly of the class to which the present case belongs. If we found that they were identical with the present case, we should have been bound to refer the matter to a Full Bench, but we think it unnecessary to do so here. This suit was brought under section 25, clause (a) and section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the question is whether a suit of that kind comes within article 32 of the Limitation Act. That question has never yet, as far as we know, been decided. We think that it does come under article 32.

In the result we set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Munsif. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Second Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 586—Suit for money paid and damages incurred by distraint of crops—Provincial Small Cause Court Act (IX of 1887), Schedule II, Article 35, clause (j).

A suit to recover money paid to redeem crops which had been distrained by the defendants for rents due from persons other than the plaintiffs, and also for damages sustained on account of the distraint, is, so far as the claim relates to damages, a suit coming under clause (j), art. 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act (IX of 1887), and is therefore not entirely a suit of the nature of a Small Cause Court suit.

Section 586 † of the Civil Procedure Code (1882) does not bar a second appeal in such a suit.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the [164] purposes of this report, were as follows: One Sundar Tewary made an application under section 122 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the purpose of distraining certain crops, alleging that they were grown by his tenants Katik and Nabob Roy. Dewan Roy and others made an application under section 137 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to have the distrained crops released, on the ground that they, and not the alleged tenants, were the owners of the distrained property; they deposited the amount of arrears due and the distraint was withdrawn; they then instituted this suit for recovery of the money so paid and for compensation. The first Court decreed the suit, ordering a refund of the money deposited, but allowed no damages other than interest The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs preferred this special appeal to the High Court. The amount claimed in the suit was less than five hundred rupees.

Babu Mohini Mohun Roy and Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose and Babu Satis Chandra Ghose for the Respondents.

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose for the respondents took a preliminary objection that under section 586 of the Civil Procedure Code no second appeal lay to the High Court. [TREVELYAN, J.—The suit is not cognisable in the Court of Small Causes under art. 35, clause (j), of the second schedule of Act IX of 1887.] The words "illegal, improper or excessive distress" used in that clause do not cover the present case; "illegal distress" is used in the same sense as in the English law. See Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, Chapter XII, section 2, sub-sec. (c) 13th Edition, pages 522—524. The present action is clearly one for recovery of money wrongfully received, and is within the cognizance of the Small Cause Court.

Babu Mohini Mohun Roy for the Appellant.—The present action is not one solely for the recovery of money wrongfully received but also for compensation; it is in fact a suit under section 140 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Sections 121 and 122 show that if distress is had against the goods of one who is not a tenant, such distress is illegal, and its legality may be questioned under section 136, clause 4. The word "illegal" in art. 35, [165] clause (j), of the Small Cause Courts Act clearly refers to section 136, clause 4 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 586 of the Civil Procedure Code therefore does not apply.

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose replied.

The case was then argued on the merits. There were fifteen other appeals, Nos. 171 to 185 of 1895, which were tried together with this appeal, the same judgment governing all the cases.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows: –

These are appeals from decrees passed in a series of suits brought by different plaintiffs against the same defendants. The suits were all tried together in the first Court, and the appeals were tried together in the Lower Appellate Court.

The plaintiffs claimed to recover money paid by them to get back their crops which had been distrained by the defendants for rents alleged to be due by persons other than the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs also claimed damages on account of the distraint.

It has been contended before us that no second appeal lies, as the suits are of a nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, and the value of the subject-matter of the suits does not in any case exceed Rs. 500. There can be no doubt, we think, that so far as the suits were for the purpose of recovering the monies which the plaintiffs paid under decrees, the suits were cognizable by a Court of Small Causes.

Article 35 (j) of the second schedule of Act IX of 1887 is intended, in our opinion, to apply only to suits for damages for illegal, improper, or excessive distress, and not to apply to these suits so far as they seek to recover back the money paid.

A suit for money paid to redeem a distress is not on a different footing from a suit for other money which can be recovered as being paid under distress of person or of goods or by abuse of legal process. It is on the same footing as any other suits where the defendant has received money, which in justice and equity belongs to the plaintiff, and there is nothing to exclude the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court with regard to it. The claim to damages is, however, on a different footing. The learned Vakil for the respondents contends that it does not come [166] under article 35 (j) because there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiffs and defendants, and that the suit is really a suit for damages for trespass of property. We are unable to agree with that contention. The article, we think, applies generally to acts done under colour of distress. The relationship between the parties, whether it was in question or not, could not alter the jurisdiction of the Court. The suit as constituted was therefore not entirely of the nature of a Small Cause Court suit. In the first Court the claim to damages was disallowed. The claim was one of substance and not inserted for the purpose of giving the Court jurisdiction. In our opinion a second appeal lies.

We think, however, that the findings of fact by the lower Appellate Court preclude the plaintiffs' success in the appeals. Before the plaintiffs can succeed they must show that the crops distrained upon, or at any rate a portion of such crops, belong to them. We read the finding of the Lower Appellate Court to be that the plaintiffs have not made out their case. The Judge says: "There is nothing in the evidence as to title which renders it improbable that the disputed crops should have been sown by the defendants." He points out that the witnesses could answer no questions as to details, and that the plaintiffs could have given definite evidence about their own fields separately if those fields really were sown by them, but they have chosen not to take that course. He says the plaintiffs have chosen to rest their cases "on general assertions of possession to the whole disputed land, and as those assertions are in all probability false as regards part, and not certainly true as regards any other part of the area in dispute, I see no alternative but to reject their claims for compensation."

It may be that the trial of the suits together was the cause of the plaintiffs giving their evidence in this way, but we must take the evidence as it has been given. The finding of the lower Appellate Court compels us to dismiss these appeals with costs.

accused, examined witnesses on both sides, and, after a short adjournment, examined a witness called by himself, and found the accused guilty under section 341 of the Penal Code.

Held, that there is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which disqualifies a Magistrate who holds a preliminary enquiry under section 202, from trying the case himself, and that the provisions of section 555 * have no application, inasmuch as the Magistrate had not initiated or directed the proceedings against the accused person, nor taken an active part in the arrest or collection of evidence against such person.

Held, also, that the Magistrate was strictly within his rights under section 540 † of the Criminal Procedure Code in receiving fresh evidence after evidence on both sides had been taken and the case adjourned for judgment, inasmuch as the case was still a pending case when such evidence was taken.

THIS was a reference to the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The facts appear from the following letter of reference :—

" The applicant, who is a Police constable, has been convicted by Mr. J. N. Gupta, Officiating Joint Magistrate of Khurdah, of having wrongfully confined two boys in the Police station under section 341, Indian Penal Code. The intention alleged was to have unnatural intercourse with the boys, but this was disbelieved, and the intention found by the Magistrate appears to be zulm.

"The trial appears to have been vitiated by several faults. In the first place the Magistrate held a preliminary enquiry into the truth of the complaint and examined witnesses, and afterwards tried the case himself, instead of making it over to another Magistrate for trial. Several rulings have been cited, and it seems the principle of the rulings in Girish Chunder [168] Ghose v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 857) and Sudhama Upadhya v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 328) apply to this case.

" In the next place the Magistrate after examining the witnesses for the defence on 17th August adjourned the case to the next day for judgment ; but on that day he examined a witness, Bhabani Behara, father of one of the two boys who were the subjects of the offence, and then delivered judgment. This man is called a witness cited by the Court, but he ought to have been a witness for the prosecution, because he professed to have witnessed the occurrence, and his testimony is as important as that of any other person. I may also note here that the complainant Basu was recalled and further examined, but it does not appear on what day, as no date is given.

" The Magistrate has submitted an explanation. After holding a preliminary enquiry and coming to a conclusion adverse to the accused, he undertook the trial himself, and after taking all the evidence on both sides and adjourning the case for judgment, as if the evidence was closed, he suddenly supplemented the evidence by calling a witness, who is really one of the most important prosecution witnesses, and then delivered judgment. It cannot be said on these facts that the accused has had an impartial trial, and on this ground alone the trial should in my opinion be set aside."

No one appeared for the parties on the reference.

* [Sec. 555 :—No Judge or Magistrate shall, except with the permission of the Court to which an appeal lies from his Court, try or commit for trial any case to or in which he is a party, or personally interested, and no Judge or Magistrate shall hear an appeal from any judgment or order passed or made by himself.

Case in which Judge or Magistrate is personally interested.

Explanation.—A Judge or Magistrate shall not be deemed to be a party or personally interested, within the meaning of this section, to or in any case, merely because he is a Municipal Commissioner.]

† [Sec. 540 :—Any Court may, at any stage of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code, summon any person as a witness, or examine any person in attendance, though not summoned as a witness, or, recall and re-examine any person already examined ; and the Court shall summon and examine or recall and re-examine any such person if his evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case.]

Power to summon material witness, or examine person present.

We are unable to agree with the Sessions Judge in the views he has expressed. The offence, with which the accused was charged, was one which fell under section 341 or 342 of the Penal Code. It was a summons case; and the Joint Magistrate, before whom the complaint was made, held, under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, an enquiry for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint before issuing process against the accused. After holding such enquiry, he summoned the accused, and then after examining such witnesses as either party adduced, and a witness called by himself, found the accused guilty under section 341 of the Penal Code. We do not think that there is anything in the Code of Criminal Procedure which disqualifies a Magistrate, who holds a preliminary enquiry under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code from trying the case himself; and the provisions of section 555 have, we think, no application to the circumstances of this case. The two cases quoted by the Sessions Judge, Girish Chunder Ghose v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 857) and [169] Sudhama Upadhya v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 328) proceed upon the principle that when a Magistrate initiates or directs the proceedings against an accused person and takes an active part in the arrest of or collection of evidence against such person, he is disqualified by reason of the provisions of section 555 of the Criminal Procedure Code from trying the case himself, and that a disqualifying interest as contemplated by that section may result from a purely official connection with the initiation of criminal proceedings. In the present case that principle is not applicable. Here, the complaint was in the ordinary course made before the Sub-Divisional Officer; he held an enquiry as authorized by section 202 of the Code, and eventually, upon the evidence recorded in the presence of the accused, found him guilty. There is nothing to indicate that he initiated or directed the proceedings or took any personal interest in the matter of the complaint instituted before him, and we do not think that he was disqualified in any way from trying the case.

It was perhaps irregular on the part of Mr. Gupta, the Joint Magistrate, in calling for and examining a witness after the evidence on both sides had been taken and the case adjourned for judgment; but it does not appear to us that the accused was in any way prejudiced by the action of the Magistrate, and indeed it may well be said that he (the Magistrate) was strictly within his rights under section 540 of the Code, for the case was still a pending case, when the fresh evidence was taken.

Upon these grounds we decline to interfere in this matter.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 4th December, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Gopinath Chakravarti and others............Plaintiffs

Umakanta Das Roy and others.........Defendants.*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 56, clause (4), 187, clause (3) and 188—Joint landlords Authorized Agent—Receipt given by Agent—Presumption under section 56 clause (4) of Ac VIII of 1885.

[170] In a case where there are several joint landlords it is necessary for the Court, before giving effect to the presumption under section 56, clause (4) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to find affirmatively that the agent was authorised by them all either verbally or in writing.

THE plaintiffs sued the defendants for the dur-ijara rents of the years 1297 1298 and 1299. The plaintiffs alleged that certain lands were held in dur-ijara under them by the first defendant, and the father of the other two defendants who were minors. The defendants pleaded payment, and produced a receipt dated 14th Falgun and signed by the plaintiff Gopinath Chakravarti. Gopinath alleged that this receipt was granted for payments made on account of collections of 1295 and 1296, during which years the defendants or their predecessors in interest acted as collection agents for the plaintiffs. The Court of first instance found that the receipt was one for rent paid by the dur-ijaradars, and that the receipt, "being informal and not containing the particulars required to be specified by section 56, Bengal Tenancy Act, is presumably an acquittance in full for all demands of the plaintiffs up to the 14th Falgun 1299.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Officiating Judge of Mymensingh who dismissed the appeal, and whose judgment contained the following passage: "It is urged before me that the rent receipt is invalid, as it was not signed by all the landlords, and as Gopinath was not an agent to sign receipts for the other landlords. Such an authority need not be in writing, and there is nothing to show that he was not verbally authorized; at any rate, his conduct might well have led defendants to believe him to be so authorised."

Babu Grish Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellants.

Mr. Abdul Majid for the Respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

The only question raised in this appeal, which arises out of a suit for arrears of rent, is whether the lower Appellate Court was right in giving effect to the statutory presumption under section 56, clause 4, of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in favour of the defendants, respondents. The learned Vakil for the appellants contends that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in giving [171] effect to that presumption for two reasons: first 'because the receipt

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1451 of 1895, against the decree of E. Geaki, Esq., District Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 9th of May 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Krishna Chandra Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 27th of August 1894.

(Ex. A), which is made the basis of the presumption, was not signed by all the landlords, and the party by whom it was signed was not authorised in writing to sign it on behalf of all the landlords; and, secondly, because, even if verbal authority was sufficient, the lower Appellate Court has not affirmatively found that Gopinath was verbally authorised to sign the receipt for all the landlords.

We are of opinion that the first ground upon which the learned Vakil for the appellant bases his contention is not tenable. The case comes under section 188, which does not require an agent to be authorised in writing to act on behalf of all the landlords. All that that section requires is that the agent should be authorized, and such authority may be given, in our opinion, verbally or in writing. It is true that sub-section (3) of section 187 enacts that "every document required by this Act to be signed or certified by a landlord, except an instrument appointing or authorising an agent, may be signed or certified by an agent of the landlord authorised in writing in that behalf;" but the case in our opinion comes more properly under section 188, as this is a case of several joint landlords and the receipt is signed by one of them.

The second ground urged on behalf of the appellants is, however, in our opinion, entitled to succeed. The receipt (Ex. A), before it can form the basis of any presumption under clause (4), section 56, must be shown to be a receipt granted by or on behalf of all the landlords; in other words, in a case like this, where there are several joint landlords, it must be shown that the person by whom the receipt was signed was authorised by them all, either verbally or in writing. Upon this question of authority, all that the learned Judge says is this: "Such an authority need not be in writing, and there is nothing to show that he was not verbally authorised; at any rate, his conduct might well have led defendants to believe him to be so authorised." We do not think that that is sufficient. It is not enough to say that it is not shown that Gobinath was not verbally authorized, or that the defendants had reason to believe that he was so authorised. It was necessary for the Court below, before giving effect to the presumption under section 56, affirmatively to find that Gobinath was verbally authorised; and as it has not [172] come to any such finding, we must hold that it was wrong in giving effect to the presumption in question. The learned Counsel for the respondents contended that, though there might not have been sufficient ground for raising the statutory presumption, there was here a presumption of fact raised by the lower Appellate Court upon the finding arrived at by it, that the amount that was due from the defendants had been paid off. No doubt, if there had been any such finding, or if the lower Appellate Court had said that upon the whole of the evidence adduced in the case it drew the inference as an inference of fact, that all that was due from the defendants had been paid off, that would have been a perfectly correct decision. But though the learned Judge below does refer to the evidence upon certain points, the presumption upon which he relies is not any presumption of fact, but clearly the presumption of law under section 56.

The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court, in order that it may determine the two following points: The first is, whether Gopinath was verbally authorised to sign the receipt (Ex. A) for all the landlords. If this question is answered in the affirmative, the decree will be in favour of the defendants, as it has been made by the lower Appellate Court. If, on the other hand, this question is answered in the negative, then the lower Appellate Court will have to determine the second of the two points for which we remand the case, viz., whether upon the evidence on the record, and bearing in mind that the burden of proof upon this question of payment is on the defendants, any presumption of fact arises in favour of their defence that all that was due from them had been paid off. With these directions we send the case back to the lower Appellate Court for final disposal. The costs will abide the result.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Kewal Kishan Singh............Judgment-debtor

Sookhari............Decree-holder.*

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), section 11—Suit for possession and mesne profits—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 212—Assessment of mesne profits -Dismissal of suit—Application for execution.

Where, upon the application of the decree-holder, the Court executing the decree has assessed the amount of mesne profits, but the necessary Court fees have not been deposited within the time fixed by the Court as provided by section 11† of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), the suit, that is, the claim in respect of those mesne profits, must be dismissed; after such dismissal, no application for execution of the decree for the mesne profits can be entertained, as no such decree is in existence.

The word "suit" in the last part of para. 2 of section 11 of the Court Fees Act does not mean the entire suit; it means the claim in respect of the mesne profits.

The facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are fully set out in the judgment of the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Order No. 101 of 1896, against the order of J. Tweedie, Esq., District Judge of Patna, dated the 4th of December 1895, affirming the order of Babu Gobind Chander Basack, Munsif of Patna, dated the 9th of September 1895.

† [Sec. 11:—In suits for mesne profits or for immoveable property and mesne profits, or for an account, if the profits or amount decreed are or is in excess of the profits claimed or the amount at which the plaintiff valued the relief sought, the decree shall not be executed until the difference between the fee actually paid and the fee which would have been payable had the suit comprised the whole of the profits or amount so decreed shall have been paid to the proper officer.

Procedure in suits for mesne profits or account when amount decreed exceeds amount claimed.

Where the amount of mesne profits is left to be ascertained in the course of the execution of the decree, if the profits so ascertained exceed the profits claimed, the further execution of the decree shall be stayed until the difference between the fee actually paid and the fee which would have been payable had the suit comprised the whole of the profits so ascertained is paid. If the additional fee is not paid within such time as the Court shall fix, the suit shall be dismissed.]

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee for the Respondent.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee.—An application for the assessment of mesne profits is not an application for the execution of the decree, but an application in the original suit for the purposes of obtaining a final decree ; see Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 132). If, after assessment of mesne profits, the Court fees are not paid, the suit, so far as it relates to mesne profits, must be dismissed under section 11, para. 2 of the Court Fees Act. After such dismissal, no fresh application for execution can be entertained, as there is no decree in existence capable of execution ; the decree-holder is not entitled to apply for leave to put in additional Court fees, as after such dismissal there is no pending suit before the [174] Court. The decree-holder's remedy is either by an application for review of the order of dismissal under section 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, or by a fresh suit for mesne profits under section 56 of the Civil Procedure Code, subject to the law of limitation. The observations of EDGE, C.J., in Balkaran v. Gobind [I. L. R., 12 All., 129, (148)] support this contention.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee for the respondent.—The word "suit" in the last clause of para. 2, section 11 of the Court Fees Act means the execution proceeding, that is, the application for the assessment of mesne profits. Sections 9 and 10 show that this is the meaning. If so, one such application being rejected, there is no bar to a fresh application. The word "suit" in section 11 cannot possibly mean the whole suit.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee replied.

The judgment of the High Court (BEVERLEY and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was delivered by Beverley, J.—This second appeal is on behalf of the judgment-debtor, and it raises an important question as to the construction of section 11 of the Court Fees Act. The respondent had obtained a decree for possession of immoveable property with mesne profits, which were to be assessed in the course of executing the decree. In March 1893 the decree-holder presented an application to execute the decree as to the possession of the property and to ascertain the mesne profits. The application for execution as regards possession was separately registered, and, as we understand, that portion of the decree has been executed and possession has been delivered to the decree-holders. On the 22nd March 1895, a further application as regards the mesne profits appears to have been filed, and on the 27th of the same month the mesne profits were assessed at a certain sum, and an order was made upon the decree-holder to deposit the necessary Court fees under section 11 of the Court Fees Act on the following day. On that day, namely, the 28th of March 1895, the decree-holder having taken no steps, the case was dismissed. Then, on the 17th August, a fresh application was made by the decree-holder to execute the decree in respect of the mesne profits which had been ascertained [175] in the previous March, and on the 27th August the judgment-debtor objected that the suit having been dismissed there was no decree in existence of which the applicant could take out execution. On the 9th September the Munsif held that all that was done on the 28th March 1895 was to strike off the application for executing the decree in respect of mesne profits, and he accordingly allowed the execution to proceed, and this order has been upheld in appeal.

Now, section 11 of the Court Fees Act provides that in suits for immoveable property and mesne profits, if the profits decreed are in excess of the profits claimed, the decree shall not be executed until the difference between the fee actually paid and the fee which would have been payable had the suit comprised the whole of the profits so decreed shall have been paid to the proper officer, and the second clause, which is the important clause in this case, is as follows: "Where the amount of mesne profits is left to be ascertained in the course of the execution of the decree, if the profits so ascertained exceed the profits claimed, the further execution of the decree shall be stayed until the difference between the fee actually paid and the fee which would have been payable had the suit comprised the whole of the profits so ascertained is paid. If the additional fee is not paid within such time as the Court shall fix, the suit shall be dismissed." The question before us is as to what meaning is to be attached to the words "the suit shall be dismissed." It seems clear that these words are intended to have a different signification from the words used in the former part of the section to the effect that the further execution of the decree shall be stayed until the difference between the fee actually paid and the fee which would have been payable is paid. But it is contended on the other side that inasmuch as the suit had been already decreed, certainly so far as the possession of the property is concerned, and it may fairly be argued also as regards mesne profits, it cannot have been intended that the words "the suit shall be dismissed" should mean that the entire suit shall be dismissed; and it is argued that the proper meaning to be put on these words is merely that the application for execution shall be dismissed, leaving it open to the decree-holder to make a fresh application. We are of opinion that that is not the correct con-[176] struction, having regard to the wording of the previous section, section 10 of the Act. According to that section, when an insufficient Court fee has been paid upon a plaint, the Court shall require the plaintiff to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable, and the suit shall be stayed until the additional fee is paid. "If the additional fee is not paid within such time as the Court shall fix, the suit shall be dismissed," and by analogy we are of opinion that the meaning of section 11 is that in case the additional fee required in respect of the excess mesne profits is not paid, execution of the decree shall be stayed until it is paid, and if it is not paid within the time fixed by the Court then the suit, that is to say, the claim in respect of those mesne profits, shall be dismissed. We think it is unnecessary to hold that the word "suit" in this clause means the entire suit, including the claim for possession which had been decreed and the decree for which had been executed, but we think it can fairly be construed as the suit or claim in respect of the mesne profits in respect of which the Court fee payable has not been paid within the time fixed by the Court. If this construction be correct, it follows that no decree in respect of these mesne profits was any longer in existence and it could not be executed. It might of course be open to the decree-holder to obtain a revival of the suit by applying for a review of judgment, or in some other way, but not having done this, we are unable to hold with the lower Courts that he was entitled to make a fresh application for execution of the decree.

Under these circumstances this appeal must be allowed, the orders of the lower Courts reversed, and the application of the 17th August 1895 rejected.

The appellant is entitled to his costs in both the Appellate Courts.

Contract—Appropriation by vendor—Passing of property—Power of resale—Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 107, and sections 77, 78, 79, 82 and 83—Measure of Damages—Changing shape of claim—Evidence.

The plaintiff under several contracts with the defendant produced by manufacture goods answering to the description of the contracts and appropriated them to the several contracts. On notice of the production of the goods being given to the defendant he directed the goods so appropriated to be marked and despatched for shipment according to certain instructions. The plaintiffs carried out these instructions, but the goods could not be shipped, as the vessels in which they were to be shipped were not available at their usual place.

Held: the ownership in the goods was transferred to the defendant and the plaintiffs became entitled, under section 107 † of the Contract Act, after due notice to resell them on the defendant's refusal to take delivery, and to recover as damages the difference between the contract price of the goods and the price to which they were resold.

Semble.—The proper course to be adopted, when it is sought to shape a claim for damages differently from what appears in the plaint, is to amend the plaint and add a claim for damages on the basis of that amendment. Then at the trial evidence may be given in support of the amended statement. But that course ought not to be allowed to be adopted after the plaintiffs have once closed their case and the defendants have been called on to meet the claim as originally framed in the plaint.

Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain (ante p. 121) followed.

THE plaintiffs produced by manufacture certain jute goods, and on giving notice of their production to the defendant received instructions for marking and shipping them. The goods were marked as required by the defendant, and were brought down in boats to the place where the vessels named by the defendant were ordinarily moored, but the shipment was not effected because the vessels were not there to receive the goods. The defendant thereupon cancelled the contract and declined to take delivery of the goods. The plaintiffs, after notice to the defendant, [178] resold the goods and brought this suit, claiming by way of damages the difference in the prices of the goods calculated at the contract rates and at the rates at which they were resold. In the course of the opening of the defendant's case it was suggested by the Court that a question might arise as to the right of the plaintiffs to resell the goods and as to whether the plaintiffs ought not to have claimed as damages an amount respresented by the difference between the contract price and the price calculated at the market rate at the date of breach. Thereupon, while the hearing of the defendants' evidence was proceeding, an application was made by the Counsel for the plaintiffs to be allowed to call evidence to show what the market rate was at the date of breach. This application was refused.

* Original Civil Suit No. 313 of 1896.

† [Sec. 107:—Where the buyer of goods fails to perform his part of the contract, either by not taking the goods sold to him, or by not paying for them, the seller, having a lien on the goods, or having stopped them in transit, may, after giving notice to the buyer of his intention to do so, resell them, after the lapse of a reasonable time, and the buyer must bear any loss, but is not entitled to any profit, which may occur on such re-sale.]

Sale, J. (after stating the facts as above, continued).—The next question is as to the damages recoverable by the plaintiff company. It seems that on the defendant cancelling his contracts and declining to take delivery of the goods, which in accordance with his directions had been marked and loaded in boats and despatched from the mill, the plaintiffs after notice to the defendant proceeded to resell the goods, and they claim by way of damages the difference in the prices of the goods calculated at the contract rates and at the rates at which they were resold.

The question is whether the plaintiffs have adopted the true measure of damages, or whether, on the other hand, the plaintiffs ought not to have claimed an amount represented by the difference between the contract prices of the goods and the prices calculated at the market rates at the date of breach.

It is fair to say that this question is not one which is raised in the written statement of the defendant, and indeed the question as to the right of the plaintiffs to resell the goods did not arise until it was suggested by myself in the course of the opening of the defendant's case. Subsequently, while the hearing of the defendant's evidence was proceeding, an application was made by Mr. Caspersz on behalf of the plaintiffs to be allowed to call evidence to show what the market rates for the goods were at the date of breach, that is to say, at the end of February. It seemed to me, [179] having regard to the observations of the Appeal Court in the case of Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain (ante p. 124) that it would not be proper to allow the plaintiffs at that stage to call evidence for the purpose of proving the market rate. The view of the Appeal Court as to the proper course to be adopted when it is sought to shape a claim for damages differently from what appears in the plaint, is thus expressed :—

"The proper course in this case would have been to amend the plaint by adding an averment that the market price at the time of the breach was less than the contract price and by adding a claim for damages on that basis. Then at the trial evidence might have been given of what the market price was at the time when the goods were refused, and the judgment should have been for the difference, if any was shown to have existed."

Accordingly, before the plaintiffs can be permitted to give the evidence which they now desire to do, it would be necessary in the first place to amend the plaint and to re-start the case on a new basis I ought not, I think, to allow that course to be adopted after the plaintiffs have once closed their case and the defendant has been called on to meet the claim as framed in the plaint and supported by the evidence adduced at the hearing.

However, this matter is not of much consequence in this case, because the conclusion I have arrived at is that the plaintiffs were entitled to resell the goods which had been marked and despatched from the mill at the defendant's request. The right of resale is given by section 107 of the Contract Act. That section runs as follows :—

"Where the buyer of goods fails to perform his part of the contract, either by not taking the goods sold to him or by not paying for them, the seller, having a lien on the goods, or having stopped them in transit, may after giving notice to the buyer of his intention to do so, resell them after the lapse of a reasonable time, and the buyer must bear any loss, but is not entitled to any profit, which may occur on such resale."

The words of the section seem to imply that the right of resale only arises when the property in the goods has passed to the purchaser.

[180] It is obvious if the property in the goods is in the seller no such power as that contemplated by the section would be required by him to sell the goods.

This view of the section was taken by the Appeal Court in the case of Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain (ante p. 124), to which I have just referred. That case was one where the plaintiff purported to resell certain goods which the defendant had declined to accept, and then claimed the difference between the price at the contract rate and the price at which the goods were resold. The learned Judges held that the plaintiffs had no right to resell, as nothing had been done to pass the property in the goods from the seller to the purchaser. The observations of the learned Judges to which I refer are these:—

"The contract was for the sale of 15 bales of grey shirtings, and would have been satisfied by the delivery of any 15 bales which answered the description in the contract. It is found by the Judge that the 15 bales which were tendered by the plaintiffs did answer the description, but as they were at once refused by the defendants and were never taken by them into their possession the property in the goods never passed to the purchasers, but remained in the vendors in the same way that it was vested in them before the tender. The case is the simple one of a breach of a contract to accept and pay for goods sold by description at an agreed price in which the measure of the damage is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time of the breach. As the property in the goods remained in the vendors that which took place at the sale had no effect whatever, as the plaintiffs were merely offering their own goods for sale, and when they were knocked down to their bid they only bought in their own goods. To such a case as this neither section 107 of the Contract Act, nor the proviso for resale in the contract itself, can have any application, as no such power is required to enable a man to sell his own goods. Such powers are required when the property in the goods has passed to the purchaser subject to the lien of the vendor for the unpaid purchase money, and it is to that class of cases that both the proviso and the section apply."

The question which next arises for determination is whether [181] under the facts as I have stated them it can be said that the property in any portion of the goods had passed from the plaintiffs who were the sellers to the defendant who was the purchaser.

The sections of the Contract Act which bear on the question are these: Section 77 defines what a sale is—"Sale" is the exchange of property for a price. It involves "the transfer of the ownership of the thing sold from the seller to the buyer." The next section 78 refers to ascertained goods, and shows that postponement of delivery does not necessarily prevent the property in the goods from passing to the purchaser.

Section 78 says:—

"Sale is effected by offer and acceptance of ascertained goods for a price; or of a price for ascertained goods, together with payment of the price of delivery of the goods; or with tender, part payment, earnest or part deliveries or with an agreement, express or implied, that the payment or delivery, or both, shall be postponed. Where there is a contract for the sale of ascertained goods, the property in the goods sold passes to the buyer when the whole or part of the price or when the earnest is paid, or when the whole or part of the goods is delivered. If the parties agree, expressly or by implication, that the payment or delivery, or both shall be postponed, the property passes as soon as the proposal for sale is accepted."

Section 79 refers to the articles not ascertained at the date of the contract and provides as follows: " Where there is a contract for the sale of a thing which has yet to be ascertained, made, or finished, the ownership of the thing is not transferred to the buyer, until it is ascertained, made, or finished."

Sections 82 and 83 are important. Section 82 provides :—

" Where the goods are not ascertained at the time of making the contract of sale, it is necessary to the completion of the sale that the goods shall be ascertained."

Section 83 shews under what circumstances the goods may be said to become ascertained :—

" Where the goods are not ascertained at the time of making the argeement for sale, but goods answering the descripiton in the agreement are subsequently appropriated by one party for [182] the purpose of the agreement, and that appropriation is assented to by the other, the goods have been ascertained, and the sale is complete "

Can it be said on the facts of this case that any portion of these goods became ascertained goods, that is to say, was any portion of the goods appropriated to the contracts with the assent of the purchaser; because, if that be so, it follows that the sale as to that portion was complete, and, if complete, it involves the transfer of the ownership in the thing sold from the seller to the buyer.

Here what we have is that the goods answering to the description of the contracts have been produced by manufacture by the plaintiffs, and have been appropriated by them to the several contracts; that on notice of the production of the goods being given to the defendant the defendant directed the goods so appropriated by the plaintiffs to the contracts to be marked and to be despatched for shipment according to certain instructions. It is said that the defendant never inspected the goods, and that it might be that they did not answer to the description contracted for.

But the right to inspection may be waived by a purchaser, and if without inspection he either takes possession of the goods, or exercises proprietary rights over them, it seems to me he thereby gives his implied assent to the appropriation effected by the seller.

Now, here the plaintiffs were directed to mark the goods appropriated by them to the contracts in a particular way, and to despatch them from the mill in accordance with certain shipping instructions. The act of despatching the goods from the mill was, it appears to me, the act of the defendant through his agents, the plaintiffs, and this act of the defendant constituted an implied assent to the appropriation by the plaintiffs which then became no longer revocable. So far therefore as the goods actually despatched from the mill are concerned the ownership was transferred to the defendant, and the plaintiffs became entitled under section 107 after due notice to resell them on the defendant's refusal to take delivery.

It follows that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover as damages, [183] the difference between the contract price of the goods despatched from the mill and the price at which they were resold; the plaintiffs are also entitled to demurrage claimed and proved in respect of those goods.

MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Harendra Lall Roy

Transfer of Civil Case—Letters Patent, High Court, 1865, clause 13—Grounds for transfer—Practice.

In a suit for immoveable property instituted in the Dinagepur Court, the defendant applied for its transfer to the High Court under clause 13 of the Letters Patent, the grounds upon which the transfer was asked for being, that questions of difficulty arose in the suit; that the defendants' witnesses lived in Calcutta; that it would be impossible for her to go to Dinagepur and take her witnesses there owing to the expense; that an agreement upon which the suit was brought was executed in Calcutta; that the plaintiff resided and carried on business in Calcutta; and that all the persons who knew of the transactions in suit were residents of Calcutta or its neighbourhood. Held, under the circumstances, that the case was a proper one to be transferred to the High Court.

THE facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) who appeared with Mr. O'Kinealy to show cause against the rule, cited the following cases: Mokham Singh v. Rup Singh (I. L. R., 15 All., 352: L. R., 20 I. A., 127), Khatija Bibi v. Taruk Chunder Dutt (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 980), Ojooderam Khan v Nobinmoney Dossee (1 Ind. Jur. N. S., 396), Doucett v. Wise (1 Ind. Jur. N. S., 94, 227), and Courjon v. Courjon (9 B. L. R., Ap 10).

Mr. Garth in support of the rule cited the following cases: Jotindro Nath Mitter v. Raj Kristo Mitter (I. L. R., 16 Cal, 771), In the matter of Kapil Nauth Sahai Deo v. Government (10 B. L. R., 168), Ram Coomar [184] Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee [I. L. R., 7 Cal., 233 (256): L. R., 4 I. A., 23 (47)], Poolin Chunder Chowdhri v. Satish Chunder Shaw (unreported: Minute Book, 5 Sept. 1895, SALE, J.), and Jogendro Nauth Chatterji v. Anundo Chunder Banerjee (unreported: Minute Book, 23 April 1894, SALE, J.).

Ameer Ali, J.—This rule was obtained by Sreemutty Sarvamangala Dabee, one of the defendants in a suit No. 957 of 1895 in the Court of the * Rule calling upon the plaintiff in suit No. 957 of 1895 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dinagepur to show cause why the said suit should not be removed to the High Court.

Subordinate Judge of Dinagepur, under clause 13 of the Letters Patent, calling upon the plaintiff Harendra Lall Roy to show cause why the said suit should not be removed to this Court, to be tried and determined in this Court in the exercise of its extraordinary original civil jurisdiction. The circumstances under which the suit in question was instituted are shortly these :—

One Sreenath Sanyal died on the 20th May 1892, leaving considerable property, both moveable and immoveable. The immoveable property is situated partly in the District of Dinagepur and partly in the District of Burdwan, the bulk being in Dinagepur. The moveable property consists of a sum of Rs. 3,00,000 in the hands of the Accountant General of this Court, and the accumulated rents of the zemindaries at Dinagepur, amounting to a large sum in the hands of the Collector of Dinagepur.

Upon the death of Sreenath Sanyal three claimants appeared on the scene, each claiming to be solely entitled to the estate, one of them being Woodoy Churn Sanyal, who claimed as the adopted son of Sitanath Sanyal, one of Sreenath Sanyal's brothers. The second claimed to be the adopted son of another brother, and the third as next-of-kin.

A suit was instituted in the Burdwan Court, and proceedings were taken in this Court for Letters of Administration to the estate of Sreenath Sanyal. Woodoy Churn Sanyal seems to have been a man of no means, and after some ineffectual attempts to obtain money from other sources he entered into an agreement with Harendra Lall Roy, the plaintiff, under which, in consideration of the plaintiff advancing funds for the prosecution of his claim to the estate of Sreenath Sanyal, Woodoy purported to assign half his interest to Harendra Lall Roy.

[185] That agreement, or as it is called deed of assignment, bears date the 27th of September 1892. On the 6th of September 1894 a compromise took place between the three claimants, by which Woodoy Churn Sanyal obtained five annas, Rajendra Nath Sanyal eight annas, and Eshan Chunder Sanyal three annas, and a decree was made by consent in those terms in the Burdwan Court; and upon the basis of that compromise I am informed an order was made in this Court declaring the rights of Rajendra Nath Sanyal, Woodoy Churn Sanyal, and Eshan Chunder Sanyal, according to the shares mentioned, and directing that Letters of Administration should issue jointly to them. But from the proceedings before me it appears that Letters of Administration have not yet been issued.

Woodoy Churn Sanyal died on the 2nd April 1895. The defendant Sreemutty Sarvamangala Dabee is his daughter, and it is said that for two or three months she received the allowance which Harendra Lall Roy was making to her father under the deed of assignment. That is a question, however, with which I am not concerned in the present matter.

Some time after his death the defendant Sarvamangala Dabee raised questions regarding the validity of the deed of assignment executed by her father in favour of Harendra Lall Roy. There appears to have been the usual correspondence between the attorneys on both sides, and on the 27th of August 1895, the plaintiff instituted this suit in the Dinagepur Subordinate Judge's Court, praying, among other things, for a declaration that under the conveyance of the 27th of September 1892, and another agreement referred to in the plaint, he was entitled to a moiety of the share of Woodoy Churn Sanyal in the estate of Sreenath Sanyal. He asked further that possession might be given to him of that moiety, and also that the defendants other than the Collector of Dinagepur be restrained from handing over to the defendant Sreemutty Sarvamangala Dabee any portion of the said share of Woodoy Churn Sanyal in the estate of Sreenath Sanyal, and that she might be restrained from receiving, getting in, or dealing with the same. The plaintiff prayed also for the appointment of a Receiver, and other reliefs to which I do not consider it necessary to refer. It appears that on the same day the plaintiff [186] obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why a Receiver should not be appointed in respect of the moneys in the hands of the Accountant General of this Court, and also of the zemindaries in the district of Dinagepur which were in the hands of the Collector, and obtained in the meantime an interim injunction. On the 22nd November the defendant Sreemutty Sarvamangala Dabee applied for and obtained this rule, the purport of which I have already given.

The Advocate-General and Mr. O'Kinealy have shown cause. The plaintiff himself has filed no affidavit of his own. Two affidavits have been used on his behalf, one made by his attorney Kamini Kumar Guha jointly with Horo Koomar Chuckerbutty, Kamini Kumar's clerk, the other by Raj Chunder Bose, a gomastha of the plaintiff.

Now, clause 13 of the Letters Patent runs thus: "And we do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, shall have power to remove and to try and determine, as a Court of Extraordinary Original Jurisdiction, any suit being or falling within the jurisdiction of any Court whether within or without the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, subject to its superintendence, when the said High Court shall think proper to do so, either on the agreement of the parties to that effect, or for purposes of justice, the reasons for so doing being recorded on the proceedings of the said High Court."

A number of cases dealt with under the clause were cited in the course of argument. I have also referred to a case decided in 1866—Ojooderam Khan v. Nobinmoney Dossee (1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 396).

There can be no doubt that this Court has ample power to remove cases from any Court subject to its superintendence for trial, in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction, whenever it thinks fit to do so for purposes of justice; that purpose is to be determined on various considerations, most of which are discussed in the cases to which reference has been made. For example, the desirability or necessity to exercise the jurisdiction may arise in consequence of the importance or difficulty of the questions involved, or it may arise in consequence of the balance of convenience [187] or cheapness of the trial. I do not mean to say that these considerations are exhaustive for the exercise of the jurisdiction under clause 13, but these are circumstances under which undoubtedly this Court has exercised the power. In the matter of Kapil Nath Sahai Deo v. The Government (10 B.L.R., 168), the conduct of the Judge was taken into consideration in directing a transfer.

The grounds which the defendant puts forward in asking for a transfer may be stated shortly to be as follows:—

1. She contends that the questions involved in the suit are of a difficult and important character.

2. She suggests that the witnesses whom she intends to cite live in Calcutta, and that it would be an extreme hardship to her either to go herself or take her witnesses to Dinagepur to be examined at the trial.

I am giving very briefly the grounds which were discussed before me, as they are set out fully in the affidavit of the defendant. It is quite clear that the agreement upon which the suit is brought was executed in Calcutta. It is also evident that the plaintiff resides and carries on business in Calcutta.

In the 32nd paragraph of the defendant's verified petition it is stated that the said Harendra Lall Roy is a rich money-lender of Hatkhola, having extensive business connections in the mofussil. There is no contradiction of that statement in the affidavits which have been filed on his behalf. Then in the 34th paragraph it is said: "All the persons who know of the transactions between the said Woodoy Churn Sanyal and Harendra Lall Roy, and who will be likely to be called as witnesses by your petitioner, are residents of Calcutta or Bally and work in Calcutta." Again, there is no contradiction. The joint affidavit of Kamini Kumar Guha and Horo Coomar Chuckerbutty, so far as it goes, contradicts the defendant's statements regarding the circumstances under which the deed was executed, the capacity of Woodoy Churn Sanyal, and the knowledge of the defendant concerning the document, but I do not find any contradiction of the allegation that all the witnesses who are able to speak to the agreement are in Calcutta or in its neighbourhood. Nor is there any contradiction in Raj Chunder Bose's affidavit. The defendant says her evidence would be material, [188] and that it would be impossible for her to go to Dinagepur and take her witnesses there, as the expense would be very heavy, and further that she would be unable to secure the attendance of many of them even if she could afford the expense.

There is no contradiction of the statement that she has not the means to afford the costs of a commission, nor any suggestion that she can conveniently go to Dinagepur to give her evidence. Considering the fact that the defendant is a purdahnashin, I can understand the difficulty of her going to Dinagepur for the purposes of giving her evidence. There is not the faintest allegation on the part of the plaintiff that there are any witnesses at Dinagepur whom he will be obliged to bring down to Calcutta if the case were tried here.

Kamini Kumar Guha suggests in a weak sort of way that the defendant has the means of taking up Counsel from here to Dinagepur. On this point he says as follows: "With reference to the statements contained in the 33rd paragraph of the said petition we say that we do not believe that the said petitioner is without means to take down Counsel from Calcutta to Dinagepur in case it were necessary to do so, which we do not believe it to be, etc."

The denial is of a weak character. I do not mean to say that inability on the part of the defendant to take Counsel up to Dinagepur would be any ground for a transfer; what I find is that though her inability to take up Counsel is denied in the way I have shown, her statement as to her want of means to go to Dinagepur or to take her witnesses there, is not denied.

Raj Chunder Bose says in substance that if the case be removed to this Court it would entail great hardship and loss on Harendra Lall Roy, who has already paid and incurred liabilities for stamps and pleader's fees to the amount of Rs. 4,500.

Beyond the matter of expense there is nothing to show what the hardship would be. I have nothing to do with the expense which the plaintiff has already incurred. If he wins—he will in all probability recover the costs of the stamps. It is said that the suit was brought in the Dinagepur Court, inasmuch as the Collector of that District has been made a defendant. But the Collector is merely a formal party; his presence in the suit is owing to the fact that he holds in his hands the rents of the estate. The [189] suit could have been brought in the Burdwan Court, where the former suit in respect of these very properties was instituted and which would have been more convenient to the parties and the witnesses in the case. I think there is a good deal of force in Mr. Garth's contention that the plaintiff has brought the suit in the most distant place he could in order to throw every difficulty in the way of the defendant to defend the action. I was surprised at the statement that the expense here will be greater than in the mofussil. This is obviously contrary to ordinary experience.

The matter therefore substantially comes back to this: This is a suit for the enforcement of a contract between Harendra Lall Roy and Woodoy Churn Sanyal, by which the latter purported to assign a moiety of his share in the estate of Sreenath Sanyal to the plaintiff in consideration of being placed in funds for the prosecution of his claim. Having regard to the statements which the defendant makes various questions arise for determination, one of which is whether it was an extortionate or unconscionable bargain, assuming that it was entered into with full apprehension of its effect and purport. I do not wish to say more on this particular question than is absolutely necessary, but bearing in mind the decisions in the cases of Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 233; L. R., 4 I. A., 47), Raghunath v. Nil Kanth (I. L. R, 20 Cal., 843; L. R., 20 I. A., 112), and Mokham Singh v. Rup Singh (I. L. R., 15 All, 352; L. R., 20 I. A., 127), it is clear that the question is important and difficult. Had that ground stood alone, I am not prepared to say the Court of the Subordinate Judge would not be quite competent to deal with it. But there are other circumstances which I must take into consideration. All the parties really interested in the suit reside either in Calcutta or in its immediate neighbourhood. So, upon the affidavits, do the witnesses who are likely to attend to give their testimony. It is not suggested that any of the witnesses for the plaintiff are at Dinagepur. Again, if the agreement cannot be supported in its entirety the plaintiff may only be entitled to so much as he has spent, and an account would be necessary. It is not suggested that [190] his accounts are at Dinagepur. The money was advanced here and the books are here.

The defendant states it would be extremely difficult for her to go to Dinagepur. She states she has no means to go herself or to take her witnesses. Again, the prayers for an injunction and receiver render the case one eminently fit to be tried in this Court. The balance of convenience is manifestly in favour of its being heard in Calcutta. To insist upon its being tried in Dinagepur would, in my opinion, place insuperable difficulties in the way of the defendant to defend the suit.

The other defendants leave the matter in the hands of the Court. For all the reasons I have given I think I ought to make the rule absolute, which I accordingly do. I reserve the costs of all parties.

PRESENT:
MR. JUSTICE SALE.

Kissory Mohun Roy
Kali Churn Ghose and others.*

Execution of decree—Mode of execution—Mortgage—Subsequent mortgagee—Execution against properties outside the local jurisdiction of the High Court--Leave to sue--Letters Patent, High Court, 1865, clause 12—Application of restrictive words of that clause.

Properties within Calcutta were mortgaged to the plaintiff, and those properties together with other properties out of Calcutta were mortgaged to a second mortgagee. In a suit against the mortgagor and the second mortgagee it was held that after the usual mortgage decree was made the second mortgagee had the right to proceed against the properties out of Calcutta for the realization of any balance of the mortgage money that might remain due to him.

[191] The restrictive words of clause 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, apply to the case of a plaintiff; but there is no similar restraining provision applicable to a case where the person seeking the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction is the defendant.

THIS was an application on notice to the parties to the suit, but no one appeared at the hearing to oppose the application.

The facts of the case for the purpose of this report appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Mr. R. Mittra for the Applicant.—The second mortgagee was properly made a party to the suit under section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act. By the decree an account was ordered to be taken in respect of his mortgage. He has received a portion of his mortgage money out of the surplus of the sale-proceeds of the properties within Calcutta, and now he applies, under the liberty reserved by the decree, for the sale of properties out of Calcutta for the realization of the balance due to him. The Court has exercised jurisdiction in respect of his mortgage. It is quite proper and desirable that he should obtain full relief in this suit. He has no other remedy. Clause 12 of the Letters Patent 1865 is no bar to his obtaining the relief he seeks for. The restrictive words of that clause have no application when a defendant asks the Court to exercise jurisdiction in respect of properties out of Calcutta.

Sale, J.— This suit was brought by the plaintiff on his mortgages, dated respectively the 19th of August 1888 and the 14th of December 1888. The properties, the subject of suit, are all in Calcutta within the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court. Those comprised in the first mortgage were also comprised in the second mortgage with other properties. These other properties were subsequently mortgaged to the defendant Pran Gobindo Shaw with further properties out of Calcutta.

By the decree it was referred to the Registrar to take an account in respect of each of the three mortgages, and failing redemption it was ordered that the properties comprised in the first and second mortgages should be sold, and the proceeds marshalled and applied so that the third mortgagee should have the full benefit of any surplus of the sale-proceeds of such of the properties comprised in his mortgage as were also comprised in the second mortgage, such properties being all in Calcutta. [192] The Registrar made his report. Then after the time allowed for redemption, the properties comprised in the first and second mortgages were sold under a final order for sale and the proceeds applied as directed by the decree, with the result that the first and second mortgages were satisfied, and a substantial payment was made towards satisfaction of the third mortgage. For realization of the balance due to the third mortgagee he now applies for sale of the unsold properties comprised in his mortgage—being properties out of Calcutta. He claims the right to proceed against these properties in this suit under the liberty reserved by the decree as follows: "And this Court doth hereby reserve the consideration of all further directions until the Registrar shall have made his report, and doth also reserve liberty to the defendant Pran Gobindo Shaw to proceed against the properties situated outside the town of Calcutta."

It is on every account desirable that the third mortgagee should also obtain full relief in this suit. He was, under section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, made a defendant because some of the properties comprised in his mortgage were also comprised in a former mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. His mortgage was thus included in the subject of suit, and a decree was made in respect of all the mortgages. The Court therefore had, and has exercised, jurisdiction with respect to the third mortgage. The only question is whether it is restrained from dealing with the remaining properties comprised therein and which are situated outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court, because prior leave to sue in respect thereof has not been obtained under clause 12 of the Letters Patent.

This clause vests the Court with jurisdiction to deal with suits for land where the land is situate either wholly or partly within and partly without the local limits of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, but in the latter case the exercise of its jurisdiction is made dependent upon prior leave to sue having been obtained; see Kellie v. Fraser (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 445). But words restrictive of the exercise by the Court of its jurisdiction must be construed strictly.

The restrictive words of the Charter apply to the case of a [193] plaintiff, but there is no similar restraining provision applicable to a case where the person seeking the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction is the defendant.

In the absence of any such restriction, I think I ought to make the order as prayed.

ORIGINAL CRIMINAL.

The 26th February, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Queen-Empress on the prosecution of Coverjee Hari Dass
versus Pursotam Dass Morarjee.

Charge—Form of Charge—Criminal breach of trust—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 408—Form of Indictment—Practice.

Where the first two counts of an indictment charged the prisoner under section 408* of the Penal Code with criminal breach of trust in respect of two sums of money, viz., Rs. 23-7-0 and Rs. 850, respectively, and the third and last count charged him with criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 9,168-6-0, which last-mentioned sum, as appeared from the depositions, represented a general deficiency in the prisoner's account, held, the third count must be struck out.

THE prisoner Pursotam Dass Morarjee, who was a gomastah of the firm of Coverjee Hari Dass, was charged with criminal breach of trust. The first two counts of the indictment charged him with criminal breach of trust in respect of two sums of money, viz., Rs. 23-7-0 and Rs. 850, respectively. The third count was in the following words: "That he the said Pursotam Dass Morarjee on or about the 22nd day of April in the year aforesaid in Calcutta aforesaid being entrusted in such capacity as aforesaid, being employed as a servant, to wit, gomastah of one Coverjee and others trading under the name or style of Coverjee Hari Dass with the sum of rupees ten thousand two hundred and seventy-four, fifteen annas and three pies, committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a portion thereof, to wit, the sum of rupees nine thousand one hundred and sixty-eight and annas six, and thereby he the said Pursotam Dass Morarjee committed an offence punishable under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code."

[194] The Standing Counsel (Mr. P. O' Kinealy) for the prosecution.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the prisoner.

On the case being called on for hearing Mr. J. G. Woodroffe, who appeared for the prisoner, stated that he wished before the prisoner was called on to plead to the indictment to take objection to the third count thereof.

HILL, J., suggested that as it would be inconvenient to keep the jurors in attendance during the argument the prisoner might be called on to plead to all the counts, stating that if after hearing Counsel he should hold the objection good, he would order the third count to be struck out.

A jury was accordingly empanelled, the prisoner pleading not guilty to all counts of the indictment.

* [Sec. 408:—Whoever, being a clerk or servant, or employed as a clerk or servant, and being in any manner entrusted in such capacity with property or with any dominion over property, commits criminal breach of trust in respect of that property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.]

Criminal breach of trust by a clerk or servant.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe.—The third count, though apparently in form, is in reality unsustainable. It is only sufficient if it deals with a single transaction. But it appears from the depositions that the sum alleged in that count to have been embezzled represents a general deficiency in the prisoner's account. A general deficiency may be constituted by a number of distinct embezzlements. The misappropriation of each separate item is a separate offence. Chetter v. The Queen (15 W. R. Cr., 5). When a number of sums are separately embezzled they cannot be added all together and treated as one embezzlement of the whole; Rex v. Williams (6 C. & P., 626). In The Queen v. Balls (L. R., 1 C. C. R., 328) there was to be a weekly accounting; moreover the account was one-sided. As two offences have been already charged in the first two counts, the third is bad. Under section 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code only three offences of the same kind can be charged. In this case more than three offences have in effect been charged. If an embezzlement takes place on two dates, and consists of two separate transactions, there must be two charges, and a trial held contrary to the provisions of section 234 is wholly inoperative; In the matter of Luchminaram (I.L R., 14 Cal., 128), Queen-Empress v. Juala Prasad [I.L.R., 7 All., 174 (177).] I refer to the unreported decision of WILSON, J., in The Queen v. Counsel cited in The Queen-Empress v Shama Churn [195] Sen tried in 1890 before PRINSEP, J. * and a special jury; also to the decision of FARAN, J., in the Bombay case of The Queen-Empress v. De Silva 1894 *. They are directly in point as to the unsustainability of the third count. The Queen-Empress v. Kellie (I. L. R., 17 All., 153) is against me; but it is submitted that this Court will follow its own previous rulings and that of the Bombay High Court. As the law now stands some specific sum must be proved to have been embezzled; it will not suffice to prove a general deficiency in the prisoner's account: Reg. v. Jones (8 C. & P., 288), Reg v. Chapman (1 C. & K., 119), Reg. v. Moah (Dear, C C, 626), Reg. v. Wolstenholme (11 Cox. C. C., 313), 2 Russell on Crimes, 376, 377, 380, Roscoe's Cr. Ev., 450. The decision in Rex v. Grove (7 C. & P., 635) proceeded merely on the facts of that particular case as is pointed out in Reg. v. Jones (8 C. & P., 288). Moreover seven out of the fifteen Judges dissented from that decision; 2 Russell on Crimes, 377. The case of The Queen v. Lambert (2 Cox. C. C., 309) is not opposed to this general rule, as is explained in 2 Russell on Crimes, 377 note, which is further supported by the decisions of the Indian Courts already cited, with the exception of the The Queen-Empress v. Kellie (I. L. R., 17 All., 153). The amendment of the Penal Code by section 4 of Act III of 1895 deals only with the offence of falsification of accounts, which though an offence of a kindred, is yet of a different, nature. It reproduces the provisions of 38 and 39 Vic., Cap., 24. see Statement of Objects and Reasons, Gazette of India, March 24, 1894; Reg. v. Butt (15 Cox. C. C., 564). The proviso applies to charges under section 477A of the Penal Code only. This is not a charge under that section. Had the Legislature intended to make the proviso of general application, it would have so enacted. If it will not be sufficient to prove a general deficiency in order to make out the commission of the offence, the Court will not permit evidence to be given, which will only have the effect of prejudicing the prisoner. On this ground as on the first it is submitted the third count should be struck out.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. P. O'Kinealy).— Unless evidence [196] be admitted of a general deficiency, it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to prove the commission of the offence in these cases. See remarks of ERLE, J.,

* Counsel was allowed to refer to the Reports of these cases in the Statesman and the Times of India respectively—Ed. note.

in The Queen v. Lambert (2 Cox. C. C., 309). We are within this case, as also those of The Queen v. Balls (L. R., 1 C. C. R., 328), and Rex v. Grove (7 C. & P., 635), the facts of which latter case are on all fours with those of the present prosecution. The Queen-Empress v. Kellie (I.L.R., 17 All., 153) is directly in point. Moreover we say that the offence did constitute one transaction, and that the prisoner committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a specific sum. The case for the prosecution is that he took away a sum of money which represents the deficiency at one time and on a particular day, namely, on the day on which he is said to have absconded. [HILL, J.—The evidence by which you propose to prove this is mere speculation; it is not evidence to go to the jury.] The evidence I have opened to the jury is all we are prepared to give, and if the prisoner took the money before the day on which he absconded there is no evidence to support the third count.

The Court here adjourned.

On the re-assembling of the Court after the midday adjournment, judgment on the point argued was delivered by

Hill, J.—Since the adjournment I have had the advantage of consulting the learned Chief Justice, and, though my own opinion is that expressed by ERLE, J., in The Queen v. Lambert (2 Cox C C., 309), I must hold that the third count is in form opposed to the practice of this Court in charges of this nature, and that it must be struck out of the indictment.

Verdict—Guilty.

[197] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 7th September, 1896.

PRESENT:

SIR W. COMER PETHERAM, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Dijendra Nath Roy Chowdhry and another............Plaintiffs

Soylendra Nath Roy Chowdhry and others............Defendants.*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 158—Tenure, Incidents of—Application against same tenant holding two or more tenancies—Form of petition.

Held [by PETHERAM, C.J., and BANERJEE J. (RAMPINI, J., dissenting)], that under section 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlord is authorized to include in one application two or more tenancies held by the same tenant. Golap Chand Nowlakha v. Ashutosh Chatterjee (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 602), referred to.

THE plaintiffs, who were the owners of sixteen annas of the zemindari No. 650, Pergannah Serperajpore, applied on the 18th December 1894, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergannahs, under section 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to ascertain the real areas of the different pieces of land appertaining to the jammas, held by the defendants, and also to ascertain of what description of tenants the defendants were. The plaintiffs alleged that one jamma, standing in the name of Chiranjib Khan, and another, standing in the name of Goluck Chunder Bose, both situate in the same village, and appertaining to taluq No. 650, used to be recorded, in the zemindari seristha of their predecessor; that one Bepin Chunder Roy, deceased, father of the defendants, was in possession of the said two jammas, and that since his death the defendants were in possession. The defendants contended that the two jammas being separate and the lands also being separate, a joint application could not be made in accordance with law. They also contended that, if a separate application were made, in respect of each of these jammas, the Court would have no jurisdiction to try it. The matter came on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge on the [198] 10th May 1895, and he made an order to the effect that the contention of the defendants should prevail, and in that view the question of jurisdiction would have to be decided, having regard to the nature of the tenancies. On the 29th June 1895, the matter came before him again, and he passed the following order :—

"The applicant not having expressed his willingness to elect, though ordered to do so, I dismiss his application with costs."

From this order the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babu Hem Chunder Banerjee, Babu Ram Churn Mitter, Babu Umakali Mookerjee, Babu Srish Chunder Chowdhry and Babu Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhry for the Appellants.

Babu Jogesh Chunder Roy, for the Respondents.

The appeal was originally heard by a Bench consisting of PETHERAM, C.J., and RAMPINI, J., and the following judgments were delivered.

Petheram, C.J. (after stating the facts, continued).—The zemindars have appealed, and as I have the misfortune to differ from Mr. Justice RAMPINI as to the meaning of section 158, I proceed to state my own view of it, so far as it affects the present question.

The question is whether under section 158 the owner of a zemindari can include all the land held by the same tenant within his zemindari, though it is held under more than one tenure, or whether he must make a separate application in respect of the land held under each tenure. The question is entirely one of the construction of the section, and no question of discretion or convenience or inconvenience can, in my opinion, be properly considered in answering it.

The Court to which the application is to be made would, undoubtedly, have jurisdiction to determine a suit for the possession of the land between the zemindar and the tenant, and to determine in one suit questions relating to lands which might be held under more than one tenure ; and, as the same word "land" is used in the section with reference to a suit and an application, I can only come to the conclusion that the framers of the section meant the same land in each case. Had they intended that the word when used with reference to an application should not mean [199] land, but something else, I cannot think that they would not have said so.

The only word in the section upon which an argument for the respondent can be founded is the word "class" in sub-section (c), as it may, no doubt, be argued that if the Legislature had intended that the lands of several tenures might be dealt with in one application, they would have used the plural instead of the singular, as, if several tenures were dealt with, the same person might be found to fall into several classes of tenants. A little consideration will, however, show that this argument is not well founded, as it is equally possible that the tenant may belong to the same class in respect of all the tenures, and then the word in the sub-section be sufficient to meet the case; and it would follow that if this is to be treated as the test word, a zemindar might include the land of several tenures in the same application when the tenant fell in the same class in respect of all of them, but could not do so when he would fall into different classes: a result which would be very unfortunate, as it would make the jurisdiction of the Court dependent on the decision of the case.

In my opinion there is nothing in the context to show any different intention, and the ordinary rule applies that the singular word "class" in the sub-section includes the plural "classes." I think the order of the Subordinate Judge is wrong, and that the case should be remanded to him to re-instate it on his file and dispose of it according to law; but as Mr. Justice RAMPINI is of a different opinion, the papers must be laid before a third Judge.

Rampini, J.—This is a proceeding instituted under section 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergannahs. The plaintiffs, who are landlords, applied to have determined the incidents of two tenancies, now in the occupation of the three defendants. One of these tenancies is described as a jamma, standing in the name of Chiranjib Khan, and bearing a rental of Rs. 169-13-6, and the other as a jamma, standing in the name of Goluck Chunder Bose, bearing a rental of Rs. 69-11-15. The plaintiffs applied to have determined the areas, positions and boundaries of the different plots of land appertaining to these jammas, and the classes of tenants to which the defendants belonged; also whether the rents of the tenancies [200] were liable to enhancement or not. They valued their application as a suit at a total value of Rs 5,100, the value of one of the tenancies being, according to them, Rs. 3,731, and that of the other Rs. 1,369.

The defendants inter alia pleaded that the values of the tenancies were Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 300, respectively; that a separate proceeding should have been instituted with regard to each tenancy; and that, accordingly, the proceedings should have been instituted in the Court of the Munsif of Basirhat.

The Subordinate Judge held that a separate application should have been presented with regard to each tenancy: he gave the plaintiffs an opportunity of electing with respect to which tenancy their present application should be regarded as applying, and, as they made no election within the time allowed them for the purpose, he dismissed the application.

An appeal has been preferred against this order, and it has been contended (1) that there is nothing in section 158 to prevent one application being presented for the determination of the incidents of any number of tenancies, provided they are in the occupation of the same person, or, as in this case, in that of the same set of persons; and (2) that, under the provisions of sections 45 and 647 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Subordinate Judge was bound to determine the incidents of the two tenancies in one application, and that, if he found it inconvenient to do so, all he could do was to order separate trials with regard to each tenancy.

I am of opinion that the order of the Subordinate Judge is right, and that the Legislature, in framing section 158 of the Tenancy Act, did not contemplate that in one proceeding under this section the incidents of more than one tenancy should be determined. This appears to me to have been held by the learned Judges who decided the case of Golap Chand Nowlakha v. Ashutosh Chatterjee (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 602). They said in their judgment in that case: "In this case Ashutosh Chatterjee applied to the Court under section 158 of the Rent Act to have the nature of a large number of tenancies determined in one suit. In other words, he asked the Civil Court to do what the law declares in [201] section 103 to be the peculiar duty of the Revenue authorities. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that section 158 only applied to particular cases, and did not justify such an application. The District Judge, however, was of opinion that the section should be literally construed, and that the proceeding should be allowed. We think the Legislature did not contemplate that the several causes of action should be lumped up together. There is no procedure known to our law that recognizes the right to bring batches of suits in one claim. We direct that the decree of the lower Court be set aside, and that of the first Court affirmed with costs."

Now, the plaintiffs in this case appear to me to be doing exactly what the learned Judges in the above cited judgment held could not, and should not, be done. They are bringing one application with regard to more than one tenancy. They are lumping up different causes of action They are instituting two suits, or rather two proceedings, by one and the same application. They are trying to make the settlement procedure applicable to proceedings of the Civil Court under section 158.

No doubt a distinction can be drawn between the present case and the case of Golap Chand Nowlakha v. Ashutosh Chatterjee (I L.R., 21 Cal., 602), inasmuch as in this case, one set of defendants hold both tenancies, while in the case of Golap Chand Nowlakha v. Ashutosh Chatterjee (I.L R., 21 Cal., 602), there were about twenty tenants in occupation of the different tenancies. The learned Judges, who decided that case, however, did not base their judgment on that fact. They based it on the ground that the Legislature in section 158 contemplated that one tenancy only should be dealt with in one proceeding under that section, whatever might be the literal interpretation of its terms, and I am of the same opinion. I may add that the word "class" in clause (c) of the section clearly points to this conclusion. The "class" to which the tenant belongs is to be determined. The Legislature did not contemplate that the "classes" to which he belonged should be determined, as might be necessary if more than one tenancy could be the subject of one application under section 158, for one tenant could, undoubtedly, belong to more than one class of tenants, if he were in occupation of more than one tenancy.

[202] Then, I am of opinion that sections 45 and 647 of the Civil Procedure Code are not applicable to proceedings under section 158. Section 143, clause (2) of the Tenancy Act makes the Civil Procedure Code applicable to all suits; but not to "miscellaneous proceedings" initiated by an application. From section 144, clauses (1) and (2), it is clear that the Tenancy Act makes a distinction between "suits" and "proceedings" initiated by application. The order on an application under section 158 has, by clause (3) of that section, the force of, and is subject to, the like appeal as a decree; but this does not make it a suit, [see the case of Upadhya Thakur v. Persidh Singh (I. L R., 23 Cal., 723), in which it has been ruled that proceedings in a case under section 104 (2) of the Tenancy Act, which are initiated by an application, are not a suit; though the final order on them may have the force of a decree and be subject to appeal|. That being so, the Subordinate Judge was not bound to apply the provisions of sections 45 and 647 of the Civil Procedure Code to the proceedings in this case, and he had a discretion to pass such order as he thought fit to pass in the circumstances. I consider the order he did pass was a very proper one. He required the plaintiffs to elect to which tenancy their application should be regarded as applying, leaving them free to present another application for a determination of the incidents of the other tenancy. As the plaintiffs advisedly refused to make an election, he rejected the application.

This order seems to me to be right, both because, as already pointed out, the plaintiffs' application was not one such as the Legislature, in framing section 158, contemplated should be presented under it, and as a perfectly proper one under the circumstances. It would be manifestly exceedingly inconvenient to a Court to have to determine the incidents of more than one tenancy in one proceeding The lands of each tenancy may consist of different plots. They may be situated in different villages. Each plot may be held at a different rent and at a different rate of rent. The situation, quantity and boundaries of each plot in each village and the rent, and rate of rent, at which each was held, would have to be ascertained and described. Then, if one application is good for more than one tenancy, why should it not be good for twenty? [203] as in the case of Golap Chand Nowlakha v. Ashutosh Chatterjee (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 602), or for even more. It would in that case be a most complicated matter to determine the names of all the tenants (for there might be joint tenants, as in this case), and the different classes to which they belong in respect of each tenancy. The decree in such a proceeding would be a most portentous document, full of most numerous and complicated details, having no connection with each other. It is, therefore, in my opinion, most desirable for the sake of clearness, simplicity, order and method, that each application under section 158 should have relation to only one tenancy and no more.

It has been said that all confusion could be avoided by the Judge ordering separate trials with regard to each tenancy, though a joint application may have been presented for the determination of the incidents of all of them. But this would be an inconvenient course to pursue. The record of one trial only would be complete. In the course of the other trials reference would constantly have to be made to the application in the first trial, or else a copy would have to be put up with the record of each trial. But the simplest way of all would be to require, as the Subordinate Judge has done, that an application should be presented in each case, and that, as I have observed, would seem to me to be what the Legislature contemplated.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

In consequence of the difference of opinion between their Lordships, the case was, under section 575 of the Civil Procedure Code, referred to Mr. Justice BANERJEE for his decision. The parties were represented at this hearing by the same pleaders as at the hearing before the Division Court. The arguments appear sufficiently from the judgment delivered by Banerjee, J.—In this appeal, which arises out of an application under section 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and which has been referred to me under section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure, owing to a difference of opinion between the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice RAMPINI, who first heard the appeal, the sole question for determination is whether, under section 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlord is authorized to include [204] in one application two or more tenancies held by the same tenant, or whether he is bound to make a separate application in respect of each separate tenancy.

The Court below has held that he is bound to make a separate application in respect of each tenancy, and it has, accordingly, dismissed the application of the appellants who had made an application in respect of two tenancies held under them by the respondents.

It is contended, on behalf of the appellants, that section 158 contains no provision, either express or implied, against the making of an application like the one in this case; and that, in the absence of any such provision, their application ought to have been entertained, and any practical difficulty in the determination of the incidents of the two tenancies in question in one proceeding might have been obviated by following the course provided for in section 45 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which applies to proceedings under section 158. On the other hand, it has been argued for the respondents that section 158 only contemplates an application in respect of a single tenancy; that the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to proceedings under that section; and that it was competent to the Court below to disallow an application of this sort, as it has done, on the ground of practical inconvenience.

After giving the matter my best consideration, the conclusion I arrive at is that the contention on behalf of the appellants is well founded.

It is true that section 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in speaking of "the landlord," "the tenant," "the land," "the class" to which the tenant belongs, and "the rent payable" by him, uses words in the singular number only; but by section 2, clause (2) of the General Clauses Act I of 1868, words in the singular include the plural, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context. Some of these terms, such as "the landlord," "the tenant" and "the land" must obviously, in many cases, have to be taken as including the plural; for there may, very often, be more landlords than one forming a body of joint landlords, more tenants than one forming a body of joint tenants, and more plots of land than one of various descriptions in respect of one and the same tenancy; nor [206] is the class to which the tenant belongs, the particular mentioned in clause (c) of the section, always one and the same in respect of one and the same tenancy, as it is not unusual to have a tenancy created by one and the same document in respect of alluvial or jungle lands, with a fixed rate of rent for one part of the land, and a progressively varying rate for another. Thus some of the words used in this section in the singular number have often to be taken also in the plural. Is there anything repugnant in the subject or context, then, to say that the land of the tenant, the class to which he belongs, and the rent payable by him, may relate to more tenancies than one, all held by the same tenant or tenants under the same landlord? I do not think there is any. If the tenants are different in respect of different tenancies, then, no doubt, the case would not come within the scope of the section, it being a case already provided for by chapter X, section 103 and the following sections; and this is what has been decided in the case of Golap Chand Nowlakha v. Ashutosh Chatterjee (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 602).

That case, however, is no authority for the contention that a single application by the landlord or joint landlords in respect of two or more tenancies held under him or them by the same tenant or tenants cannot be entertained under section 158. Special stress was laid in the argument on behalf of the respondents upon the language of clause (c) of the section which uses the term "class" to which the tenant belongs in the singular number, as indicating that it is only an application in regard to a single tenancy that the section contemplates; but, as I have shown above, no such inference can arise, seeing that even in regard to a tenancy, created by one and the same document, the tenant may belong to one class in respect of a portion of the land demised, and to a different class in respect of another part, being a raiyat holding at fixed rates as to a part, and merely an occupancy raiyat as to the rest. It was argued that, if one application in regard to two or more tenancies, though held by the same tenant, was entertained, the proceedings would become complicated, and that the course suggested in the argument on behalf of the appellants, namely, that section 45 of the Code of Civil Procedure might be followed, would be inapplicable, because the Code of [206] Civil Procedure did not apply to proceedings under section 158; and in support of this contention, sub-section 2 of section 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was referred to as showing that the Code of Civil Procedure, subject to certain qualifications, applied only to suits, whereas proceedings under section 158 were not suits.

I am of opinion that this argument is not sound. Section 647 of the Civil Procedure Code makes the procedure prescribed in the Code applicable, as far as it can be, to all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction, other than suits and appeals. It is true that that section is subject to the provision of section 4 of the Code which provides that, "save as provided in the second paragraph of section 3," nothing contained in the Code shall affect any law "prescribing a special procedure for suits between landholders and their tenants." But if a proceeding under section 158 of the Tenancy Act is a suit, the Civil Procedure Code applies to it by virtue of section 143, clause (2) of the Tenancy Act. If it is not a suit the saving clause in section 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to it, and, therefore, section 647 of the Code applies. In any view, then, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure may be applied to the proceedings in question, so far as they can be made applicable, and the inconvenience resulting from the proceedings becoming complicated by the inclusion of more tenancies than one in an application under section 158, may be obviated by following the course prescribed by section 45 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

I should notice here a contention raised, on behalf of the respondents, that section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure is limited in its application to incidental proceedings arising out of suits and execution of decrees, such as proceedings for setting aside sales and the like. This contention is sufficiently met by the case of Thakur Pershad v. Fakirullah (I. L. R., 17 All., 106 : L. R., 22 I. A., 44) in which their Lordships of the Privy Council make this observation : "Their Lordships think that the proceedings spoken of in section 647 include original matters in the nature of suits, such as proceedings in probates, guardianships, and so forth, and do not include executions."

For the foregoing reasons I agree in the view taken by the [207] learned Chief Justice in this case, and I think that this appeal ought to be allowed with costs, the order of the Court below set aside, and the case sent back in order that it may be heard and determined on the merits.

Bengal Tenancy Act, sections 20, clause (3), 79, 82, 85, 160, sub-sections (c) and (e)—Right of Non-Occupancy raiyat —Death of raiyat having right of non-occupancy Heirs—Re-entry by landlord.

The right of a non-occupancy raiyat (who does not hold under any express engagement) in his holding is not heritable.

THE plaintiffs brought this suit to recover possession of certain land as heirs of one Nilu Nasya, who held a jote under the second defendant, the zemindar of the village. The plaintiffs asserted that, on the death of Nilu Nasya, the zemindar unlawfully put the first defendant into possession of the land and dispossessed them. The Court of First Instance held that the jote in question, being a non-occupancy holding, was not heritable, and dismissed the suit. The Lower Appellate Court reversed this decree. The defendants brought this appeal to the High Court on the ground that the Court below had "erred in holding that the rights of a non-occupancy raiyat are heritable."

Babu Mukund Nath Roy for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Chunder Sen for the Respondents.

Babu Mukund Nath Roy.—Prior to Act VIII of 1885 non-occupancy holdings were not heritable, and it was even questioned whether a right of occupancy was a transferable tenure,—see Ajoodhia Persad v. Emam Bandee Begum (B. L. R., Sup Vol., 725: 7 W R., 528), and Jatee Ram Surmah v. Mungloo Surmah (8 W R., 60). There is nothing in the Act to show that the right of a non-occupancy raiyat is heritable.

[208] Babu Surendra Chunder Sen for the respondents.--Section 20, sub-section (3) of Act VIII of 1885 shows that a non-occupancy holding is heritable. The right of a non-occupancy raiyat to compensation for improvements can be claimed by his heir under section 82.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ.)

Banerjee, J.—The suit, out of which this appeal arises, was brought by the plaintiffs-respondents to recover possession of some land on the allegation that it constituted the jote of one Nilu Nasya; that the plaintiffs as his heirs are entitled to the same, and that the second defendant, their zemindar, has wrongfully dispossessed them and settled the land with defendant No. 1. The defence was a denial of the plaintiffs' right.

The first Court found that Nilu held the land as a non-occupancy raiyat, that he relinquished the holding in his life-time, and that a non-occupancy holding was not heritable; and it accordingly dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the Lower Appellate Court has reversed that decision and given the plaintiffs a decree on the ground that the land was not shewn to have been relinquished by Nilu, and that a non-occupancy holding is heritable under the law.

In second appeal the only question raised is, whether the right of a non-occupancy raiyat (who does not hold under any express engagement) in his holding is heritable, and the holding passes to his heirs so as to entitle them to claim it as against the landlord who has re-entered upon the land on his death.

The learned Vakil for the defendants-appellants contends that the question ought to be answered in the negative; that the absence of any provision in the chapter of the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to non-occupancy raiyats similar to section 26, which enacts that the right of occupancy is heritable, clearly shows that it is not the intention of that Act to make non-occupancy holdings heritable; and that under the law as it stood before that enactment, not only were such holdings not heritable, but the heritability of the right of occupancy itself was open to question, as will appear from the cases of Ajoodhia Persad v Emam Bandee [209] Begum (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 725: 7 W. R., 528) and Jatee Ram Surmah v. Mangloo Surmah (8 W. R., 60). On the other hand, it is argued for the respondents that section 20, sub-section (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act indicates that a non-occupancy holding is heritable, and that sections 79, 82 and 160, clauses (c) and (e) of the Act, go to support the same view.

After considering the arguments on both sides, we are of opinion that the appellants' contention should prevail. Sub-section (3) of section 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act only shows that where the heir of a non-occupancy raiyat is allowed to hold on, he may add the period of his own occupation to that of his predecessor to make up the period of twelve years necessary for the acquisition of the right of occupancy; but the provision is expressly said to be limited to the purposes of section 20, and it does not show that he can compel the landlord to give up possession after re-entry on the late tenant's death. And the utmost that can be inferred from the other provisions of the Act relied upon is that some of the rights possessed by a non-occupancy raiyat, such as his right to claim compensation for improvements, or to remain in occupation in certain cases notwithstanding a sale of the superior tenure for rent, may be claimable by his heir. But, on the other hand, the absence of any provision relating to non-occupancy holdings similar to that embodied in section 26 of the Act with reference to the right of occupancy, affords in our opinion the strongest indication that the Legislature did not intend to make non-occupancy holdings heritable Under the law as it stood before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, non-occupancy raiyats not holding under any express engagements were treated as tenants at will, or as tenants from year to year. See Act X of 1859, section 25; see also the observations of Mr. Justice FIELD in his Introduction to the Bengal Regulations, p. 40, and those of Mr. Justice TREVOR in Thakooranee Dossee v. Bisheshur Mookerjee, [3 W. R., 29 (38): B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 202 (220)].

Under the old law, non-occupancy raiyats were the lowest class of raiyats, and if the respondent's contention be correct, it would follow that all raiyati holdings were heritable. But this would be [210] somewhat inconsistent with certain provisions of law, such as Regulation VIII of 1819, section 11, clause 3, which speak of hereditary raiyats as a distinct class.

For the foregoing reasons we think this appeal must be decreed, the decree of the Lower Appellate Court reversed, and that of the first Court restored with costs in this Court and the Court below.

Rampini, J.—I concur in the judgment of my learned brother. There is no doubt a very general impression in Bengal that there is now no great difference between occupancy and non-occupancy rights, and that both are heritable. There would seem to be some justification for the former view, for a non-occupancy raiyat admitted to occupation of land otherwise than under a registered lease can apparently not be ejected except on one of the grounds specified in section 44; so that as long as he does not come within the provisions of that section, he is as secure in the occupation of his land as if he had been an occupancy raiyat. Then, from the provisions of section 20, clause 3, of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it would at first sight appear as if the rights of a non-occupancy raiyat were heritable in the same way as are those of an occupancy raiyat, for its terms apply to all raiyats; but on closer consideration it is clear that the terms of this clause are limited by the words "for the purposes of this section;" so that, after all, the clause only comes to this, that a person whose father or predecessor in interest had an occupancy right becomes on the death of his father or predecessor in interest a settled raiyat, and that an heir to a raiyat, if allowed by the landlord to occupy the land of his predecessor, can add to the period of his occupation that of his predecessor's occupation for the purpose of the acquisition of the status of a settled raiyat. The old law would seem to have gone no further; for the words "the holding of the father or other person from whom a raiyat inherits shall be deemed to be the holding of the raiyat within the meaning of this section," which occur in section 6 of both Act X of 1859 and Bengal Act VIII of 1869, are also limited by the concluding words of the clause, and would seem to mean merely that when the heir of a raiyat is allowed, or in any way manages, to occupy his predecessor's land as a raiyat, the time of his occupation as such shall be added to that of his predecessor, when computing [211] the period of twelve years necessary for the accrual of an occupancy right.

This interpretation of the law, apparently the only one that can be put upon the strict terms of the Bengal Tenancy Act, may in some cases cause hardship. Thus, if a non-occupancy raiyat dies while his crop is on the ground, then, unless the rule of English law as to emblements [see Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant, chapter XX, section 3 (a)] applies to Bengal, and I know of no instance of its having been held applicable, the crop will be lost to his heirs; for death determines the tenancy of the raiyat if his interest is not a heritable one, and his heirs cannot enter on the land and reap the crop after the tenancy has been determined. Again, section 79 of the Bengal Tenancy Act actually encourages a non-occupancy raiyat to erect a suitable dwelling house on his land for the occupation of himself and his family,—also to sink wells and effect other improvements on his land even against his landlord's will. If ejected during his life-time he can recover compensation from his landlord (section 82), but the moment he dies, if his rights be not heritable, the benefit of, and the money sunk in, these improvements are lost to his heirs, who would seem to be liable to ejectment from the land and dwelling-house at the pleasure of the landlord.

Then, the law may also work hardly in the case of under-raiyats. The provisions of section 85 are certainly not clear. They provide that a sub-lease shall not be valid against a raiyat's landlord unless registered, and that a sub-lease shall not be admitted to registration if it purports to create a term exceeding nine years. This would seem to imply, though it is nowhere expressly provided, that a sub-lease, if registered and for a term not exceeding nine years, will be valid against the raiyat's landlord, whether he consents to it or not. But if the sub-lease is executed by a non-occupancy raiyat, whose rights are not heritable, it will certainly be rendered void by his death; for a person cannot assign an interest in land exceeding that which he himself possesses, and if his rights are determined by his death, then so must also be the rights of his sub-lessee, though apparently protected by a lease executed and registered with the sanction of the law.

The non-heritability of non-occupancy raiyats' rights may [212] cause loss to the landlord, as well as to the non-occupancy raiyats' heirs; for it has been held that occupancy rights being heritable the heirs of an occupancy raiyat are liable for the rent of their predecessor's land, whether they occupy it or not [Peary Mohun Mookerjee v. Kumaris Chunder Sirkar (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 790)]. But if non-occupancy raiyat's rights are not heritable, their heirs who do not enter on occupation cannot be held liable by the landlords for the rent of the lands, and the landlords may consequently lose money.

F. K. D. Appeal decreed.

NOTES.

[I. This was finally overruled in (1914) 18 C.W.N., 828 where the Full Bench held that the non-occupancy raiyat's holding was heritable under the Bengal Tenancy Act 1885. Divergent views had been held in (1907) 34 Cal., 516 : 11 C.W.N., 626 : 5 C.L.J., 457 F.B. and doubts had been expressed in (1909) 13 C.W.N., 937 : 10 C.L.J., 608; (1904) 31 Cal., 757 F.B.

II. In (1904) 31 Cal., 757 F.B. . 8 C.W.N., 179, it was held that the heir of an under-raiyat under an annual holding was entitled on the death of the under-raiyat to remain in possession of the land until the end of the then agricultural year for the purpose, if the land has been sub-let, of realising the rent which might accrue during the year; or if not sub-let, for the purpose of tending and gathering in the crops.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 30th November, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

versus

Upendra Chunder Chowdhry (Plaintiff) and others............Defendants.*

Landlord and Tenant -Transfer by Tenant without consent of Landlord—Original Tenant remaining in possession as sub-tenant of the transferee—Abandonment of tenure- -Liability to ejectment—Pleading—Parties.

Where the defendants had purchased the rights of the original tenants of certain jote lands, without obtaining the consent of the landlord to the transfer of the tenures, and the original tenants had remained in possession as sub-tenants of the transferees, Held, that the principle laid down in Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhry (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 590) was not applicable, and that the landlord was entitled to a decree for ejectment against the transferees.

THE plaintiff brought this suit as the proprietor of a share of a village (the remaining share of which belonged to defendants Nos. 4 and 5 who did not appear) to eject the first three defendants from certain jote lands which had been purchased by them, on the ground that these lands were ordinary raiyati jotes and could not, according to the custom prevailing in the district, be transferred, and that the defendants had transferred them without his permission and without entering into any settlement with him. The suit was defended on the ground among others that the heirs of the raiyats whose jotes had been purchased were still in possession and had not surrendered their holdings. It was found by both the [213] lower Courts that the former tenants having abandoned their holdings under the plaintiff and having become tenants of the defendants their jotes were not subsisting at time of suit, and that the ruling in the case of Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhry (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 590) was not applicable.

Babu Sreenath Dass and Dr. Asutosh Mukerji for the Appellants.

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose and Babu Grish Chunder Chowdhry for the Respondent.

Babu Sreenath Dass.—The plaintiff as a co-sharer was not entitled to maintain the suit without joining the other co-sharers as co-plaintiffs or establishing satisfactory grounds for not so joining them. The original tenants did not abandon their holdings. They remained in possession, though as sub-tenants of the transferees, and hence the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed—See Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhry (I. L. R , 20 Cal., 590), and Shrishteedhur Biswas v. Madan Sirdar (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 648).

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose for the Respondent. —It was found by the Court of first instance that the lands were not transferable by custom. The purchaser is bound to communicate with the zemindar and obtain his consent to the transfer of the tenure. Bhojuhuree Buniek v. Aka Golam Ali (16 W. R., 97). The original tenants are the sub-tenants of the defendants and pay no rent to the landlord. They must be taken to have surrendered their holdings, and the case of Kabil Sirdar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhry (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 590) is not applicable.

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff, respondent, to recover khas possession of his share in certain lands on the allegation that the principal defendants, who alleged that they were in possession of the same as purchasers of the jote rights of the former tenants thereof, had no right to remain on the land, the alleged jotes not being transferable, and that as the plaintiff's co-sharers have not joined with them in the suit, they are made defendants.

[214] The co-sharer defendants did not enter appearance, but the principal defendants defended the action on various allegations of which it is necessary now to notice only one, namely, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover khas possession, as the original tenants were still in possession. This objection led to an issue being raised in the first Court, which was the seventh issue in the case. Both the Courts below have found for the plaintiff upon that issue, and they have accordingly given him a decree for so much of the land as was found to be in the possession of the principal defendants.

In second appeal two objections have been raised against the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, first, that it was wrong in giving the plaintiff any decree at all when he was only a fractional co-sharer in the zemindari and the other co-sharers did not join as plaintiffs, and, second, that upon the facts found, the lower Appellate Court was wrong in giving the plaintiff any decree for khas possession when it ought to have held that the original tenants, being still in possession of the holdings though as sub-tenants under the defendants, a suit for khas possession was not maintainable.

The first objection was never raised in either of the Courts below, and we do not think it right and proper to allow it to be raised at this last stage of the case. It is an objection which, if raised in time, might have been met. Moreover, upon the facts found by the lower Appellate Court, the defendants are mere trespassers upon the land, and as against them there could be no objection to a fractional co-sharer in the zemindari maintaining a suit for khas possession.

In support of the second contention, two cases have been relied upon. One of these, the case of Kabil Sardar v Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhry (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 590), has been considered by the Courts below, and they have both found that the facts of this case are very different from those of the case cited. In our opinion the Courts below are quite right in holding that that case has no application to the present. There a share of the holding was sold by the original tenants to certain members of their family and, after the sale, the entire holding remained jointly in the possession of the [215] original tenants and the transferees, and the rent of the holding continued to be paid in its entirety in the names of the original tenants and the transferees In that state of things, the lower Appellate Court having given the plaintiff, the landlord, a decree for khas possession, all the defendants in the suit, that is, the original tenants and the transferees, appealed to this Court, and this Court reversed the decree appealed against and dismissed the suit of the plaintiff, holding that, as there had been no abandonment of the holding by the original tenants, the landlord had acquired no right to re-enter. In the present case on the contrary the facts found are, that the rights of the original tenants have been entirely transferred to other persons, that some of these transferees are in possession of portions of the tenures upon payment of rent to the landlord or his ijaradars, that in regard to the remaining lands of the tenures, though the original tenants may be still in possession, they are in possession as sub-tenants of the transferees and have paid no rent to the landlord for the last ten or eleven years The original tenants were not made parties to the suit nor was any objection taken to the suit proceeding in their absence, and the present appeal is only on behalf of the purchasers. Upon a review of these facts, the lower Appellate Court has distinctly come to the conclusion that the former owners of the tenures which the defendants have purchased have abandoned their holdings under the plaintiff. That being so, we think that the facts of this case are so essentially different from those of the case of Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhry (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 590) that the principle of that decision can have no application to the present case.

The other case relied upon is that of Srishteedhur Biswas v. Madan Sirdar (I. L. R, 9 Cal., 618). There also the whole of the tenure after the transfer continued in the possession of the original tenants under a sub-lease from the transferees, and the party who before the lower Appellate Court contested the correctness of the decree for ejectment given by the first Court, was one of the original tenants, the lower Appellate Court held that as there had not been any abandonment of the holding of the original tenants, the suit for ejectment was not maintainable; and that decision was affirmed on second appeal by the plaintiff to this Court That [216] considerable importance was attached to the fact of the original tenant having been the party who contested the decree for ejectment, would appear from the observations contained in the last but one paragraph of the judgment of Mr. Justice WILSON, in which he distinguished that case from the case of Dwarkanath Misser v. Hurrish Chunder (I. L. R., 4 Cal, 925).

We are of opinion, therefore, that the two cases relied upon are both distinguishable from the one now before us; and that we must here follow the general rule laid down by the Full Bench in the case of Narendra Narain Roy v Ishan Chunder Sen (13 B. L. R., 274 : 22 W. R, 22) and hold upon the facts found by the lower Appellate Court that the landlord was entitled to the decree for ejectment that has been made in his favour. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

F. K. D. ——— Appeal dismissed.

[218] Ameer Ali, J. —The plaintiff seeks in this suit to recover possession of two houses situated in Calcutta, being No. 97, Canning Street, and No. 2, Portuguese Church Street. Originally she had also included in her claim No. 96, Canning Street, but when the case came on for trial that portion of the claim was abandoned.

The circumstances which have given rise to this suit are shortly these.

On the 9th of February 1816 a deed of settlement in contemplation of a marriage was executed by a gentleman named Moradkhan, belonging to the Armenian community. The lady whom he was going to marry, together with the trustees of the settlement, were parties to the deed.

By that deed Moradkhan assigned a sum of Rs. 25,000, which he had lent out to some people, to the aforesaid trustees, named Manuk and Gasper, upon certain trusts, to which I shall refer more particularly later on, with a power to them to invest the money when realised in "real or Government securities." In pursuance of or acting under that power the trustees on the 7th of May 1817 acquired the two houses which form the subject-matter of the present suit. Varvar Kalloos, the lady who had married Moradkhan, died on the 9th of August 1837, leaving her surviving her husband and a daughter named Mariam. On the 5th of January 1839 there was a deed executed between Gasper Vardon Gasper, who was going to marry Mariam Moradkhan, of the first part, Mariam Moradkhan, of the second part, her father Moradkhan of the third part, and the surviving trustee of the old settlement of 1816 of the fourth part, and two persons named Peter Jacob Paul and Carapiet Jacob of the fifth part, by which the properties in question were given to the trustees under the new deed upon certain trusts which require particular attention.

It was provided by this new deed that, during the life-time of Moradkhan, half of the rents and profits of these two houses should be taken by him and half by Gasper, the intended husband of Mariam; that after the death of Moradkhan the rents and profits should go to Gasper and Mariam, and upon the death of either of them to the survivor; and after the death of the survivor to the use absolutely of the issue of marriage, if any.

The marriage between Gasper and Mariam took place on the [219] 10th of January 1839, and on the 8th of January 1839 two persons, Shircore and Bristow Judge, were appointed trustees of this new settlement.

Moradkhan died in 1841; the date does not appear, nor is it of any importance. Gasper, the husband of Mariam, died on the 23rd of November 1841, and Mariam, who, shortly after the death of her husband Gasper, married a man named Aratoon Sarkies, gave birth on the 8th of April 1842 to a female child, who was named Elizabeth.

It should be stated that Mariam Gasper's marriage with Sarkies took place on the 21st of December 1841. Mariam died in 1850. By Aratoon Sarkies she had children, one of whom is the plaintiff Varvar Nicholas, and the other was a son Gregory Sarkies, who died on the 18th of March 1892.

Elizabeth appears to have been brought up in the house of Sarkies, and to have lived there till her marriage with Thorose. After the marriage of Elizabeth with Thorose disputes seem to have arisen between Sarkies on the one side and Elizabeth and her husband on the other.

There is very little question in the case that Sarkies had practically the possession of these houses at that time, and had been appropriating to himself the rents and profits thereof. On the 7th of November 1859 a bill of complaint was filed in the Supreme Court by Elizabeth Thorose, in conjunction with her husband, against the trustees of the settlement of the 5th of January 1839, and against Aratoon Sarkies and Gregory Sarkies who was then an infant, for the purpose of obtaining (inter alia) certain declarations and accounts against Aratoon Sarkies. In that bill of complaint Elizabeth alleged that Aratoon Sarkies was disputing her legitimacy as also the validity of the deed of the 5th of January 1839. She claimed in that suit to be the legitimate child of the Gaspers, and she alleged that the deed of the 5th of January 1839 was valid, and that she was, under that deed, entitled to the properties absolutely.

On the 21st of June 1860 a decree was made dismissing the suit against Gregory Sarkies declaring that the properties covered by the deed of the 5th of January 1839 were personal property, and directing that those properties should be sold; that [220] half of the proceeds should go to the plaintiff Elizabeth Thorose; and that the balance, after deducting the costs of the plaintiff and of the infant against whom the suit was dismissed and whose costs were directed in the first instance to be paid by the plaintiff, should be paid to Aratoon Sarkies. In pursuance of that decree the trustees, in conjunction with Thorose, the husband of Elizabeth, and Aratoon Sarkies, assigned these houses to one Hadjee Jackariah Mahomed. The assignment is dated the 29th of September 1860. On the 12th of July 1870 Hadjee Jackariah Mahomed conveyed No. 29, Canning Street, to Asphar, one of the defendants in this suit, and in June 1893, after the death of Aratoon Sarkies, who died on the 5th of November 1891, the second defendant acquired No. 2, Portuguese Church Street, from Ayesha Bibee who had purchased it from Jackariah.

The plaintiff's case is that Elizabeth was illegitimate, and that the premises in suit are realty; that upon the death of Mariam the property came to her son Gregory Sarkies, subject to a tenancy for life by the courtesy of England in favour of her husband Aratoon Sarkies. Her case, as developed in the address of the learned Counsel, which, having regard to section 147 of the Civil Procedure Code, I took into consideration as supplementing the case made in the plaint, amounted to this: that, inasmuch as Aratoon Sarkies was entitled to a tenancy for life by courtesy in these properties, there was no limitation as against Gregory Sarkies until the death of Aratoon Sarkies in 1891. Further, that the decree of the Supreme Court cannot bind Gregory Sarkies, inasmuch as he was dismissed from the suit; and, secondly, because, apparently, it was a decree by consent. Upon these contentions very important questions have arisen and been discussed.

I may, however, observe at the outset that, so far as the statements in the plaint are concerned, they disclosed, as the defendants contended, no cause of action; but; as I have already said, I think I was justified under section 147 in allowing the statements in the plaint to be supplemented by the statements made in Court by the Counsel for the plaintiff. It was upon that basis that the issues were framed.

As regards the contention that the properties were vested in fee simple in Gregory Sarkies on the death of his mother, but [221] that he had no immediate right to possession in his father's lifetime, as the latter had an estate by courtesy, that question is of importance only in case it is established that Elizabeth Thorose was illegitimate; for if Elizabeth was the legitimate child of Gasper, the question whether this property was realty or otherwise is, it seems to me, wholly immaterial.

As regards the deed of 1839 it is not suggested in the plaint, nor was it argued at the bar, that it was invalid, and I take it that it is accepted as a valid deed; and if treated as a valid deed, unless it can be established that Elizabeth was illegitimate, there is no question that, on the death of Mariam, she, Elizabeth, became absolutely entitled under that deed to the premises in question.

So far as the positive evidence relating to the illegitimacy of Elizabeth Thorose is concerned, I hold that it is wholly unworthy of credit. The only person who has attempted to speak on the subject is the plaintiff, and I regret to observe that her statements gave me the impression that she was giving expression to her imaginings rather than to facts. She says that when she was very young, about 8, 9 or 10 years old, Elizabeth and she and her brother used to quarrel. On these occasions Aratoon Sarkies used to tell them not to quarrel, because they were born of the same father and mother; but when the children of Sarkies, by his other wife, quarrelled, he used to tell them not to do so, because they were children by another mother. Surely, the plaintiff did not expect any sensible person to accept her statements as founded on fact. I certainly am not inclined to do so. She states further that, after Elizabeth had filed her suit in the Supreme Court, Aratoon Sarkies, whose character and conduct have been commented upon in no favourable terms by the plaintiff's own Counsel, often told her that her mother, who was dead, had disgraced herself by living with him before her former husband's death, and that Elizabeth was the fruit of that adulterous connection. Even assuming all that Mr. Avetoom said about Aratoon Sarkies to be true, I am not prepared to believe that he would tell his young daughter, who could have been only 14 or 15 years of age at the time, about the shame of her mother.

There is absolutely no other evidence on this point, or any data whatsoever, beyond certain suggestions based on the fact [222] that Elizabeth bore the name of Sarkies before she married. To my mind it is perfectly natural that this child, who had lost her father before she was born, should bear the name of her mother's husband, in whose house she was being brought up. The question which I have really to consider is whether, having regard to the fact that there was a valid subsisting marriage between Gasper and Mariam, and conception having taken place during the subsistence of that marriage, there is anything to rebut the presumption of legitimacy, assuming even that everything Mrs. Nicholas has said be true. There is no evidence of want of access, and section 112* of the Evidence Act, in the absence of such evidence, regards the presumption of legitimacy arising from conception during a valid subsisting marriage as conclusive. Elizabeth died about 30 years ago. The purchasers, who are the defendants, are, of course, not in a position to adduce evidence to establish the relations between Gasper and his wife; but the onus was on the plaintiff, and it seems to me she has failed to discharge it. In 1859 Aratoon Sarkies attempted to question the legitimacy of Elizabeth, but, as I shall show later on, he wholly abandoned his position, and the case proceeded upon the accepted status of Elizabeth as the legitimate child of Gasper and his wife Mariam. It is extremely improbable that, had Aratoon Sarkies been able to adduce any evidence to question the legitimacy of Elizabeth Thorose, he would have refrained from so doing.

I, therefore, find as a fact on the evidence in this case and the presumption of law under section 112 of the Evidence Act, that Elizabeth Thorose was the legitimate child of Gasper and Mariam. That being so, whether the property be realty or personalty, it must, under the deed of 1839, come to her; the fact that in 1860 a decree was made by which the properties were directed to be sold, half of the proceeds going to her and half to Sarkies, does not make any difference in the matter, or give any right to the plaintiff. She claims through Gregory Sarkies, and if he had no title, this suit must fail.

But, as other questions have been raised, it is necessary that they should be considered.

It was contended that the houses in question were realty or partook of the nature of realty and descended as freehold; and [223] that Mariam, on the death of her husband, took an absolute estate which, upon her death, descended to her son Gregory, and that upon his death without issue it came to the plaintiff and the widow of Gregory. This proceeds on the assumption that Elizabeth was illegitimate. Learned Counsel for the plaintiff admitted that, apart from the question of legitimacy, if the property was found to be personalty, he would have no case.

In order to consider whether or not the property is realty, it is necessary to go back in the history of the two houses to a time when they were possessed by one D'Costa. In 1783 D'Costa became indebted in some way or other to the Wardens of the Portuguese Church in Calcutta. He was the owner of, amongst other properties, those two houses, and by an indenture of mortgage, dated the 16th of June 1783, made between D'Costa of the one part, and D'Conto and Rodrigues of the other part, D'Costa purported to create a mortgage for securing the repayment of the sums of money which were found due by him. The contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff is that what was mortgaged was the freehold estate, and that the term of 1,000 years set out in it referred to the redeemable period.

I cannot agree in that view. I have studied the document with some care, and I find that what was mortgaged was a term of years and nothing more. The document in question, after reciting the circumstances under which D'Costa had become indebted, and other facts, and setting out the premises, "grants bargains and sells the premises," which are described, "to Mathew Antonio D'Conto and Bonifacio Rodrigues to have and to hold the same from the day before the date of these presents for and during and unto the full end and term of 1,000 years from thence next ensuing and fully to be completed and ended, yielding and paying therefor yearly during the said term one peppercorn if demanded."

This is followed by a provision as to the payment of interest on certain dates, a proviso as to cessor and a covenant for quiet enjoyment, and by the words "to hold the premises above granted, etc., for and during all the rest, residue and remainder of the said term of 1,000 years which shall be then to come and unexpired, etc.;" and lastly, there is the covenant for further assurance.

There is nothing to show that anything more was intended to [224] be mortgaged than the term of 1,000 years carved out of the freehold estate.

In 1789 default having been made in the payment of interest the mortgagees brought a suit for foreclosure or sale. The decree was for sale and also for foreclosure "of the said several mortgaged premises." There was no sale under that decree. The direction for foreclosure must therefore have come into effect with all its incidental results. The mortgaged premises in suit are nowhere referred to as freehold.

In 1806 the trustees of the Protuguese Church conveyed the houses in suit to one D'Abro, and here again it is perfectly clear that what was assigned was the residue of the term which had been carved out of the freehold by D'Costa. The witnessing part runs as follows: "That for and in consideration of the said sum of 9,450 sicca rupees to the said Joseph Barretto Lius, Barretto P. D'Cruz and John D'Abro in hand well and truly paid by the said John Lewis D'Abro at or before the sealing and delivery of these presents in full for the absolute purchase of all the estate right, title, interest, term of years and equity of redemption of them, etc." And the Habendum runs thus: "To have and to hold the said premises unto the said So-and-so for and during all the rest, residue and remainder of the said term of 1,000 years in and by the said indenture of demise granted."

Nor is there anything in the covenant to show that what was conveyed was the fee. It runs thus: "And that the said hereby assigned term of 1,000 years so granted of and during the said premises as aforesaid for so much thereof as is therein respectively to come and unexpired is a good valid and subsisting term in the law and not forfeited, surrendered or made void or voidable."

The covenant for further assurance is to the same effect.

On the 7th of May 1817 the trustees of the marriage settlement of Moradkhan and Varvar Kalloos acquired these two houses, and there again there is no vagueness in the interest which was assigned to or taken by the trustees. The deed of assignment first of all points out what was being assigned, and it goes on to say: "And all the estate, right, title, interest, term and terms for years now to come and unexpired, trust-property, possession, claim and demand whatsoever, [225] into out of or respecting the said premises hereinbefore mentioned to be hereby assigned and every part and parcel thereof for the now residue of the said terms of 1,000 years." And, again, in the Habendum: "To have and to hold (the said premises) for and during all the residue and remainder of the said term of one thousand years in or by the said hereinbefore recited indenture of demise granted and demised and hereby assigned." And the covenants run in the same way. So far there is no vagueness or doubt as to the interest which was taken by the several persons who came in under the indenture of mortgage of 1783.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiff referred to particular terms used, especially in the later documents, to show that those expressions could only have been used in relation to real property. To my mind it is perfectly clear that, if the original interest was of a limited character, no words subsequently used, inadvertently or otherwise, could have the effect of enlarging such interest. No authority has been cited for such a proposition, and in fact there is none.

It is further contended that, after the year 1789, the term was kept alive for the benefit of the purchasers. I am afraid this contention proceeds upon some misapprehension. A term of years may be kept alive to attend on the inheritance for certain purposes, viz., to protect the purchaser of a freehold, subject to a term against any incumbrance that might have been created by the previous owner, and of which the purchaser is not aware. Of course, if the purchaser is aware of such incumbrance or charge he cannot have the benefit of the term, even if he chooses to keep it alive. But in order that he may have something to fall back upon, in case it is found that the inheritance is charged with an incumbrance which would practically reduce his interest to nothing, it was usual to take an assignment of the term in the names of trustees for the benefit of the purchaser and his heirs. In that way the term was protected from being merged in the freehold. I do not see how a term attending on the inheritance has any bearing on the present matter.

Next it is contended that, assuming that the mortgaged premises did not constitute a freehold estate of inheritance, and although under the English law a term of years would be [226] personalty, yet the English law should be applied only sub modo and not in its entirety. It is difficult to follow exactly the argument put forward, but I suppose the meaning is, though it was not fully expressed, that all lands and all interest in land, limited or otherwise, must be taken as realty, and must be subject to the laws of descent applicable to realty. This view seems to me to be opposed to the whole course of decisions in this Court or the late Supreme Court.

There were, so far as one can judge from the reported cases, two conflicting views propounded from the time the Charter of Justice was promulgated in 1774. On one side it was contended that everything was personalty in this country, and that British subjects did not hold any realty governed by the laws applicable to real property in England. On the other, it was urged that the whole real property law of England was introduced bodily into Calcutta. These two divergent views were discussed in a number of cases to which I shall briefly refer. In the case of Doe d. Savage v. Bancharam Tagore [Morton (Montriou), 105] (1785), the question arose as to whether lands in the possession of the personal representatives of the deceased were liable for his debts. The learned Judges there held that "the common law of England is generally introduced by Charter; but two provisions in the Charter are a material alteration of the common law as to land. The effect is to render land in Calcutta real property sub modo only; for the personal representative takes the land as a trustee, to pay debts in the first instance, and, secondly, for the heir."

In another case, which was decided in the year 1815 [Gasper v. Paddolochun Doss (Morton (Montriou), 110)], the Advocate-General contended that real property in Calcutta stood exactly on the same footing as personalty, and that, so far as the Armenians were concerned, this was especially so, and lands held by them were to be considered as personalty. The learned Judges overruled the contention, and held that lands, undoubtedly, were realty which were held in fee simple, but that they were subject to certain modifications, that is, they were liable to be taken in execution in the hands of the executor or personal representatives.

In Joseph v. Ronald [Morton (Montriou), 111] (1818) the question, whether there was [227] any real property in Calcutta, or whether everything, lands included, was to be regarded as personalty, was discussed at great length. A majority of the Judges held that the law relating to real property was applicable to lands held in absolute ownership in Calcutta, subject to the modifications contained in the Charter. MACNAGHTEN, J., held that there was no such thing as realty; that all was personalty.

That point was again discussed in 1826 in Jebb v. Lefevre [Morton (Montriou), 152] and Chief Justice GREY, dealing with the question which was attempted to be raised then, said: "It has been contended that in Calcutta and Bengal there is no distinction between land and goods, in respect of the succession to them; and inasmuch as it is admitted that goods and chattels are distributable according to the Statute of Distributions, this is an assertion that the British law in Bengal does not acknowledge any estate of inheritance, and that the term 'heir' has here no meaning." He then discussed the law on the point and traced the enactments to the Charter of 1774, and came to the conclusion that the English law, as to real property, was applicable in its entirety to lands in Calcutta. FRANKS and BULLER, JJ., held that no doubt an estate in inheritance could be held in lands, but subject to the modifications contained in the Charter.

So far as the Courts in this country were concerned, there the matter stood.

Then came Freeman v. Fairlie (1 Moo. I. A., 305) decided by the Judicial Committee. The divergent propositions, to which I have referred, are stated by the Master whose report contains a lucid exposition of the views heretofore held by the Judges in this country. At page 307 he gives exactly the contentions of the two sides who were seeking, one to reduce lands held by a British subject to chattels real, and the other to make the English law relating to realty applicable in its entirety to such property. At page 308 he gives the views of the Chief Justice and BULLER, J., on the one side, and MACNAGHTEN, J., on the other, and at pages 323, 324, 325 and 326 he states his own view on the subject: "It is true, as remarked by Sir ANTHONY BULLER, that if a new country is discovered and settled by British subjects, they [228] carry with them the English law, but with this modification unnoticed by the learned Judge, that is, so far only as that law is applicable to their local circumstances." And, referring to the Charter of 1774, he says: "It seems highly probable that the same general adherence to English law, and the same partial adoption of the existing laws and customs of the country, were applied to immoveable property when acquired by British subjects." Then he gives further reasons for the view why the British law should have been introduced subject to certain modifications, having reference to local circumstances. The report came before Lord LYNDHURST, and his Lordship, in discussing the subject, said as follows: "The next question is, what is the law, as far as British subjects are concerned, now existing in that settlement? Undoubtedly, at present it is the law of England." Then he gave his reasons for the opinion just expressed to which it is unnecessary to refer. But in page 344 there is a paragraph which is of importance: "Further than this, if we refer to the Charter of justice in the year 1774, granted by the Crown, we find in the language of it a distinction, expressly drawn and in terms, between personal and real property. It has, I think, been said, by one of the learned Judges to whom I have referred, or it has been glanced at that that may be satisfied by considering this property as a chattel real; but looking further into the Charter, it will be found that this explanation will not avail, because the Courts have jurisdiction expressly, and in terms, in all actions and pleas, real, personal and mixed; a recognition, therefore, by the Crown (the highest authority), that real property exists in that country, according to the meaning of that term as used in the law of England."

The last case on the point decided in the Privy Council is that of the Mayor of Lyons v. East India Company (1 Moore I. A., 175). There it was taken for granted that, so far as British subjects were concerned, the English law was the law under which they held property in India. The only question was whether it had been so modified as to make it conformable to local exigencies and the circumstances of the country. Lord BROUGHAM, after describing the imperceptible manner in which [229] the British had acquired power in this country, and how from being subjects of the Moguls they had assumed independent authority, says as follows: "Can it then be contended that the general introduction of the English law draws after or with it that branch which relates to aliens." After pointing out various circumstances, which rendered it impossible to hold that the English law was introduced into India with its disqualification in respect of aliens, he expressed himself thus: "Upon the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the law incapacitating aliens from holding real property to their own use, and transmitting it by descent or devise, has never been introduced into Calcutta"

Between 1836 and 1881 there was no case on the point in this Court.

But in Sarkies v. Prosonomoyee Dossee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 794) the same question, viz., whether lands and houses held in Calcutta were or were not personalty, was again attempted to be raised. The Chief Justice, who delivered the judgment of the Full Court, put that aside as an argument which had been answered long ago, but dealing with the point whether the real property law was subject to any modification, he expressed certain views, which are to be found on page 804, and which have an important bearing on Mr. MITTER'S contention: "The learned Judge in the Court below has alluded to the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of the Mayor of Lyons v. East India Company (1 Moo. I. A., 175) as affording an authority, that the English law of inheritance was not introduced here in its entirety, but only so much of it as was applicable to the state of things in India. But that case, as I read it, does not mean to decide that the Courts of this country are justified in adopting just so much of the law of inheritance or of dower, or of any other law, as they consider equitable, and rejecting the rest. It only points out that there are certain portions of the English Statute law, which, from their very nature, were only passed for reasons connected with England, and which would not be applicable to India or any other colony of the British Crown, as, for instance, the Mortmain Acts, the law of aliens, and the like."

The question, as to the applicability of the English law in this [230] country, came up again, though on a different subject, in Lopez v. Lopez [I.L.R., 12 Cal., 706 (711)]. There CUNNINGHAM, J., said as follows: "The question of the extent to which the law of England was carried by the English into India has been frequently considered by high authority, as, for instance, Freeman v. Fairlie (1 Moo. I. A., 305). In the Advocate-General of Bengal v. Surnomoyee Dossee (9 Moo. I. A., 387) it was observed by PEACOCK, C.J., that in construing the Charter of George I., there can be no doubt that it was intended that the English law should be administered as nearly as the circumstances of the place or the inhabitants would admit."

I have referred to these cases in order to show that there was no question at any time that what was regarded as personalty in English law was to be treated as realty in this country. The consistent endeavour was to reduce realty into personalty, and the course of decisions has been to apply the real property law of England to lands held by British subjects in Bengal to the same extent, and no more, but subject to certain modifications the nature of which are indicated by Lord BROUGHAM and Chief Justice GARTH. And in the case of Savage v. Bancharam Tagore [1 Morton (Montriou), 105]. Mr. Justice CHAMBERS pointed out a further modification, viz., that lands in the hands of executors were liable to be taken in execution. That was the "sub modo" referred to by him; and local circumstances and local exigencies and the policy of the country explain whatever other modifications have been introduced into the English law applicable to real property. There is no authority for saying that an interest of the character in question in this case, that is a term of years, has ever been regarded as otherwise than personalty.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff contended that the English law relating to personalty should be applied sub modo. He has not referred to any principle on which the suggested modification should be based As Chief Justice GARTH pointed out, it is impossible for a Court to regulate the applicability of any law on the basis of any particular case; the application of the law must proceed on principle; I hold, therefore, that the English law relating to personalty applies to personalty [231] in this country held by British subjects, and others to whom the English law is applicable.

It is not necessary to refer to any modifications introduced by the Indian Succession Act, as they do not affect the question raised in the present case.

There is no question that Armenians, although Asiatics, are subject to the English law, and the reason for that is perfectly clear; the law of the country was retained for and guaranteed to the Hindus and Mahomedans, but for all others the English law was made applicable. In Gaspe v. Paddolochun Doss. [Morton (Montriou), 110] the law applicable to Armenians was taken to be the English law; so also in Joseph v. Ronald [Morton (Montriou), 111]. I need not refer to the other cases mentioned at the bar in which that was laid down. In Sarkies v. Prosonomoyce Dossee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 791) the party claiming dower was an Armenian. I hold therefore that there is no authority in support of the proposition that this property, though personalty under the English law, was to be treated as realty for the purposes of descent in this particular case.

Then it was argued that even if personalty, it became realty by reason of the power in the trust deed of 1816. It becomes necessary, therefore, to refer to that deed.

In that document Moradkhan, after setting out the circumstances under which he makes the settlement, grants and assigns to the trustees, their executors, administrators or assigns, Rs. 25,000 secured by the bond of some people who were apparently in his debt, upon certain trusts which he sets out. First, to get in the money, and on receipt thereof to lay out and invest Rs. 20,000, part of the Rs. 25,000, "in or upon any real or Government securities, or in or upon any public funds at interest in their or either of their own name or names," and after the purchase of the said real or Government securities "to pay the balance to him, Moradkhan." Then there are other trusts to pay the interest, &c., arising therefrom to him for life, and after his death to his wife, and on her death to apply it for the maintenance and education of the children of the said marriage; and, finally, to pay the corpus to them absolutely on their attaining majority.

[232] It will be observed that the direction to invest is "upon real or Government securities." There is no direction to invest in real property. But, assuming that the words "real securities" mean real property, the power is of an optional character, and certainly not imperative; and it has been decided that, unless the direction is of an imperative character, it does not alter the character of the original property. The text on this point in Jarman is perfectly clear, and the cases point to the same conclusion, and no authority has been adduced to the contrary. On page 586 of Jarman, Vol. I, will be found the following passage: "In order to work a constructive conversion, an actual sale or purchase either immediately or in future, and either absolutely or contingently at a specified time, must be directed expressly or impliedly. A direction that real estate shall not be sold, but shall be considered as personal, or vice versâ, is insufficient, since the law does not allow property to be retained in one shape, and yet to devolve as if it were in another. But when a sale is not expressly excluded, such a direction would generally amount to a trust for sale."

In De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir [3 H. L. C., 524 (547)] the Lord Chancellor, dealing with a contention similar to that in this case, says as follows: "At the end of this will there is a power which has properly been commented on at your Lordship's Bar. It is the power to the trustees, 'with the consent of the person who may be in possession and entitled to the profit thereof,' to invest the residue and surplus of the personal estate in the purchase of freeholds in England, and to convey the same to such uses, &c., as has been declared concerning his manors devised by his will as should be 'then existing, undetermined or capable of taking effect, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever. Now, on the one side, it has been contended that this is an absolute power which must be exercised, and that the effect is at once to convert the personal property into real property, to impress that property with a real character, and to dedicate it to those uses to which the real property is dedicated, so that upon that alone the case must be decided—an argument which, if well founded, would put an end to the case of the appellant. That [233] is a view in which I do not concur. I think no authority has been cited and I am not aware of any authority which carries a power of this sort to that extent. Cowley v. Hartstonge (1 Dow, 361), and the other cases which have been alluded to, certainly do not authorize your Lordships to say that this was an absolute conversion. Take that very case which was before this House. There was, in point of fact, a power, or it may rather be called a trust, to invest the property either in real estate or upon personal security. The trust never was exercised. This House did not say that the trustees could not have exercised, but they never did exercise, the discretion thus reposed in them; and, therefore, it was held that this House, sitting as a Court of Equity, would exercise the discretion which they had failed to exercise; and that as the whole course of limitation showed that the property was intended to go in the way in which the real estate should go, the discretion must be considered as restricted, and the power must be exercised in directing the property to go according to that destination. So far that case is no doubt an important authority bearing upon this question; but I am not prepared to advise your Lordships to decide that the power here is an absolute conversion. But then it is said, on the other side, that even if that power had been exercised, considering it as a power which it was not absolutely imperative to exercise, the estates which had been purchased with the funded property would still have gone according to the construction of the will contended for by the appellant, namely, to the next-of-kin. The learned Counsel seems when addressing to your Lordships that argument, to have lost sight for a moment of the words of the power It is impossible to read this power without seeing that the uses which are referred to are the uses of the real estate, and not the uses of the funded property."

In the case of Pitman v Pitman [L.R. (1892), 1 Ch., 279 (282)] again there was a similar contention. Mr. Justice NORTH says: "It is quite clear that there was a mere power to sell the land, and it was entirely optional with and not imperative upon the trustees to sell, and the distinction between a power and trust for sale is important. There was a power of interim investment, and also a trust for investment in [234] land of freehold, copyhold or leasehold tenure with the consent of the tenant for life ; no such consent was given, and for some reason, not explained, the property was allowed to remain in the interim, investment till the time when the life estate of Thomas Pitman, the elder, came to an end. Nothing has happened or could have happened since the death of Thomas the younger to change the nature of the property. What was the interest that he had at that time? In my opinion it was in the nature of an interest in real estate, and remains so still. The property was real estate in the first instance; all the limitations in the will respecting it were applicable to real estate, and real estate only; there was a power of sale, but the exercise of that power did not of itself amount to a conversion; the proceeds might be invested in real estate, or optionally in leasehold estate."

The question here is, what are the uses referred to in the trust deed of 1816? To use the language of the Lord Chancellor in the case in 3 House of Lords, adapted to suit the converse circumstances of the present case, all the uses in this deed refer to personal property; all the trusts relate to personal property; all the limitations have reference to personal property. How can it be contended then that there was a conversion into real property of what was undoubtedly originally personalty? The point is so perfectly clear that it is unnecessary to refer to the texts cited at the Bar. I may add that so far as the mortgage is concerned, it is personal property.

I think I have exhausted those two points, and I proceed now to deal very shortly with the decree of the Supreme Court of 1860.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiff contended that it was a consent decree obtained by the fraud and collusion of Aratoon Sarkies and therefore not binding on his client. Of course, a decree inter partes may be impugned on the ground of fraud and collusion, but there is a limitation of time for a suit in respect thereof.

First, let us consider the circumstances under which the decree came to be made. As I have already stated, Aratoon Sarkies had obtained possession of Elizabeth's or her mother's property. He was realizing the rents and profits, and as she stated in her bill of com-[235]plaint he was impugning her legitimacy. She brought her suit to establish her legitimacy as well as the validity of the deed of 1839.

In that suit the trustees, as well as Aratoon Sarkies and the plaintiff's brother Gregory, were parties. It was necessary that these two should be joined, because, if the property was personal, and Elizabeth legitimate, and the deed valid, the question at once would be solely between her and Aratoon. If she were illegitimate the property would go to him. If legitimate she took the whole. If the property was real and she was illegitimate the property would go to Gregory, subject to the tenancy-for-life of Aratoon. Therefore all the parties interested in the property and in the questions which were being litigated were joined as parties. In the bill of complaint it was alleged that the property was chattel real, but subsequently before the suit came on for hearing an application was made for amendment based on an affidavit of the attorney in the case, who stated he had been misled by what he had seen in the deed of 1839; but that from the documents since shown to him by the trustees he had come to know that the property was personalty, and therefore prayed for an order for leave to amend the bill. That was done. Aratoon Sarkies filed his answer, and Gregory, through his guardian ad litem, submitted his interests to the Court, and apparently the trustees also filed their answers.

On the 21st of June 1860 the case came on for hearing, and the decree recites that the case was heard or "debated;" and that the deposition of Shircore was taken vivâ voce; it then orders that the suit be dismissed as against the infant, and that his costs and those of the trustees be paid by the plaintiff in the first instance, and afterwards deducted from Aratoon's share. Then there is this declaration: "This Court doth declare that the said property is in the nature of personal property." This does not purport to be made by consent, and up to and including this declaration there is no mention of any consent; only the order as to the sale appears to have been made by consent. But Mr. Avetoom, in reply, referred to the minute book of that date in order to show that the declaration was made by consent. The evidence afforded by a note recorded in the Court Minute Book cannot be accepted in preference to the evidence afforded by the [236] decree itself, which was prepared and completed with reference to that note, and to the brief of Counsel, and was read and signed by the Judges, and never questioned by the parties to that suit.

But apart from this it is quite clear from the answers of Aratoon Sarkies, portions of which were read, that he had abandoned all question as to the legitimacy of Elizabeth and the validity of the deed of 1839. The portions, which were read, are set out and clearly indicated in the decree. The moment it was discovered what the real character of the property was, and that became apparent as soon as the amendment was made, the presence of Gregory became unnecessary, and thereupon the Court, treating him as an unnecessary party, dismissed the suit as against him with costs to be paid in the manner already stated; but, be it observed, to come ultimately out of the share of Aratoon Sarkies himself. The plaintiff then, that is, Elizabeth Thorose, waived all accounts as to the rents and profits which Aratoon Sarkies had appropriated or misappropriated. He alleged that he had spent a considerable sum of money on improvements, and I think I am justified in holding that the consent by which, after deduction of the costs, he was to take half of the proceeds of the sale, was founded on the fact that the plaintiff conceded he had spent money on the property. Mr. Avetoom says that there was no reference to see whether the arrangement (assuming there was one) was for the benefit of the infant. In the first place, it must be observed, that a reference is necessary only in cases where there are questions of fact which require an enquiry, and the only question here was whether the property was real or personal. Having regard to the provisions of section 114 of the Evidence Act, which only embodies the general principle that an act of Court must be presumed to be done validly, I must hold that everything was done which was required to be done in the interests of the infant.

On the whole, therefore, there is nothing to show that the decree was not binding upon Gregory Sarkies, or the persons who claim to derive their title from him. I say this, irrespective of the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to question the validity of the sale to Jackariah. Considering that the property was vested in the trustees, the legal estate was in them, and they conveyed under an order of the Court.

[237] Let us assume, however, that this was a consent decree of the character contended for by the plaintiff, then what is there to induce the Court to set it aside

A consent decree is just as binding on the parties to the proceeding as a decree after a contentious trial. The principle is enunciated in a number of cases.

In In re South American and Mexican Company [L. R. (1895), 1 Ch., 37 (45)], Mr. Justice VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, speaking on the very same point, says:

"Under these circumstances I have only to consider, with reference to the second question, Mr. Moulton's suggestion, that a judgment by consent upon which the Court has not exercised its mind, does not and cannot raise an estoppel inter partes. I can only say this is the first time I have ever heard such a proposition suggested. It has always been the law that a judgment by consent or by default raises an estoppel just in the same way as a judgment after the Court has exercised a judicial discretion in the matter."

Similarly in The Bellcairn (L. R., 10 P. D., 161). There the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justices COTTON and LINDLEY were of opinion that a provision by consent was binding on the parties: and in Nilakandhen v. Padmanabha [I L R, 18 Mad., 1 (7)], Mr. Justice MUTHUSAMI AIYAR and Mr. Justice BEST say: "It is sufficient to say that the right of joint management was brought into controversy in a Court of Justice, and that it was by way of compromise recognised as a subsisting right, and as being in accordance with the prior usage of the institution. It was held by the Privy Council in Gajapathi Radhika v. Gajapathi Nilamani (13 Moo. I. A., 497 : 6 B. L. R., 202) that, when a state of facts is accepted as the basis of a compromise, whereby a suit pending decision is amicably adjusted, and when the compromise is not vitiated by fraud, those who were parties to it and their privies should not afterwards be heard to say, for the purpose of reviving the controversy, that the real state of things was otherwise."

Nor has any case been made out for opening up the decree of the Supreme Court. A shadowy allusion is made to fraud and collusion, but no basis is made for it in the evidence. There is not [238] the least ground on the evidence of the plaintiff, or anywhere, to suggest fraud.

But even had a case of fraud been made, the plaintiff, it seems to me, would be barred under the statute of limitation. There is no doubt that this family knew of this sale for many years. The plaintiff admits in her evidence that they all knew that the houses belonging to Miriam were sold, and a portion of the proceeds taken by Elizabeth Thorose, but no attempt was made to question the sale. Gregory must have attained his majority nearly 20 years ago, as according to the plaintiff's evidence he was 41 when he died. The case seems to me hopelessly barred.

Then there is the question whether Aratoon Sarkies could have an estate by courtesy in these properties

In Coke on Littleton, Chapter 4, section 5, it is laid down that an estate by courtesy arises only in respect of an estate held in fee simple, or an estate in tail general. The same rule is given by Williams in his valuable work on Real Property, 11th edition, page 283 It has not been shown that in an interest of this character the husband is entitled to an estate by courtesy, and if he were not so entitled, limitation would run as against Gregory from the time he attained majority.

It is unnecessary to dwell on the question of estoppel by conduct, as what I have already said is sufficient to show that this is a hopeless and unfortunate attempt to set aside a decree made 36 years ago. The result is, the suit must be dismissed with costs, including the reserved costs.

Suit dismissed.

The 7th December, 1896.

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), sections 39, 41 and 154 - Right to obtain a settlement — Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

The question as to the right of a party to obtain a settlement from the Revenue authorities is not excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Court by the provisions of section 154 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation

THIS suit was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration of his right to, and for possession of, 5 bighas 15 lessas of land, and for mesne profits It was found by both the lower Courts that 2 bighas was part of the ancestral holding of the plaintiff, and that 3 bighas 15 lessas of it formerly belonged to one Mohmer, by whose death or abandonment of the land it became unoccupied and available for settlement some time before the Cadastral survey, that at the Cadastral survey both plaintiff and defendant tried to have it included in their respective holdings, that the Cadastral survey included it in the plaintiff's holding; that the defendant filed an objection in the Revenue Court, and after an enquiry the Revenue Court ordered the land to be transferred to the defendant's holding; that the plaintiff was in actual possession of the land the year before the Cadastral survey, that therefore the lands were properly settled with the plaintiff; and that the Revenue authorities had no right to order the land to be transferred to the defendant's holding. and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession.

Babu Surendra Nath Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Harendra Narain Mitter for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Court (BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ.) was delivered by Rampini, J.—In this case the plaintiff sues for a declaration [240] of his right to 5 bighas and 15 lessas of land, for possession of the same, and for mesne profits, amounting to Rs. 50.

The lower Courts have found that the plaintiff is entitled to this land. They both hold that 2 bighas of the land was part of his ancestral holding, and that 3 bighas 15 lessas of it were formerly the land of one Mohmer, in consequence of whose death or abandonment of them they became available for settlement before the time of the Cadastral survey, and as the plaintiff was found in possession of them at the time of the Cadastral survey, they were properly settled with the plaintiff, and the Revenue authorities had consequently no right to order the land to be transferred to the defendant's holding.

The defendant appeals, and on his behalf it has been urged that the suit is not maintainable under section 154 of the Assam Regulation I of 1886, according to which, except as otherwise provided in this Regulation, no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction in "questions relating to the validity or effect of any settlement, or as to whether the conditions of any settlement are still in force." But we find that, according to section 41, "entries in the record of rights made under section 40 shall be founded on the basis of actual possession," and according to section 39 "no person shall, merely on the ground that a settlement has been made with him or with some persons through whom he claims, be deemed to have acquired any right to or over any estate as against any other person claiming rights to or over that estate." "Estate" is defined in section 3 to include "any land subject to the payment of land revenue, for the discharge of which a separate engagement has been entered into:" so that the land in dispute in this case would seem to come within the definition of "Estate." That being so, the land seems to have been properly settled with the plaintiff by the Cadastral survey, who found the plaintiff in possession, and subsequent proceedings of the Revenue authorities conferred no right in the land on the defendant.

Then, it would seem to us that, so far as the plaintiff's right to the land in dispute is concerned, the question at issue between the parties in this case is not a question as to the validity or effect of any settlement. It is a question merely as to his right to obtain a settlement from the Revenue authorities, and such a [241] question does not seem to be excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Court by the provisions of section 154 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. But in the case of Madhub Nath Surma v. Myarani Medhi (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 819) it is pointed out that when property has been settled with anyone by the Revenue authorities, a Civil Court can only give a plaintiff who objects to that settlement a declaration of his right to a settlement of the lands in question, and cannot give him a decree for possession. In these circumstances, we cannot in this case give the plaintiff more than a declaration of his right to obtain settlement, and must so far modify the decree of the Lower Appellate Court that we set aside the decree for possession. The plaintiff must go to the settlement authorities and get them to settle the land with him and put him in possession of it.

To this extent we modify the decree of the Lower Appellate Court; in other respects we affirm it. We make no order as to costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 16--Right of suit—Succession to permanent tenure--Omission to give notice of succession to Collector, Effect of—Non-payment of fees, Effect of on right to decree.

Section 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not preclude a party from instituting a suit for rent notwithstanding that the Collector has not received the notice, and the fees referred to therein. But that section is a bar to the plaintiffs' obtaining a decree before the notice and the fees are received by the Collector.

THIS appeal arose out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs who were co-sharers in certain patni taluks for the recovery of arrears of rent due on account of the years 1297 to 1300 B. S. The father of one of the plaintiffs died at the end of Choitro 1299, [242] and the fathers of the other plaintiffs before that, and the plaintiffs thus became entitled to permanent tenures by succession. Notice of the succession was not given to the Collector as required by section 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the fees required by that section were not paid. Both the lower Courts held that the plaintiffs could not recover the rent due for the year 1300.

Babu Harendra Narain Mitter for the Appellants

Babu Kritanta Kumar Bose for the Respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ) was as follows:--

In this appeal, which arises out of a suit for arrears of rent, the question raised on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants is whether the Courts below are right in disallowing a part of the claim on the ground that the notice required by section 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has not been given to the Collector. The learned Vakil for the appellants contends that, upon a proper construction of that section, the Courts below ought to have held that the suit was maintainable, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree in full, notwithstanding the absence of the notice in question; and that all that the section was intended to bar was the actual recovery of any rent by execution of the decree; and in support of this contention he relies upon the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in the case of Ahmuddin Khan v. Hira Lall Sen (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 87). Now section 16 runs in these words: "A person becoming entitled to a permanent tenure by succession shall not be entitled to recover by suit, distraint or other proceeding any rent payable to him as the holder of the tenure, until the Collector has received the notice and fees referred to in the last foregoing section." Having regard to the language of the section, and to the fact that it is in one sense a provision of a penal character, and should, therefore, receive a liberal and not a stringent construction, we are of opinion that the section does not preclude a party fron instituting a suit for rent, notwithstanding that the Collector has not received the notice and the fees referred to therein, although it is a bar to the plaintiffs obtaining a decree before the notice and the fees are received by the Collector. If the section had been intended [243] to bar the institution of a suit, it would have contained words, such as "shall not be entitled to maintain a suit." The distinction between incompetency to maintain a suit, until certain conditions are fulfilled, and incompetency to recover by a suit, is a well recognized distinction, and is one that is pointed out in the case of Hassall v. Wright (L. R., 10 Eq., 509), and is also noticed in the case of Alimuddin Khan v. Hira Lall Sen (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 87) cited on behalf of the appellants.

But though that is so, we do not think that even this liberal construction of the section can help the plaintiffs at all. They did not, upon the objection being raised, give notice to the Collector and deposit the necessary fees as required by section 16, but they insisted upon their right to proceed with the suit to final judgment without complying with the condition imposed upon them by the section. And the contention on their behalf now is that the words "recover by suit" should be construed to mean "realize by suit," and that the only thing that the section is intended to bar is the actual realisation of the money by the plaintiffs. We are not prepared to accept that contention as correct. To give effect to it would be to hold that the plaintiff is entitled to ask for a decree, of which on his own admission he is at the time incompetent to enforce actual satisfaction. Indeed, if the appellant's contention be correct, there would be nothing to prevent his proceeding, even with the execution by the sale of the defendant's holding or undertenure, provided only that he does not ask the Court to pay over to him the money realized. We do not think that that would be a reasonable construction of the section. The plaintiffs not having taken any steps during the pendency of this suit to comply with the conditions imposed upon them by section 16, we must hold that the Courts below have rightly disallowed the part of the claim now in question, and the appeal must consequently be dismissed with costs.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Suja Hossein alias Rohamut Dowlah............Judgment-debtor

Monohur Das............Decree-holder.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877) Schedule II, Article 180—Execution of decree—Revivor—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 223, 230, 248 (a)—Insolvent, Adverse possession of.

A creditor obtained a decree against his debtor on the Original Side of the High Court, on the 19th December 1881. On the 11th December 1893, the judgment-creditor applied to the Court, under section 228 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for "transmission of a certified copy of the decree to the District Judge's Court of the 24-Pergunnahs, with a certificate that no portion of the decree has been satisfied by execution within the jurisdiction of the High Court," and alleging that the judgment-debtor had no property within its jurisdiction, but had property in the 24-Pergunnahs. The application was headed as an application for execution and was in a tabular form. Upon this a notice was issued under section 248 (a) of the Code, and the judgment-debtor not having shown any cause, on the 19th December 1893 a certified copy of the decree was ordered to be issued. The certified copy of the decree having been transmitted, the judgment-creditor on the 1st March 1894 applied for the execution of the decree to the District Judge. On the objections of the judgment-debtor that the execution was barred by limitation, and that he having been declared an insolvent, and the properties having vested in the Official Assignee, the attachment was contrary to law, Held, that the execution was not barred by limitation, as the order of the 19th December of 1893 was an order for execution, and operated as a revivor of the decree within the meaning of Article 180, Schedule II of the Limitation Act.

* Appeal from Order No. 329 of 1894, against the decree of Baboo Purna Chundra Shome, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 4th of August 1894

Held, also, that the judgment-debtor having been in possession of the property for more than 12 years the Official Assignee not having taken possession of it, he had a title by adverse possession which was capable of being attached.

Ashootosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 504), and Futteh Narain Chowdhry v. Chandrabati Choudhrain (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 551) followed.

THE facts of the case for the purposes of this report appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Nil Madhub Bose and Babu Shib Chunder Palit for the Appellant.

[245] Mr. J. T. Woodroffe and Babu Baidyanath Dutt for the Respondent.

Babu Nil Madhub Bose.– One of the questions in this case is whether the order for the issue of a certified copy of the decree is an order for execution. I submit not. That order has not the effect of reviving the decree. The correctness of the principle as laid down in the case of Ashootosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 504) has been doubted by WILSON, J., in the case of Tincowrie Dawn v. Debendro Nath Mookerjee (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 191). In the former case, a regular application for execution of decree was made and a writ of attachment was issued; but in the present case there was no application for execution at all. Article 180, Schedule II, of the Limitation Act only protects a decree if there is a revivor; there being no revivor in this case, the execution is barred by limitation. An application for a certificate to allow execution to be taken out in another Court is not an application for the execution of the decree. See the cases of Nilmoney Singh Deo v. Biressur Banerjee (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 744). The next question is, whether the judgment-debtor having been adjudged an insolvent, and his property having vested in the Official Assignee, the decree-holder could take out execution. I submit not The Court below was wrong in holding that the insolvent acquired a title by adverse possession, the Official Assignee not having taken possession of his property. The property having vested in the Official Assignee, the insolvent has no attachable interest in it.

Mr J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondent.– The order of the 19th December, for the issue of a certified copy of the decree, was an order for execution, as it was made after such notice as is required by section 248 (a). The notice was in accordance with rule 371 of the High Court That order had the effect of reviving the decree within the meaning of Article 180. Schedule II of the Limitation Act. The decision in Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (I.L R., 8 Cal., 51 : L. R., 8 I. A., 123) governs the present case. The certificate was issued after notice. Section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure says that cause is to be shewn. No cause having been shown in this case, a certificate was issued, and the order of [246] the 19th December 1893 is binding. Judgment by consent is binding by way of estoppel: See In re South American and Mexican Company, Ex parte Bank of England (L. R., Ch. Div. (1895) Vol. I., p 37). The decree having been transmitted the Court had full jurisdiction to deal with it. See Leake v. Daniel (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 970).

The judgment-debtor only got a personal discharge and not a final discharge. He ought to have made over possession of the property to the Official Assignee, but instead of doing so, he retained possession of it. His possession was adverse, as he was holding with the knowledge of the Official Assignee. See section 106 of the Evidence Act, and the cases of Kristocomul Mitter v. Suresh Chunder Deb (I. L. R, 8 Cal, 556), Lakshman v. Moru (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 722), and Anand Coomari v. Ali Jamin (I. L. R., 11 Cal, 229).

Babu Nil Madhub Bose in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Hill, JJ.) was as follows: -

This is an appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 24th August 1894.

The facts out of which the litigation has arisen may be shortly stated as follows: On the 11th December 1893 an application was made purporting to be one in execution of a decree by transmitting a certified copy of the decree to the Court of the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, with a certificate that no portion of the decree had been satisfied within the jurisdiction of the High Court on its Original Side. On that the following order was passed: "Leave granted to verify and let notice issue (returnable four days after service) under section 248 (a), Civil Procedure Code. This notice was issued under the Rules of Court. Section 248 (a) enacts that if more than one year elapses between the date of the decree and the application for its execution a notice shall issue to the party against whom execution is applied for, requiring him to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. The form of the notice under that section is to be found in No. 135 in the fourth schedule to the Code and runs as follows: "Whereas . . . . made application to this Court [247] for execution of decree in Civil Suit No. . . . . of 18 . . . . this is to give you notice that you are to appear before this Court..........on the . . . day of . . . 18 . . . . either in person or by a pleader of this Court or agent duly authorized and instructed to show cause, if any, why execution should not be granted." That was the notice which was served on the appellant in this Court He showed no cause, and on the 19th December 1893 Mr. Justice SALE recorded the following order: "Let certified copy issue, no cause being shown."

We take it that the meaning of that order is that no cause was shown against the notice which had been served upon the appellants. Mr. Justice SALE then sent a certified copy of the decree with a certificate of non-satisfaction, to the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs. Looking, therefore, at the form of the notice, and looking at the fact that no cause was shown, we think that the question is, what is the effect of what was done before Mr. Justice SALE. It was contended by the pleader for the appellant that the order of the 19th December 1893, being an order which was passed on an application made under section 223 of the Code for transmission of the decree, was not an order for execution, and that it could not therefore be said that there was a revivor of the decree within the meaning of article 180. On the other hand it was contended by Mr. Woodroffe on behalf of the respondent that the order of the 19th December was an order for execution, inasmuch as it was made after such notice as is required by section 248 (a), and that it therefore had the effect of reviving the decree within the meaning of that article. We think the order of the 19th December made after notice to show cause, was, according to the rule laid down in Ashootosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (I.L.R., 6 Cal., 504), and the case of Futteh Narain Chowdhry v. Chundrabati Chowdhrain (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 551), such a revivor as prevented the decree from being barred by article 180.

There was another question raised before us, and that was in regard to adverse possession. When the appellant showed cause against execution in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of 24 Pergunnahs he did not say that he had no interest that could [248] be attached. What he said was that the "property that has been put under attachment having vested in the Official Assignee under the law, the order passed in the execution proceedings for the attachment of the said property is wrong, contrary to law, and cannot remain in force." In other words, he did not say that he had no attachable interest in the property, but he pleaded the right of the Official Assignee in the property. The appellant filed a schedule as an insolvent on the 21st February 1882 in which he stated in regard to this property: "On the 1st March 1880, the insolvent deposited with these creditors as security for the payment of any balance of account that might be due to them the title deeds of the house and premises at Garden Reach (purchased in the names of the insolvent and one Ali Hossein since deceased) situate on the lands belonging to the ex King of Oudh to which house and premises the insolvent and the heirs of the said Ali Hossein are entitled in equal shares or moieties." Again in the year 1893 we find him striving to perfect his title by a conveyance from the Officiating Agent of the Governor-General in Council in favour of Dabir-ud-Dowla and Ahmed Hossein, as to one-half of this property in his own favour, and as to the other half, it was admitted at the trial that he had been in possession of the land all along. We have therefore these facts to deal with, admitted possession, striving to perfect a bad title in 1893, and not raising the question when attachment issued, that he had no title that could be attached. On all these facts we think that the Subordinate Judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that he had a title by adverse possession which was capable of being attached.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal -The Chutia Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (Bengal Act I of 1879), sections 37, clause (4), 39, 137, 139 and 144 —Rent, Suit for —Appeal in cases where the aggregate amount claimed is above Rs. 100.

An appeal lies to the Judicial Commissioner, and not to the Deputy Commissioner, from a decree passed by the Deputy Collector, in a suit for rent, where the aggregate amount of rent claimed under section 39, Bengal Act I of 1879, is above Rs. 100.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the landlord, in the Court of the Deputy Collector of Ranchi, to recover rent against a number of raiyats. The aggregate amount of rent claimed was above Rs. 100, but the amount recoverable from each tenant was below Rs. 100. The learned Deputy Collector decreed the suit of the plaintiff. Some of the tenants appealed to the Judicial Commissioner, who set aside the decision of the lower Court, so far as the appellants before him were concerned. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the appeal from the decree of the Deputy Collector lay to the Deputy Commissioner, and that the Judicial Commissioner had no jurisdiction to hear it.

Babu Srinath Das and Babu Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee for the Respondents.

Babu Srinath Das.—Under sections 137 and 139 of Bengal Act I of 1879, the appeal lies to the Deputy Commissioner, if the amount sued for does not exceed Rs. 100. Although section 39 permits joinder of claims against different tenants for the purposes of determining the jurisdiction of the Appellate Court, the value of the suit ought to be determined by the amount claimed against each tenant.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee for the Respondents. -Where separate [250] claims against different tenants are joined under section 39, there is only one suit, and the amount sued for is clearly the aggregate amount claimed against the tenants collectively. If, as the appellant contends, the forum of appeal is determined by the amount claimed against a particular tenant, we may have the anomaly of an appeal by one tenant lying to the Deputy Collector, and that by another tenant from the same decree lying to the Judicial Commissioner. Under section 144†, which contemplates an appeal from a judgment,

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1024 of 1895, against the decree of F. Cowley, Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Chutia Nagpur, dated the 7th of January 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Krishna Kali Mookerjee, Deputy Collector of Ranchi, dated the 7th of January 1893.

† [Sec. 144 —In all suits other than those in which, when tried and decided by a Deputy Commissioner, the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner is declared to be final, or, when tried and decided by a Deputy Collector, an appeal is allowed to the Deputy Commissioner, an appeal from the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner or Deputy Collector shall lie to the Judicial Commissioner of the Division, unless the amount or value in dispute exceed five thousand rupees, in which case the appeal shall lie to the High Court.]

In what suits appeal to lie to Judicial Commissioner or High Court.

the appeal lay to the Judicial Commissioner. Besides, under section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, the appellant is not entitled to succeed without proving that he has been prejudiced.

Babu Srinath Das in reply.

The Judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is an appeal from the decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Chutia Nagpur, dated the 7th January 1895.

It was first objected that no second appeal lay to this Court; but this objection was overruled some years ago. We think, therefore, that the objection fails.

Then it was argued, and that is the point upon which the appeal turns, that the appeal lay not to the Judicial Commissioner but to the Deputy Commissioner. The suit is of the nature mentioned in clause (4), section 37, and by section 39 several claims of that kind may be joined in one suit. It would appear, therefore, that the several claims as mentioned in the second clause of section 39 form one suit and one suit only.

We now come to determine to what Court the appeal lay. Section 137 says that in suits under clause (4) and certain other Clauses of section 37, if tried and decided by a Deputy Commissioner, if the amount sued for, or the value of the property claimed does not exceed one hundred rupees, the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner shall be final, except under certain conditions which do not arise in this case. Section 139 refers to appeals from the decisions of a Deputy Collector. And then comes section 144 which provides as follows: "In all suits other than those in which, when tried and decided by a Deputy Commissioner, the judg-[251]ment of the Deputy Commissioner is declared to be final, or when tried and decided by a Deputy Collector, an appeal is allowed to the Deputy Commissioner, an appeal from the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner or Deputy Collector shall lie to the Judicial Commissioner of the Division, unless the amount or value in dispute exceed five thousand rupees, in which case the appeal shall lie to the High Court." Bearing in mind that we are of opinion that a suit under section 39, although it includes a number of claims, is one suit, and that under section 137 the judgment, in such a suit as this, is not final, we think, looking at the somewhat obscure language of section 144, that the appeal in this case lies to the Judicial Commissioner, the aggregate amount of the claims being more than one hundred rupees.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Surja Kanta Acharjee............Plaintiff

versus

Baneswar Shaha and on his death his son, heir and legal representative Jotindra Lal Shaha, by his mother and guardian Kissori Dasi............Defendant.*

Evidence—Rent Receipts, Proof of genuineness of—Onus of proof—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 50—Suit for enhancement of rent—Appellate Court, Power of.

In a suit for enhancement of rent the defendant produced certain dakhilas and deposed to having received them on payment of rent. Held, that this was sufficient evidence to prove them.

Held, further, that it was perfectly open to the Lower Appellate Court, which had to deal with the facts of the case, to say whether taking the receipts, which extended over a number of years together, and having regard to the fact that the receipts did not specify the years to which the amounts related, the amounts paid in any particular year were partly for the rents of that year and partly for the arrears due in respect of previous years.

To entitle the plaintiff to a decree for enhancement of rent on the ground of an alteration in the area of the defendant's holding, the plaintiff must show that the defendant is holding lands in excess of what he is paying rent for, [252] and in order to do that he must show for what quantity of land the defendant is paying rent.

THE suit, out of which this appeal arose, was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for enhancement of rent and for additional rent for excess lands. It was alleged by the plaintiff that the defendant was an occupancy raiyat, and that the rate of rent paid by him was below the prevailing rate paid by occupancy raiyats for land of a similar description in the same village; and that, upon measurement of the land held by the defendant in the beginning of the year 1298, it was found that a quantity of land was in his possession in excess of that which had been recorded in the zemindar's serishta. The plaintiff claimed assessment of annual jama according to the prevailing rate.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that he was not an occupancy raiyat, but a raiyat holding at a fixed rate; that he knew nothing of the measurement of lands in 1298; and that he had not taken possession of any land in excess. The defendant filed rent receipts to prove that he had paid rent for the several jamas in suit at the same rate per annum for more than 20 years. These receipts showed variations in payments. The Munsif found that the defendant was a raiyat holding at a fixed rent, and dismissed the suit. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the Officiating Judge of Rajshahye who dismissed the appeal.

The following was his finding with regard to the receipts:—

"The defendant has filed rent receipts to show that in each case he has been paying at a uniform rate of rent for more than twenty years. The receipts are over twelve hundred in number; and as a single receipt is often not for a single holding but for several holdings and for different shares and different years, it has been found necessary to prepare tables showing the amount paid for each holding for each year. Both parties have prepared and put in such tables, and I have carefully gone through them and checked them by the receipts filed in the suits. Mistakes have been made in some instances, and I have corrected some of them, but in the main they can be used for the determination of the question of the uniformity of the jama for the last twenty years.' Sometimes a particular payment shewn in a receipt is not specifically mentioned as being an arrear collection, and this, if taken as collection for the year in which the payment was made, would apparently make the payments for that year exceed the jama. This is exemplified in the case of payments for the years 1278 and 1279. The payments for 1278 amount to only six annas and the payments for 1279 amount to 2 rupees and 2 annas. But there was one payment of fourteen annas which was made in 1279, and the [253] receipt for which does not specifically show it to be an arrear for 1278. If this item is taken to be a payment for 1278, as it evidently is, then the payment for each year is seen to be what the jama is alleged to be, viz., one rupee and four annas. Considerations of this kind have to be taken into account in dealing with the question of the uniformity of the jama. * * * * In no case do the variations seem to me to suggest the inference that there was any variation in the jama. In some instances there might have been excess or deficient collection in one share, but the collections in the other shares for the same year show that the jama remained unaltered. In many instances the rent receipts themselves show the total jama. Taking everything into consideration, I certainly find that the defendant has been paying at a uniform jama in each case for twenty years. * * * * It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that some rent receipts have not been proved, and some have been disproved by the witnesses. The defendant, however, has proved them all by saying that he received the receipts on payment of rent. This I consider sufficient proof. The nature and appearance of the receipts convince me of their genuineness. The very variations that they show in the payments go to show their genuineness. The plaintiff has done nothing to prove what has been the rate at which the defendant has been paying rent in each case."

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Babu Grish Chunder Chowdhry, and Babu Joygopal Ghose for the Appellant.

Mr. Hill and Babu Mohini Mohun Chukrabutty for the Respondent.

The Advocate-General.—The rent receipts have not been duly proved. In Ramjadoo Gangooly v. Luckhee Narain Mundul (8 W. R., 488), BAYLEY, J., says: "It is quite insufficient for the Judge, while admitting a variation in these dakhilas, to state that it may arise from short payments in one year being made up by full payments in another without that specific fact being duly proved. The variation primâ facie is evidence of the rent not being uniform. * * * Further the Lower Appellate Court seems to have adopted the erroneous view of the first Court that dakhilas, if not positively denied, need not be proved. They, like other documents, propounded by parties must be shown to be what they purport to be." See also Bharut Roy v. Gunga Narain Mohapattur (14 W. R., 211).

Mr. Hill for the respondent.—The payment may be proved by production of the receipt, and proof that it is the document [254] received in payment of the money. Raj Mahomed v. Banoo Rasmah (12 W. R., 34) and Madhub Chunder Chowdhry v. Promotho Nath Roy (20 W. R., 261).

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows :—

In these appeals, which arise out of suits for enhancement of rent and for additional rent for excess lands, two questions have been raised on behalf of the appellant: first, whether the Lower Appellate Court was right in relying upon the dakhilas produced by the defendants when they have not been duly proved; and, second, whether the Lower Appellate Court, upon the facts found by it, was right in dismissing the claim for additional rent for excess lands.

With reference to the first point this is what the Lower Appellate Court says in its judgment: "It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that some rent receipts have not been proved and some have been disproved by the witnesses. The defendant, however, has proved them all by saying that he received the receipts on payment of rent. This I consider sufficient proof. The nature and appearance of the receipts convince me of their genuineness. The very variations that they show in the payment go to show their genuineness." This, it is contended by the learned Advocate-General, is not sufficient to show that the receipts have been duly proved, and, in support of his contention, he relies upon the cases of Ramjadoo Gangooly v. Luckhee Narain Mundul (8 W.R., 488), and Bharut Roy v. Gunga Narain Mohapattur (14 W.R., 211). All that these two cases lay down is that there must be some evidence to prove the genuineness of the rent receipts which a tenant defendant may file. They do not, however, lay down any hard-and-fast rule as to what the nature of the evidence necessary to prove rent receipts should be. On the other hand, it has been held in the cases of Raj Mahomed v. Banoo Rasmah (12 W. R., 34) and Madhub Chunder Chowdhry v. Promotho Nath Roy (20 W. R., 264) that where the genuineness of a rent receipt is sworn to by the tenant by whom the rent has been paid, that is legally sufficient to prove [256] the receipt, notwithstanding that the person whose signature it bears has not been examined. Having regard to these authorities, we think that the finding arrived at by the Lower Appellate Court, which considers the evidence of the defendant sufficient to prove the genuineness of the receipts, must be taken to be unassailable in law.

Then, as to the second ground, the Lower Appellate Court observes: "The onus is clearly on the plaintiff. He must show that the defendant is holding lands in excess of what he is paying rent for, and in order to do that, he must show for what quantity of land the defendant is paying rent. This the plaintiff has failed to do. If that is so, we do not think that there is any ground for our interfering with the decision of the Lower Appellate Court upon this point in second appeal.

We should add that a third point was urged which was this, that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in allotting the amounts covered by some of the rent receipts to different years without any evidence to show that they were for those particular years. We think it was perfectly open to the Lower Appellate Court which had to deal with the facts of the case to say whether, taking the receipts which extend over a number of years together, and having regard to the fact that the receipts did not specify the years to which the amounts relate, the amounts paid in any particular year were partly for the rents of that year and partly for the arrears due in respect of previous years.

The grounds urged before us, therefore, all fail, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Limitation—Waste land subsequently made cultivable - Possession—Onus Probandi—Constructive possession.

The doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of a rightful owner, and must not (as a rule) be extended in favour of a wrong-doer, whose possession must be confined to land of which he is actually in possession.

In a suit for the possession of lands formerly uncultivable, but subsequently brought under cultivation, the District Judge had allowed the plea of limitation to prevail against the plaintiff upon a finding—based, not upon evidence of actual possession by the defendants, but upon an inference from part of the evidence,—that the defendants had been in constructive possession for over 12 years prior to the suit.

Held, that so far as the judgment and decree of the District Judge related to certain plots described as patit or uncultivable lands, they must be set aside, and the case remanded to the District Judge to determine (a) how far the presumption in favour of the plaintiff as to the continuance of the uncultivable state of the lands till within twelve years of suit applied; and (b) how far that presumption had been rebutted by evidence of actual possession on the part of the defendants.

APPEAL from the decree of the District Judge of Rajshahye.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babu Lal Mohun Das, and Babu Saroda Prosunno Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Srinath Das and Babu Saroda Churn Mitter for the Respondents.

The facts and arguments of the case appear in the judgment of the Court (Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ.) which was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for possession and mesne profits of certain land, on the allegation that the land is included in mouzah Lakhi Chumari appertaining to his patni taluk Birchapila ; that it was formerly the bed of a bhil which has recently become fit for cultivation, and that the defendants are wrongfully holding possession of the same.

[257] The defendants in their written statement denied the title of the plaintiff to set up the plea of limitation, and urged that a certain khal was the boundary between the plaintiff's village Lakshi Chumari and the defendants' village Majgeo Sripur.

The first Court found that part of the land in dispute appertained to the plaintiff's village, but it dismissed the suit as barred by limitation.

Upon appeal by the plaintiff, the Lower Appellate Court ordered a fresh local enquiry, and upon the enquiry being completed the plaintiff confined his claim to those portions of the land lying on his side of the survey boundary between the two villages Lakshi Chumari and Majgeo Sripur which were described as patit land of different denominations in the defendants' chitta of

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 672 of 1895, against the decree of L. Palit, Esq. Officiating District Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 9th of January 1895, modifying the decree of Babu Nobin Chundra Ganguly, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 6th of March 1893.

1282. The learned District Judge, however, found the claim barred by limitation, and he accordingly affirmed the first Court's decree.

In second appeal it is now contended for the plaintiff that the decision of the District Judge is wrong in law first, because, having regard to the nature of the land, he should have thrown the burden of proving possession entirely upon the defendants instead of holding, as he has done, "that the onus cannot be said to lie exclusively on one party or the other;" and, secondly, because he has erroneously extended the doctrine of constructive possession, which holds good only in the case of rightful owners, to the case of wrongdoers.

In support of the first contention, the cases of Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (7 C. L. R., 364), and Raj Kumar Roy v. Gobind Chunder Roy (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 660) are relied upon. The true rule deducible from the first mentioned case and from certain other cases is that stated in the judgment of the majority of the Full Bench in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 744) in which the learned Judges, after observing "that as a general rule the plaintiff cannot, merely by proving possession at any period prior to twelve years before suit, shift the onus to the defendant," add, "the true rule appears to us to be this: that where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes at such a time, and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue till within twelve years [258] before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the plaintiff's possession continued also until the contrary is shown. This case appears to have been cited in the argument before the Privy Council in Raj Kumar Roy v. Gobind Chunder Roy (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 660), and there is nothing in their Lordships' judgment to show that they disapprove the rule there laid down.

That being then the rule applicable to cases like this, we observe that if the Lower Appellate Court had considered the case properly with reference to those plots of land falling within the plaintiff's mouzah which are entered in the chitta of 1282, corresponding to 1875, as gralaik patit or uncultivable waste, and also with reference to some of those entered as patit land of other denominations, the possession of the plaintiff might, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, have been presumed to have continued till within twelve years before the date of the suit, which was instituted in 1890, more especially when some of these plots were found by the amin deputed to hold the local enquiry to be still uncultivable. The learned District Judge has, however, omitted to consider the case with reference to that rule, and this omission constitutes an error of law in his decision. But it may be said that this error becomes immaterial when the learned District Judge has affirmatively found "that the defendants have been in possession since 1282 at least." No doubt, if that finding stands, the question of the burden of proof becomes immaterial, for the presumption which the rule laid down in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 744) raises in favour of the plaintiff, is a rebuttable one, and may be displaced by evidence of possession in favour of the defendant. This brings us to the consideration of the second contention mentioned above.

The learned District Judge's finding that the defendants have been in possession of the land in dispute since 1282 or 1875 is based, as regards the patit or waste lands of different denominations, not upon any evidence of actual possession, but upon evidence from which he infers that the defendants were in constructive possession. For this is what he says in his judgment: "If a plot leased to a tenant contains a portion which is at the time patit, and which is gradually brought under [259] cultivation, then it seems to me that the tenant must be held to have been in possession of the whole plot from the beginning. The very fact of the measurement for the preparation of the chitta, the leasing out of land, &c., also constitutes possession."

Now acts of possession over a part of any immoveable property may no doubt in many cases be evidence of de facto possession of the whole, as has been explained by Baron Parke in Jones v. Williams [2 M.L.W 326 (331)] and by Lord Blackburn in Lord Advocate v. Lord Blantyre [L. R., 4 Ap., Cas., 770 (791).] But that rule operates with full force only in favour of the rightful owners; and it should be applied with caution and reservation, if at all, in favour of a wrongdoer; for this reason among others, that the right to the whole, which makes the possession of a part equivalent to the possession of the whole, and forms the connecting link between the whole and the part in the one case, is wanting in the other. In the case of a wrongdoer claiming to possess the whole by reason of possessing a part, it is often difficult to say, in the absence of the connecting link of title, how far the whole extends. The want of this connecting link may in some cases be supplied by others, such as close connection and interdependence between the part actually possessed and the whole of which it is claimed to be a part. But except in such special cases, the possession of a wrongdoer should be held to be confined to what he is actually in possession of, and not to extend constructively to anything beyond that; this rule, which is in one sense deducible from the principle that the ordinary presumption is that possession follows title, is especially necessary for the protection of the rightful owners in a country like Bengal, where extensive tracts of land lie waste and unenclosed, and in a case like the present where we find that the plots of waste land to which the wrongful possession of the defendants has been held constructively to extend, adjoin the plaintiff's property on one side at least. The view we take is amply supported by reason and authority—see Angell on Limitations, Sixth Edition, section 394, and Siddon v. Smith (36 L.T. 168). The Lower Appellate Court was therefore wrong in arriving at the conclusion that the defendants [260] were in possession of the lands in question from 1282 without adverting to the limitation pointed out above in the application of the doctrine of constructive possession, namely, that it does not, as a rule apply to the case of a wrongdoer.

For the foregoing reasons we think the judgment and decree of the Lower Appellate Court, so far as they relate to the plots described as patit land of different denominations in the chitta of 1282, must be set aside and the case remanded to that Court in order that it may determine, (1) how far the presumption referred to in the rule laid down in the case of Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (I. L. R, 9 Cal., 744) quoted above applies to this case, and (2) how far that presumption has been rebutted by evidence of actual possession adduced by the defendants, and then dispose of the appeal. Costs will abide the result.

H. W. Case remanded.

Injunction—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), section 54—Threatened damage—Damage occurring after suit—Cause of action—Digging so as to endanger neighbour's land.

Where an act threatening danger to a person's land is such that injury will inevitably follow, a Court may grant a perpetual injunction restraining the continuance of that act, even though no damage has actually occurred before institution of suit. And where actual injury has occurred subsequently to the filing of the plaint, the plaint may be amended so as to show the nature and extent of such injury.

Pattisson v. Gilford (L. R., 18 Eq., 259) applied.

THE plaintiff and the defendants owned adjoining lands. Close to the boundary line the defendants dug a trench 110 feet long and 9 feet deep, the sides towards the bottom sloping in the direction of the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff sued for a perpetual injunction restraining them from continuing to dig, for the cost [261] of filling up the excavation, and for other relief. The defendants pleaded that they had a right to dig as they pleased on their own land, and that as the plaint did not allege any injury, it disclosed no cause of action. The Munsif held that no cause of action accrued until damage had actually occurred, and he therefore dismissed the suit.

After the suit had been instituted, the plaintiff's land subsided in consequence of the defendants' excavations, and this fact was brought to the notice of the Court.

The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who reversed the Munsif's decision and remanded the case under section 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, directing the Munsif to allow the plaint to be amended, and to try the questions that had already been or might be raised in the case.

Against this order the defendants appealed.

Babu Nilmadhub Bose (with him Babu Jogesh Chunder Roy, Babu Mukunda Nath Roy, and Babu Satyananda Bose) for the Appellants.—There is no cause of action unless there is actual injury or unless the act of the defendants is such that the injury appears, on the face of the plaint, to be inevitable. Gale on Easements, p. 329; Kerr on Injunctions, pp. 220 to 222. Besides it would be impossible, where there is no averment of injury, for the Court to say in what terms an injunction should go; and to restrain the defendants from using their property in such a way as not to injure the plaintiff is not only too vague but is also a mere statement of the general law. Everyone may dig in his own land as he pleases if he takes steps to protect his neighbour from injury; and the defendants were about to do so. Lastly, there cannot, under section 54 of the Specific Relief Act, be a perpetual injunction if the damage occasioned, or likely to be occasioned by the defendants' wrongful act, can be compensated with damages, as it can in the present case, for the plaintiff has valued the suit at a definite sum.

* Appeal from Order No. 390 of 1895 from the order of Babu Baroda Prosono Shome, Additional Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 25th October 1895, reversing the order of Babu Kali Krishna Chowdhry, Munsif of Atia, dated the 18th September 1894.

Babu Srinath Das, Babu Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty and Babu Kritanta Kumar Bose for the respondent.—An averment of actual damage is not necessary; therefore the plaint does disclose a cause of action. Illustration (r) to section 54 of the Specific Relief Act is clear upon the point. In the case of [262] The Darley Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell (L. R., 11 App. Cas., 127) the question arose as to when the cause of action accrued in a suit for damages for subsequent subsidence of the soil; and it was held that each subsidence would furnish a separate cause of action. An injury has actually resulted by the subsidence of the plaintiff's land; and therefore the plaint ought to be amended on the principle adopted in cases where a prayer for recovery is allowed to be added when dispossession has taken place subsequent to institution of suit,—Abdul Kadar v. Mahomed (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 15), or where the defect is merely one of form,—Amir Hossein v. Imambandi Begum (11 C. L R., 443).

Babu Nilmadhub Bose in reply.

The plaintiff and the defendants are the owners of adjoining tenures. The plaint sets out that the defendants wantonly and with the intention of causing injury to the plaintiff dug a trench on the verge of the boundary of her tenure, 110 feet long and 8 or 9 feet deep, the depth being perpendicular downwards and sloping inwards towards the bottom in the direction of the plaintiff's land, and that this must necessarily result in the subsidence of the plaintiff's land. It is further alleged that the defendants were still going on with the work. The relief asked for is a perpetual injunction prohibiting them digging earth within a certain distance of the plaintiff's tenement; the filling up of the excavation, or in default a certain sum of money as the costs of filling it up. There was a further prayer for general relief.

The defendants raised various objections to the plaintiff's suit. They asserted their right to dig as they pleased upon their own land, and stated that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction. There was no direct denial of the particular acts alleged in the plaint, but it may be gathered from the 9th paragraph of the written statement that they were excavating a tank which had no slopes, although they intended to make them hereafter.

The case proceeded to trial, and, when it was ripe for decision, the defendants contended that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, inasmuch as no injury was alleged to have resulted [263] from the acts of the defendants. The Munsif accepted as correct that view of the law, and, holding that until actual damage had ensued no cause of action could arise, dismissed the suit without deciding any of the other questions which arose in the case. It appears that the plaintiff in the course of the trial represented to the Court that, subsequent to the institution of the suit, injury had actually resulted from the acts of the defendants by the subsidence of some of the plaintiff's land, and evidence to that effect was given. The case went on appeal before the Subordinate Judge, who reversed the Munsif's decision and remanded the case under section 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, directing the Munsif to allow an amendment of the plaint and decide the question already raised in the case and any other questions that might arise after the amendment. This appeal is against the order of remand, and it is contended that the Munsif was right in dismissing the suit on the ground that the plaint disclosed no cause of action.

If the Munsif was right in holding that actual injury would alone give a cause of action, then he was right in dismissing the suit, because anything that happened subsequent to the institution of the suit could not supply a cause of action which did not exist before. In our opinion he was wrong in his view of the law. A suit for injunction may be a suit for preventive relief, and, under section 54 of the Specific Relief Act, a perpetual injunction may be granted to prevent the breach of an obligation existing in favour of the applicant, whether expressly or by implication. The same section provides that when a defendant invades or threatens to invade the plaintiff's right to, or enjoyment of property, the Court may grant a perpetual injunction in certain specified cases. Illustration (r) attached to the same section indicates a case in which an injunction may be sued for to restrian a defendant from doing an act which threatens injury to the plaintiff's property, although no such injury had actually ensued. In the case of Pattisson v. Gilford (L. R., 18 Eq., 259) the Master of the Rolls, speaking of the principles upon which a Court of Equity interferes when an injunction is asked for, says: "I take it that, in order to obtain an injunction, a plaintiff who complains, not that an act [264] is an actual violation of his right, but that a threatened or intended act, if carried into effect, will be a violation of the right, must show that such will be an inevitable result. It will not do to say a violation of the right may be the result; the plaintiff must show that a violation will be the inevitable result." And then he proceeds to cite a case decided by Lord COTTENHAM, and another case in which the Lord CHANCELLOR says: "I consider this Court has jurisdiction by injunction to protect property from an act threatened which, if completed, would give a right of action. I by no means say that in every such case an injunction may be demanded as of right, but if the party applying is free from blame and promptly applies for relief, and shows that by the threatened wrong his property would be so injured that an action for damages would be no adequate redress, an injunction will be granted." The facts of that case had, it is true, no analogy to the present case, but still the Master of the Rolls was dealing with the principle upon which relief is given against a threatened wrong, and the case is, we think, an authority that such a suit will lie when the threatened act is of such a character that it must inevitably result in injury--inevitably in the sense in which the Master of the Rolls says he uses the word, that is to say not in the sense of there being no possibility the other way, because Courts of Justice must always act upon the theory of very great probability being sufficient, but in the sense that there must be such a great probability, that, in the view of ordinary men, using ordinary sense, the injury would follow. The Munsif was, therefore, we consider, wrong in holding that, as a matter of law, actual injury before suit must in every case be alleged and proved in order to maintain the suit, and that it is sufficient if it is alleged that the result of the act complained of must inevitably, in the sense we have stated, flow from it. Whether the case is one in which an injunction or any other relief should be granted, or what precise form the injunction should take, are questions which the Courts dealing with the facts must decide with reference to the provisions of sections 53 and 54 of the Specific Relief Act. It may be that the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief which she claims or to relief in the particular form which she claimed it, but that would not make the suit unmaintainable. Now, no better proof of the inevitable consequence of an alleged act can be given than [265] that the contemplated injury had actually occurred, and, we think, it is quite competent for the plaintiff in this case to give evidence of that injury, although it had not occurred prior to the institution of the suit, and, for that purpose and in order to give due notice to the defendants of the fact, which it is intended to prove, the plaint might properly be amended. It is not quite clear on what grounds the Subordinate Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif and remanded the suit. He does not say that the view which the Munsif took of the law was wrong, but merely that the plaintiff should be allowed to amend the plaint; in what way he does not say, and his order that the Munsif should allow the plaint to be amended in some undefined way is not a correct order. If he took the same view of the law which the Munsif took, and intended that the plaint should be amended in order to give the plaintiff a cause of action which did not before exist, his view is wrong. Nevertheless, we think that the order of remand is right, and that the plaintiff should be allowed to amend the plaint by inserting in it the nature and extent of the injury suffered. That is not an amendment inconsistent with the provisions of the Code. The act complained of occurred before the institution of the suit, and the injury, which was foreseen and which it was the object of the suit to avert, occurred after the institution of it.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

H. W. Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 15th September, 1890.

SIR W. COMER PETHERAM, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP, AND MR. JUSTICE PIGOT.

Minor—Representations as to age known to be false—Liability in equity—Action on the contract—Action framed in tort—Costs—Statements as to existence of relationship—Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 32, sub-section (5).

Where an infant obtained a loan upon the representation (which he knew to be false) that he was of age: Held, that no suit to recover the money could be maintained against him, there being no obligation binding upon the [266] infant which could be enforced upon the contract either at law or in equity, but that the defendant should not be allowed costs in either Court.

Case in which the plaint in a former suit verified by a deceased member of the family, and as such having special means of knowledge, was held admissible under section 32 †

* Original Civil Appeal No. 23 of 1890, against the decree of Mr. Justice NORRIS, dated the 9th of May 1890.

† [Sec. 32:—Statements, written or verbal, of relevant facts made by a person who is dead, or who cannot be found, or who has become incapable of giving evidence, or whose attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay or expense which, under the circumstances of the case, appears to the Court unreasonable, are themselves relevant facts in the following cases:—

or relates to existence of relationship;

sub-section (5) of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), to prove the order in which certain persons were born and their ages.

THIS was a suit brought to recover the sum of Rs. 13,000, and interest due on a mortgage executed by the defendant on the 26th March 1886. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant at the time of execution represented himself to be of full age, and thereby induced the plaintiff to advance the mortgage money, and he contended that, in the event of the defendant establishing that he was a minor at the date of the mortgage, then his representations amounted to a fraud, and were wilfully made with a view to deceive the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff should in any event be held entitled to recover the money. The prayer of the plaint was for the usual mortgage decree and for a money decree. The defendant pleaded minority, and denied the alleged fraudulent representation.

The question of the defendant's age depended partly upon the statements of friends and relatives, and partly upon certain entries in a register of births kept under the system of registration in force in Calcutta (Bengal Act VI of 1863) at the time when the four youngest sons of Sumbo Nath Ghose, the defendant's father, were born. The names did not appear upon the register, so that it was not possible to ascertain from the register alone which of either of the entries had reference to the defendant.

It appeared from the entries that a son was born to Sumbo Nath Ghose on the 15th March 1886 [1868 ?], another on the 6th June 1868, another on the 29th September 1870, and another on the 31st May 1872. The defendant alleged that he was born on the 6th June 1868, and that the entry under that date referred to his birth. As the mortgage was executed on the 26th March 1886, the defendant, if he could establish that he was one of the four whose names were registered, was not of age when he signed the deed, as (a guardian of his person and property having been appointed) he did not attain his majority until the completion of his twenty-first year.

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the name of the [267] defendant and that of either Ackhoy Coomar Ghose, or Dhurandhur Ghose, his brothers, must have been transposed for the purposes of this litigation ; but this theory was rebutted by the fact that in March 1879 a suit was brought on behalf of the defendant and the other sons of Sumbo Nath Ghose other than Dhurandhur, against Dhurandhur, in which they sued as infants by their next friend Nursing Chunder Bose to take the property of their father out of the hands of their elder brother, who had at that time attained his majority ; and afterwards Ackhoy Coomar Ghose, on the death of the guardian who had been appointed to bring the suit, was upon the report of the Registrar appointed guardian of his minor brothers, including the defendant. The statements in the plaint in this suit were tendered in evidence on the defendant's behalf under section 32, sub-section (5), of the Evidence Act (I of 1872).

The case was heard before Mr. Justice NORRIS who found that the plea of minority was proved, but that the defendant falsely pretended, and allowed other persons in his presence and on his behalf to state, to the plaintiff that he was of full age; that such statements were false to the knowledge of the defendant, and operated upon the plaintiff's mind, so as to induce him to advance the money. It was admitted at the Bar that if the plea of minority was established the plaintiff could not be entitled to a mortgage decree, but it was argued that if the case of false representations was made out, he was entitled to a money decree.

The learned Judge upon a full review of all the cases (q. v. infra) held that none of the cases cited went beyond supporting the limited liability which attached to an infant who is guilty of fraud, viz., "that he may be compelled to make specific restitution, where that is possible, of anything he has obtained by deceit." (See Pollock on Torts, p. 48). In the present case the learned Judge found there was nothing to show that the defendant could make specific restitution, and dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and PRINSEP and PIGOT, JJ.):—

Petheram, C. J., (after stating the facts).—These facts, in my opinion, show beyond all question that the defendant was one of the four younger sons of Sumbo Nath, whose births were registered, and consequently that he must have been a minor when he signed the deed. But besides all this the plaint in the suit of 1879 was put in; that plaint was signed by Nursing Chunder Bose, the maternal grandfather of the defendant, a person who is since dead, and it is contended on behalf of the defendant that statements in it, as to the order in which Sumbo Nath's sons were born, and as to the dates of their births, are evidence under section 32, sub-section (5) of the Evidence Act, and that, if so, they are conclusive. It was contended on the part of the plaintiff on the authority of the English cases that, as the question at issue in this case did not relate to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption, the section did not apply, and the statements were excluded by the ordinary rules of evidence. I think that on this point the law in India under the Evidence Act is different from the law of England, and that the effect of the section [269] is to make a statement, made by such a person, relating to the existence of such relationship, admissible to prove the facts contained in the statement on any issue, and that the plaint was admissible here to prove the order in which the sons of Sumbo Nath were born, and their ages, and when admitted, it to my mind satisfactorily proves that the defendant was the son who was born on the 6th June 1868.

The remaining questions are, whether the advance was obtained by a fraudulent misrepresentation by the defendant as to his age, and, if so, what is its effect on his liability? There can, I think, be no doubt that the advance was obtained by an elaborate and cleverly concocted fraud. The defendant applied to the plaintiff to make him an advance, which the plaintiff agreed to do if he were satisfied that the defendant was of age. The defendant assured him that he was, gave him the date of his birth, and referred him to

Mr. Pittar, who, he said, had the documents necessary to prove the truth of his statements. The plaintiff saw Mr. Pittar, who showed him some documents, and in effect told him that he was himself satisfied by them that the defendant was of age, and that the plaintiff might safely advance the money. The statement as to the defendant's age was untrue, and some at least of the documents must have been forgeries, and this the defendant must have known.

The fact is that the plaintiff was induced to part with his money by a fraud to which the defendant was a party, and the question which now arises is whether such fraud prevents the defendant from successfully setting up the plea of infancy as a defence to the present action. In my opinion it does not. No case has been cited before us, nor are we aware of the existence of any, in which a person has been held personally liable to pay a debt contracted by him during his infancy, on the ground that he obtained the credit by fraudulent misrepresentations as to his age. The case which was most pressed upon us is that of Ex parte Unity Joint Stock Mutual Banking Association (3 De G. & J., 63). The head note correctly sums up the decision in that case as follows: Where an infant had obtained a loan, on a representation which he knew to be false that he was of age, held, that a proof for the loan was properly admitted in bankruptcy. The Lords Justices KNIGHT-[270] BRUCE and TURNER refused to expunge the proof, but except that they said that they were bound by authority they gave no reasons for their decision.

This was a proof in bankruptcy, and I am not aware of any case in which an action at law or suit in equity against the borrower has been held to be maintainable. On the other hand, there are numerous cases by which it appears that there is no obligation binding on the infant which can be enforced by action upon the contract either at law or in equity. Johnson v. Pie (1 Sid., 258: 1 Keb., 905, 913: 1 Lev., 169), Wright v. Leonard [11 C. B. (N. S.), 258]. Bartlett v. Wells (1 B. & S., 836), Ex parte Jones [L. R., 18 Ch. D., 109 (120)].

There appears then to be no authority for the proposition contended for by the plaintiff, and I agree with the learned Judge that on principle the suit must be dismissed. Inasmuch, however, as the loan was obtained by a misrepresentation by the defendant as to his age, I think the plaintiff was entitled to test the truth of his present assertion by suit and by this appeal, and that the decree should be so far varied that, although the suit will be dismissed, the defendant will not get costs in either Court.

Prinsep, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Pigot, J.—I fully agree with the conclusion at which the Chief Justice has arrived. I think it clearly established that the defendant was under age when he entered into this contract; that the evidence referred to by him was admissible on that point; and that the plaintiff was induced to enter into the contract with him by misrepresentation as to his age, deliberately and skilfully made by the defendant, with the aid of persons as skilful and unscrupulous as himself.

I think the suit must fail, quite apart from anything in the exact form of the plaint, and allowing it the most liberal construction. Assuming it to be framed in tort, "an infant," as Sir F. POLLOCK accurately says, "could not be made liable for what was in truth a breach of contract by framing the action ex delicto. 'You cannot convert a contract into a tort to enable you to sue an infant'" (Pollock on Torts, pp. 47, 48). Stikeman v. Dawson [1 De G. & Sm., 110 (113)], was very fully cited before us: what the Vice-Chancellor says there, p. 113, is no doubt in condemnation [271] of the proposition, that a minor is, without any misrepresentation, in equity, answerable after his majority to a person who has contracted with him, having no notice that at the time of the contract he was a minor. But in dealing with this, he cites with complete approval the case of Johnson v. Pie (1 Sid., 258 : 1 Keb. 905, 913 : 1 Lev., 169). In that case " Winnington prayed judgment in an action upon the case on communication of lending £300, and that the defendant was therefore to mortgage certain lands ; and the defendant affirmed himself to be of full age, and so intending to deceive the plaintiff, and being in appearance a man, and avers he was twenty-and-a-half ; the defendant pleads not guilty, and there is a verdict for the plaintiff, Pasch, 16 Car., 2, Rot., 401. * * * * Keeling said, such torts that must punish an infant must be vi et armis, or notoriously against the public ; but here the plaintiff's own credulity hath betrayed him ; also by Windham, the commands of an infant are void ; and for such he shall never be attainted a disseisor, much less shall he be punished for a bare affirmation, which Twisden agreed, and that there must be a fact joined to it, as cheating with false dice, &c. Also by this means all the pleas of infancy would be taken away, for such affirmations are in every contract. The Court awarded on the plaintiff's prayer a Nil capit per Billam." 1 Keble, p. 913, as well as Siderfin.

I do not think that any of the equity cases cited apply to the present case, which is, in the most favourable view of it that can be taken for the plaintiff, an action of deceit ; precisely in truth the same case as Johnson v. Pie (1 Sid., 258 : 1 Keb. 905, 913 : 1 Lev., 169). No doubt an infant will not be allowed to take advantage of his own fraud, and may be compelled to make specific restitution, when that is possible, of anything he has obtained by deceit But this case does not come within either principle. If we as a Court of Equity, as well as of law, were to allow the plaintiff to recover in this suit, it would amount to restraining a defendant from setting up the plea of infancy in an action on a contract by reason of his having made a fraudulent misrepresentation dans locum contractui : and in no case has this ever been done.

Appeal dismissed.

[272] PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 19th and 27th June, 1896.

PRESENT:

LORD WATSON, LORD HOBHOUSE, AND SIR R. COUCH.

Bengal Indigo Company............Defendants

versus

Roghobur Das............Plaintiff.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 5, sub-section 5, and section 25—Definition of raiyati holding—Lessees who are not raiyats within the Act—Zur-i-peshgi lease.

A tenant, holding under a lease assigned to him in 1890 by the original lessee, who since 1867 had continuously occupied the land under successive leases, claimed in virtue of the occupancy, for more than twelve years, to be a raiyat within the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, either with occupancy, or with non-occupancy, rights: Held, that this tenant's holding was excluded from the operation of that Act by the effect of section 5, sub-section 5, on account of the extent of the area of the land leased, which was more than one hundred standard bighas.

A zur-i-peshgi lease is not a mere contract for the cultivation of the land at a rent, but is a security to the tenant for his money advanced. Two of the leases were zur-i-peshgi, or made on money advanced by the lessee to the lessor. The tenant's possession in this case was in part at least that of a creditor operating payment to himself, and was no foundation for a claim for occupancy rights.

As to the effect of written stipulations contrary to the latter, section 7 of the Bengal Rent law, Act X of 1859, is superseded, if not wholly repealed, by section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885.

APPEAL from a decree (7th August 1894) of the High Court reversing a decree (31st October 1892) of the Second Subordinate Judge at Chapra in district Sarun.

On this appeal no facts were in dispute, and the questions raised were entirely of law, consisting principally of the following, viz., whether the appellants, the Bengal Indigo Company, proprietors of the Barouli Factory in the Sarun district, having obtained by assignment in 1890 leasehold lands, which had been occupied by their assignor for more than twelve years, had obtained the rights of a raiyat to the protection of their tenancy in virtue of Act VIII of 1885, the Bengal Tenancy Act. They claimed to be either as an occupancy raiyat, entitled to hold upon the [273] terms enacted therein or as a non-occupancy raiyat, to be entitled to six months' notice to quit.

The defendants took the lease then current, that of the 15th February 1881, by assignment from the original lessee on the 24th April 1890; and in the same year, the lease having terminated on the 27th October 1890, they received notice to quit from the plaintiff. The leases, under which the alleged twelve years' occupancy took place, were the following:—

In 1867, the then proprietors of the Barouli Indigo Factory, E. G. Williams and Abdul Gyas Khan, obtained a lease from the 14th September 1867 for five years of 105 bighas 1 cottah, at a rent of Rs. 577 per annum, for the cultivation of indigo. This was granted by Mohant Ramcharan Das, the plaintiff's predecessor in the management of temple property. Both pottah and kabuliyat contained express agreements for the tenants giving up the land at the end of the term. In 1869 Abdul Gyas made over his interest in that lease to E. G. Williams.

In August 1872, Ramcharan Das executed to E. G. Williams a simple ticca pottah for ten years of 25 bighas, and on the 18th August 1872 the mohant executed to him a zur-i-peshgi, ticca, patowa, pottah for nine years of 240 bighas which included the 105 bighas, already leased, upon an advance by Williams of Rs. 4,500. The rent was Rs. 1,380 per annum, and the advance was to bear 6 annas interest a month, the balance being repayable by stipulated instalments. Both the ticca pottah, and the zur-i-peshgi, as well as the kabuliyats in both cases, contained express provisions for the land to be given up at the end of the terms. On the 15th February 1881, the plaintiff, who had succeeded as mohant, granted a zur-i-peshgi, ticca, patowa, pottah of the whole 265 bighas to Williams and Wilson, who then represented the indigo concern, in proportions according to their shares as partners, for nine years, upon an advance of Rs. 5,000. The rent was to be Rs. 1,523, out of which Rs. 550 yearly, and interest at 6 annas per mensem, was to be deducted in payment of the advance. Special provisions for surrender at the end of the term were in the pottah and in the kabuliyat.

On the 16th June 1890, notice, with fee, Rs. 33, was accepted by the plaintiff that the tenancy had been transferred to the defend-[274]ant-company, to whom, on the 9th October 1890, the plaintiff sent notice to quit, and deliver possession on the 28th of that month, in pursuance of the terms of the lease.

The appellants not having given up the land, the respondent brought this suit on the 18th February 1891. His plaint stated the lease of the 15th February 1881, and alleged its expiration on the 27th October 1890. The appellants having held over, the plaintiff claimed possession with mesne profits of the 265 bighas, valuing his claim at Rs. 23,905. The appellants stated in their answer that the last lease had been transferred to them, that they had been recognized as tenants, and submitted that E. G. Williams was, at the time of the transfer, a "settled raiyat," having acquired a right of occupancy in the 256 bighas, a right which was transferable by the custom of the district. The appellants were therefore entitled to a right of occupancy under the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. Even if not so entitled, they were, as they contended, non-occupancy raiyats, on whom notice of not less than six months should have been served, to bring the tenancy to an end.

The following sections of Act X of 1859, the Bengal Rent law, and of Act VIII of 1885, the Bengal Tenancy Act, were referred to in the case

Act X of 1859, section 6.—Every ryot who has cultivated or held land for a period of 12 years has a right of occupancy in the land so cultivated or held by him whether it be held under pottah or not, so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same, but this rule does not apply to khamar, neejjote, or seer land belonging to the proprietor of the estate or tenure, and let by him on lease for a term or year by year, nor (as respects the actual cultivation) to lands sublet for a term, or year by year, by a ryot having a right of occupancy. The holding of the father, or other person from whom a ryot inherits, shall be deemed to be the holding of the ryot within the meaning of this section.

Section 7.—Nothing contained in the last preceding section shall be held to affect the terms of any written contract for the cultivation of land entered into between a landholder and a ryot, when it contains any express stipulation contrary thereto.

Act VIII of 1885, section 5 (2).—"Raiyat" means primarily a person who has acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of cultivating it by himself, or by members of his family; or by hired servants, or with the aid of partners, and includes also the successors in interest of persons who have acquired such a right.

Section 5, sub-section 4.—In determining whether a tenant is a tenure-[275]holder or a raiyat the Court shall have regard to (a) local custom, and (b) the purpose for which the right of tenancy was originally acquired. Sub-section 5 —where the area held by a tenant exceeds one hundred standard bighas the tenant shall be presumed to be a tenure holder until the contrary is shown.

Section 25.—An occupancy raiyat shall not be ejected by his landlord from his holding except in execution of a decree for ejectment passed on the ground (a) that he has used the land comprised in his holding in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy, or (b) that he has broken a condition consistent with the provisions of this Act, and on breach of which he is, under the terms of a contract between himself and his landlord, liable to be ejected.

Section 45.—A suit for ejectment on the ground of the expiration of the term of a lease shall not be instituted against a non-occupancy raiyat unless notice to quit has been served on the raiyat not less than six months before the expiration of the term, and shall not be instituted after six months from the expiration of the term.

Section 178 (1).—Nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant made before or after the passing of this Act (a) shall bar in perpetuity the acquisition of an occupancy right in land, or (b) shall take away an occupancy right in existence at the date of the contract, or (c) shall entitle a landlord to eject a tenant otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(2)—Nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant since the 15th day of July 1880 and before the passing of this Act shall prevent a raiyat from acquiring in accordance with this Act an occupancy right in land.

The following were the issues that raised the principal points :—

Whether under the terms of the two ticca, and the two patowa leases, dated, respectively, the 28th October 1867, the 17th August 1872, and the 15th February 1881, the defendant-company were bound to give up possession after the expiration of the last term.

Whether the defendants' vendor had acquired a right of occupancy, and whether the defendant-company stepped into that right by purchase.

Whether the notice served on the defendant-company was proper and sufficient.

The second Subordinate Judge made a decree dismissing the suit. In his judgment he gave his opinion that the zur-i-peshgi leases constituted raiyati holdings, and were not mortgages only; that by virtue of the twelve years' holding that had preceded the transfer to them, the defendant-company [276] had obtained an occupancy right of which it could only be deprived for the causes stated in section 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, and that the conditions for surrender were invalid under section 178 of the same Act. The Judge considered that, in any case, the notice to quit was insufficient under section 45 of that Act.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. A Division Bench (TREVELYAN and AMEER ALI, JJ.) allowed the appeal, and reversing the decision of the first Court decreed in the plaintiff's favour. Their judgment stated the above facts, and the opinion of the Subordinate Judge thereon, stating also the questions that had been argued on the appeal before them to be : (1) have the defendant-company obtained a right of occupancy in the land; (2) if they have not obtained such right of occupancy are they non-occupancy raiyats and entitled as such to the benefits of section 45 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885? The High Court thought the case depended upon the construction of section 7 of Act X of 1859, and proceeded as follows :—

In a Full Bench case to which we have been referred, Sheo Prokash Misser v. Ram Sahoy Singh (8 B. L. R., 165), it was held that the mere fact that a raiyat held under written lease for a specified term of years, did not prevent his obtaining a right of occupancy in the land. In that case there was nothing more than a provision as to the term of the lease; there was not, as here, an express provision as to the tenant vacating the land at the expiration of his lease, and putting it into proper order. The provision that is made to cut down the murhans and their stumps which may be on the land at the expiration of the term, is inconsistent with its being contemplated that he was to hold over the term; so is also the provision that the landlord may, at the end of the term, uproot the stumps and settle the lands with other tenants. This is inconsistent with any right to retain possession of the land. Mr. Justice DWARKA NATH MITTER, in his judgment in the Full Bench case, says: "It is beyond all question, that if a raiyat possessing a right of occupancy enters into an express stipulation with his landlord to surrender the land on the expiration of a stated period of time, he would be bound, like any other individual, to fulfil the terms of his contract."

Throughout his judgment Mr. Justice MITTER assumes, that an express stipulation to vacate is an express stipulation within the meaning of section 7. On the first question we hold that the defendant-company has acquired no occupancy right. As to the second question, we think it is clear that there is not in this case a raiyati holding at all. The lease under which the tenant [277] was last holding, was a zur-i-peshgi lease. The main object of such a lease is to provide for the payment of the zur-i-peshgi money, and that was the purpose for which the right of tenancy under which the defendants claim to hold was originally acquired. It is true that their predecessors first held under a lease, that of 1867, which was by no means a simple raiyati lease, but one which provided in the alternative either for cultivation by the lessees or for their letting out the land to other tenants. That lease, however, has ceased to have any effect. There has been a new and very different contract between the parties, and it is really to that contract that we must look. We know of no case where it has been held that the zur-i-peshgidar has been treated as a raiyat, and it would certainly be very hard upon the landlord if he should be so treated, as the landlord would be compelled, after the expiration of the term, to continue the tenancy at a rent instead of being able to get a new advance from some one else. The deeds of 1872 and 1881, though called leases, are ordinary patowa mortgages common in Behar, with the usual provision about the satisfaction of the money lent, which was clearly advanced on the security of the lands. The mere fact that the mortgagees would or could cultivate the lands with indigo or any other crop, cannot possibly affect the contract or convert the status of mortgagee into that of a raiyat. Certainly this is a novel case; a Limited Company claiming to be not only a settled raiyat, but to have occupancy rights. It is not necessary for us to decide any question as to whether raiyati rights can be acquired by a Limited Company. It is sufficient to say that the deed under which they are holding does not create any raiyati rights, and therefore is no answer to this suit. The plaintiff is entitled to a decree in terms of the prayer of the plaint. The amount of mesne profits must be ascertained by the lower Court. The plaintiff is entitled also to his costs of this suit in the Court below, and of this appeal.

The defendants having appealed,

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, and Mr. Philip L. Buckland, appeared for the Appellant-company.

Mr. J. D. Mayne for the Respondent.

For the appellants it was argued that it should have been decided in the Courts below that under the leases of 1867, 1872, and 1881, and with reference to the possession held continuously for cultivation since the first lease was granted, the right of occupancy had been acquired by the defendant-company. Section 178 of Act VIII of 1885 had not been referred to in the judgment of the High Court, which had been based on section 7 of Act X of 1859. There had been also an omission to notice that the lease of the 15th February 1881 was made at a date after the 15th July 1880, and before the passing of the Act in 1885, a period referred to in sub-section 2 of section 178 of that Act. It was contended [278] that the leases were only leases, and in no sense mortgages. The Full Bench case, referred to in the judgment of the High Court, Sheo Prokash Misser v. Ram Sahoy Singh (8 B. L. R., 165), showed that the mere taking a lease did not amount to the express stipulation which the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, no less than Act X of 1859, required; if the acquirement of the right of occupancy, by continuous cultivation of one holding for the prescribed period, was to be prevented by the relation of contract between landlord and tenant existing for another purpose besides cultivation only. The payment of money in advance was only a mode of paying the rent. In any view of the appellants' rights, they were not liable to be evicted without the respondent's having given six months' notice of his intention to enforce the agreement to quit and deliver possession.

Counsel for the Respondent was not called upon.

Their Lordships' judgment was, afterwards, on the 27th June, delivered by Lord Watson, J.—The appellant-company are owners of the Barouli Indigo Factory, which they acquired in April 1890. The respondent is proprietor of the entire 16 annas of Mehal Barouli, portions of which were occupied by the owners of the Factory, from the 14th September 1867, until September 1890, under a series of leases from the respondent and his predecessors. These were, (1) a ticca pottah of 105 bighas 1 cottah and 8 dhoors, for five years ending in September 1872: (2) a peshgi patowa ticca, for nine years ending in September 1881, of the 105 bighas 1 cottah and 8 dhoors included in the preceding lease, together with additional land bringing up the total area to 240 bighas; (3) a ticca pottah, of same date with the last, of 25 bighas for ten years ending in September 1882; and (4) a zur-i-peshgi ticca patowa pottah, of the whole 265 bighas included in the two previous leases, for an additional term ending in October 1890.

The first and third of these documents were in the ordinary terms of a lease for cultivation.

The second and the fourth of them had this peculiarity, that at their commencement, the tenants advanced to the lessor a lump sum, in the one case of Rs. 4,500 and in the other of Rs. 5,000, [279] for the liquidation of debts due to his creditors, the tenants being entitled to recover payment by retaining out of the rents payable by them, a yearly instalment of the sum advanced, with interest at the rate of six annas per mensem. The lands were cultivated for the purpose of growing indigo and the leases contained an express obligation by the tenants to quit occupation at their expiry.

On the 9th October 1890, the last of these leases having expired, the respondent served the appellants with a notice requiring them to remove from possession, and intimating that in the event of their failure to do so, a regular suit would be instituted. The notice having been disregarded, the present suit was brought by the respondent in February 1891, before the District Court of Sarun (1) for a declaration that the appellants had no right to retain possession, (2) to have exclusive possession decreed to the respondent, and (3) for mesne profits. In their written statement, the appellants pleaded that they and their predecessors in the Factory had acquired a permanent right as occupancy raiyats; and, alternatively, that, as non-occupancy raiyats, they were not liable to be ejected, except upon the terms and conditions specified in section 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 (Act VIII of 1885).

The Subordinate Judge gave effect to the leading plea of the appellants, and dismissed the suit with costs. On appeal to the High Court, his decision was reversed by TREVELYAN and AMEER ALI, JJ., who held, that the second and fourth of the leases abovementioned did not create a proper right of occupancy for purposes of cultivation, and could not be made the foundation of a claim to raiyat occupancy. They further held that the appellants' defence was excluded by section 7 of Act X of 1859, which enacts that the provisions of the Statute "shall not be held to affect the terms of any written contract for the cultivation of land entered into between a landholder and a ryot, when it contains any express stipulation contrary thereto."

Their Lordships see no reason to differ from the views expressed by the learned Judges of the High Court, to the effect that the leases in question were not mere contracts for the cultivation of the land let; but that they were also intended to constitute, and did constitute, real and valid security to the [280] tenant for the principal sums which he had advanced, and interest thereon. The tenants' possession under them was, in part at least, not that of cultivators only, but that of creditors operating repayment of the debt due to them, by means of their security. Their Lordships cannot concur in the judgment of the High Court, in so far as it is founded upon section 7 of the Act of 1859, because that clause is superseded, if not wholly repealed, by section 178 of Act VIII of 1885, which does not appear to have been referred to in the argument addressed to the Court.

It is unnecessary to notice further the reasoning which prevailed in either of the Courts below, because it entirely ignores the statutory definition of the word "raiyat," contained in section 5, sub-section 5 of the Act of 1885. It is in these terms,—"Where the area held by a tenant exceeds one hundred standard bighas, the tenant shall be presumed to be a tenure-holder until the contrary is shown." That enactment is conclusive of the present case. The land held in tenancy by the owners of the Barouli Indigo Factory, under the respondent and his predecessors in title, has from the first been in excess, and since 1872, largely in excess, of the statutory limit. The appellants are, therefore, not raiyats, either "occupancy" or "non-occupancy," within the meaning of the Act of 1885; and their defence to this suit is groundless.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgment appealed from. The appellants must pay to the respondent his costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

[281] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd December, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Sitab Chand Nahar............Plaintiff

versus

Hyder Malla and others............Defendants.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 132—Suit for money due on mortgage bond—Money payable by instalments—Default in payment of instalment—Right to sue for entire amount due on default of payment of any instalment.

Where, by a mortgage bond (hypothecating immoveable property) executed by the defendants, a sum of money was made payable by four instalments, the plaintiff to be at liberty in case of any default to sue either for the amount of that instalment or for the whole amount due on the bond: Held, that limitation ran from the date of the first default.

THE plaintiff brought this suit against the defendants to recover money due on a mortgage bond payable by instalments. The bond was executed on the 10th Bysack 1288 (21st April 1881). The loan was made repayable in four instalments, and it was stipulated that on default of payment of any instalment the plaintiff might, at his option, sue either for the amount due on that instalment or for the whole amount due on the bond. The suit was instituted on the 29th Chaitro 1300 (11th April 1894), more than twelve years after the first two instalments became due, but less than twelve years after the last two instalments became due. The defendants contended that as the first instalment was not paid the whole amount secured by the bond became due from the date of that default, and hence the plaintiff's whole claim was barred by limitation. The Court of First Instance gave the plaintiff a decree for the amount of the third and fourth instalments. Both parties appealed to the Judge of Dinajpur, who held that the suit was barred by limitation, and dismissed the plaintiff's appeal.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Kali Kissen Sen and Babu Kishori Lal for the Appellant.

[282] Babu Mohini Mohun Chuckravarti for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant to recover money due on a mortgage bond payable by instalments. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants had after repeated demands paid two small sums, and the suit was for the balance that remained unpaid. The defence in substance was that the suit was barred by limitation, that the terms of the mortgage bond had been subsequently modified by a verbal contract, and that the defendants having performed their part of that contract, the bond was satisfied.

The first Court found that the part payments alleged in the plaint were not proved, that all the instalments under the bond except the last two were in consequence barred by limitation, and that the subsequent oral contract set up was not established; and it accordingly decreed the suit in part.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1780 of 1895, against the decree of R. R. Pope, Esq., District Judge of Dinajpur, dated the 28th of June 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Debendranath Roy, Munsif of that District, dated the 18th of March 1895.

On appeal the Lower Appellate Court has dismissed the whole suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation.

In second appeal it is contended that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in law in dismissing the whole suit on the ground of limitation, when it ought to have affirmed the decree of the first Court.

The suit being one for the recovery of money due on a mortgage bond by the sale of the mortgaged property, the provision of the Limitation Act applicable to it is art. 132, Sch. II; (See Ram Din v. Kalka Prasad (I. L. R., 7 All., 502), Miller v. Runga Nath Moulick (I.L.R., 12 Cal., 389) and Girwar Singh v. Thakur Narain Singh (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 731). The period of limitation under that article is twelve years, and it runs from the time when the money becomes due; and the question is when did the money sued for become due. The mortgage bond stipulates that the money borrowed shall be paid by certain instalments, and that upon default in the payment of any one instalment the mortgagee may at his pleasure sue either for that instalment or for the whole of the money [283] then remaining unpaid. And it is admitted on both sides that upon the facts found, the claim for all the instalments except the last two is barred upon any view of the case, but that the claim for the last two instalments would or would not be barred according as it is held that time runs from the date of the first default or from the due dates of those two instalments. The contention on behalf of the appellant is that the two instalments became due within the meaning of article 132 on their respective due dates; while on the other side, it is urged that the money became due as soon as the first default was made. The learned Vakil for the appellant, in support of his contention, cites Shankar Prasad v. Jalpa Prasad (I. L. R., 16 All., 371), and Hanmantram Sadhuram v. Bowles (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 561), and for the respondents the cases of Juggut Mohinee Dossee v. Monohur Koonwar (25 W.R., 278), Nobodip Chunder Shaha v. Ramkrishna Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 397), Bir Narain Panda v. Darpa Narain Prodhan (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 74), Mon Mohun Roy v. Durga Charan Gooce (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 502), Ram Pulpo Bhattacharji v. Ram Chunder Shome (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 352), Hurri Pershad Chowdhry v. Nasib Singh (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 542) and Ragho Govind Paranjpe v. Dip Chand (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 96) are relied on.

The cases cited are all distinguishable from the present, though certain general principles, either expressly enunciated or impliedly relied on in some of them, clearly bear upon the question now before us.

The first case cited for the appellant, Shankar Prasad v. Jalpa Prasad (I.L. R., 16 All., 371) is not one relating to the construction of article 132 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act. The question there was whether, where a decree for money is payable by instalments with a provision that upon default in the payment of any instalment the decree-holder may, if he wishes, execute the decree for the whole sum remaining unpaid, limitation runs in respect of each instalment from its due date, notwithstanding that the whole amount covered by the decree became realisable at the decree holder's option at an earlier date by reason of the judgment-debtor's default; and the learned Judges of the Allahabad High [284] Court answered that question in the affirmative. The case evidently was one under clause (b) of article 179, Schedule II of the Limitation Act, and the effect of the decision is that the 'certain date' referred to in that clause was the due date for each instalment, notwithstanding that it might have been claimed as realisable at an earlier date. The principle underlying the decision no doubt appears at first sight to lend some support to the appellant's contention that the money sued for became due gradually at the dates of the successive instalments, notwithstanding that the plaintiff had the option of claiming it as having become due at an earlier date; but we are unable to follow this decision, because it is in conflict with the decisions of our own Court in Bir Narain Panda v. Darpa Narain Prodhan (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 74) and Hurri Pershad Chowdhry v. Nasib Singh (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 542) cited for the respondents, and also because we find it difficult to understand how money, which, though made payable by instalments, becomes realisable at once upon default in the payment of any instalment, can be said not to have been directed to be paid on the date of such default so as to make limitation run from that date under clause (b) of article 179 merely because it was optional with the creditor to enforce the condition for immediate payment, when there is nothing to show that the optional right had been waived. Where there is an optional right given to enforce payment of money, such right may be waived; but when it is not waived, or when there is nothing to shew that it has been waived, limitation would run from the date when the right accrues. This is what this Court held in Bir Narain Panda v. Darpa Narain Prodhan (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 74), and not, as the judgment in Shankar Prasad v. Jalpa Prasad puts it, "that the decree-holder on the happening of a default was bound to execute the decree once and for all."

The second case cited for the appellant Hanmantram Sadhuram v. Bowles (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 561) goes against him rather than in his favour. The learned Judge who decided that case accepted as correct the observation of Lord DENMAN, Chief Justice, in Hemp v. Garland (4 Q. B., 519) "that if he (the plaintiff) chose to wait till all [285] the instalments become due no doubt he might do so, but that which was optional on the part of the plaintiff would not affect the right of the defendant, who might well consider the action as accruing from the time the plaintiff had a right to maintain it," and the only ground upon which he held that the suit was not barred was that the language of the bond shewed that in case of default in payment of one instalment the whole amount should become due only if a demand for such amount was made, and the suit was brought within the time allowed by law from the date of the demand.

In the case of Juggut Mohinee Dossee v. Monohur Koonwar (25 W. R., 278) cited for the respondents, MITTER, J., observed that the principle indicated in article 75 of the second Schedule of Act IX of 1871 might be adopted in determining "when the money sued for becomes due" within the meaning of article 132; but the learned Judge himself added that it was not necessary to express any decided opinion upon the point.

The other cases cited by the learned Vakil for the respondents relate either to execution of decrees for moneys payable by instalments, or to suits on instalment bonds in which the provision for the payment of the whole upon default in the payment of an instalment is an unqualified one, and is not left to be enforced at the option of the creditor, and they do not, after what has been said above, require any detailed examination.

Confining our attention then to the question for determination in this case, namely, when did the money sued for become due within the meaning of article 132 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, and bearing in mind that while there is no case directly in point, the balance of authority in this Court upon analogous questions relating to execution of decrees for money payable by instalments, preponderates in favour of the respondents' contention, we think we must hold that the decree passed by the Lower Appellate Court dismissing the whole suit is right. The money sued for became due according to the terms of the bond when the first default in the payment of an instalment was made, and it became due none the less because the right to enforce immediate payment was optional with the creditor. The right might have been waived if [286] the creditor chose to do so ; but he did not waive it in this case ; and there is no question of waiver raised here.

It was argued for the appellant that when it was left to the option of the creditor to enforce the provision for immediate payment of the whole, the presumption should be that the right to enforce such payment was waived until the contrary was shewn. The answer to this is that the provision being for the benefit of the creditor, the natural presumption is that the right created by it was not waived by him unless the contrary was proved. To use the words of Lord Denman in Hemp v. Garland (4 Q. B., 519) the defendant "might well consider the action as accruing from the time the plaintiff had a right to maintain it." We may add that the rule laid down in Hemp v. Garland that limitation ran from the date of the first default, notwithstanding that it was optional with the creditor to enforce payment of the whole upon such default, has been followed by the Court of Appeal recently in the case of Reeves v. Butcher (L. R., 1891, 2 Q. B., 509).

For the foregoing reasons we are of opinion that the suit has been rightly dismissed by the Lower Appellate Court, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 8th January, 1897.

Complaint—Dismissal of complaint—Revival of proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), sections 202, 203, 437—Final disposal of case—Want of jurisdiction—Conviction.

Where an original complaint is dismissed under section 203† of the Criminal Procedure Code, a fresh complaint on the same facts before the same Magistrate cannot be entertained, so long as the order of dismissal is not set aside by a competent authority. Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chundra Bhuttacharjee (I. L. R. 23 Cal., 983), followed.

ON 25th May 1896 the complainant Gour Chand Audhikari filed [287] a petition under section 426 of the Penal Code in the Court of the Sub-Divisional

* Criminal Revision No. 716 of 1896, against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Busirhat, dated 15th August 1896.

† [Sec. 203 :—The Magistrate before whom a complaint is made or to whom it has been transferred may dismiss the complaint if, after examining the complainant and considering the result of the investigation (if any) made under s. 202, there is in his judgment no sufficient ground for proceeding.]

Dismissal of complaint.

Magistrate of Busirhat, alleging that the accused had cut down and removed a gab tree standing on the complainant's land, and had thereby committed mischief. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Busirhat, after examining the complainant, directed an investigation to be made by the punchayet under section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. After the investigation had been made, the Magistrate considered the result of it and dismissed the complaint under section 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, being of opinion that the case was on the facts one of a civil nature. On the 15th August 1896 the complainant, Gour Chand Audhikari, filed in the same Magistrate's Court a fresh petition of complaint against the accused, Kamal Chandra Pal, relying on the same facts. The Magistrate thereupon revived the proceedings, and after taking evidence in the case convicted the accused of theft under section 379 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50, or in default to undergo two months' rigorous imprisonment.

The accused on 4th December 1896 moved the High Court, and a rule was granted calling upon the Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside, on the ground that it was bad in law, inasmuch as the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to revive the proceedings without an order by a competent authority under section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Babu Narendra Chundra Bose, (with him Babu Upendra Chundra Bose and Babu Surendra Chundra Bose), in support of the rule.—The Magistrate had no jurisdiction to revive the proceedings upon a complaint on the same facts, so long as the order of dismissal is not set aside by a competent authority under section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As he has done so without such order the conviction is bad in law, and ought to be set aside. Nilratan Sen v Jogesh Chundra Bhuttacharjee (I. L. R., 23 Cal, 983). Under section 437 the High Court and the Court of Sessions can only order further enquiry into a complaint which has been dismissed under section 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The case of Queen-Empress v. Puran (I. L. R., 9 All., 85) is not in point, and was distinguished in the case of Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chundra Bhuttacharjee (I. L. R , 23 Cal., 983).

[288] No one appeared to show cause.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows : —

We think that this rule must be made absolute. In doing so, we need only refer to the case of Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chundra Bhuttacharjee (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 983), in which a view, contrary to that which has been taken by the Magistrate, was adopted by this Court. The order reviving the complaint and the subsequent proceedings will be set aside, and the fine imposed upon the petitioner, if realized, will be refunded.

Witness—Cross-examination of witness called by the Court—Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 165—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 540.

Where in the course of a criminal proceeding a Magistrate himself summoned a witness and examined her under section 165 of the Evidence Act, but refused to allow the attorney who appeared for the complainant to cross-examine the witness:

Held, that the Magistrate was wrong in not allowing the complainant's attorney to cross-examine the witness when she was summoned.

Held, also, that there is nothing in section 165 debarring or disqualifying a party to a proceeding for cross-examining any witness summoned by the Court.

THE complainant in this case instituted in July 1896 criminal proceedings before the Chief Presidency Magistrate in the Town of Calcutta against his father-in-law, alleging that he had committed criminal breach of trust, and criminal misappropriation of certain ornaments entrusted to him on 2nd May 1896. The ornaments were borrowed by the accused for use by the female members of his family at a certain ceremony; he undertaking to return them within five or six days. This he did not do. In the course [289] of the hearing at the close of the complainant's cross-examination it was arranged that the accused should produce the ornaments, which was done by the daughter of the accused, who was the wife of the complainant, on 19th September 1896. On comparing the ornaments produced with those enumerated in a list belonging to the complainant, the attorney for the complainant stated that items 1, 2 and 9 were not those which had been originally made over to the accused. On this statement being made, the Chief Presidency Magistrate called Nayanmunjari Dossee, the daughter of the accused, who was also the wife of the complainant, and who had produced the ornaments, into the box and himself examined her as a witness, under section 165 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872).

She thereupon gave evidence to the Court to the effect that all the ornaments produced were those made over to her in May last, with the exception of items 6 and 10 which her husband, the complainant, had himself taken away from her about two months previous. The attorney for the complainant, at the close of the examination of Nayanmunjari Dossee by the Court, expressed a desire to cross-examine her on behalf of the complainant, but this was strenuously opposed by Counsel for the accused, and the Court declined to allow him to do so.

The Magistrate in his judgment stated that the case depended on the identity of the ornaments with those set out in the list produced, and that he was not at all prepared to hold that there was sufficiently conclusive evidence that they were not the ornaments referred to in the list produced, or that any case of dishonest misappropriation or conversion had been made out with regard to these items.

He thereupon discharged the accused.

* Criminal Revision No. 769 of 1896 made against the order passed by T. A. Pearson, Esq., Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated 25th September 1896.

The complainant on the ground, amongst others, that his case had been prejudiced by the action of the Chief Presidency Magistrate in not allowing his attorney to cross-examine the witness summoned by the Court under section 165 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), moved the High Court for a rule calling upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate to shew cause why a further inquiry should not be directed in this case, [290] and the records be sent for. On 12th January 1897 this rule came on for hearing.

Mr. Jackson (Mr. P. L. Roy and Mr. Farr with him) in support of the rule.—The Magistrate was in error in refusing to allow the complainant's attorney to cross-examine the witness Nayanmunjari Dossee, who was summoned and examined as a witness by the Court. There is nothing in section 165 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), which forbids a party to a criminal proceeding cross-examining a witness summoned by the Court. Tarini Charan Chowdhry v. Saroda Sundari Dasi [3 B. L R., A. C., 145 (158)]. The Empress v. Grish Chunder Talukdar (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 614). We were prejudiced thereby.

No cause has been shewn against this rule; but the Magistrate has submitted an explanation which we have considered. We think that under the circumstances disclosed in the affidavit, and to a great extent admitted by the Magistrate, the order of discharge ought to be set aside.

We desire to say at the same time that the Magistrate was wrong in not allowing the petitioner to cross-examine Nayanmunjari, when she was in the box. There is nothing in section 165 of the Evidence Act debarring or disqualifying a party to a proceeding from cross-examining any witness called by the Court. All that section 165 says is that a party to a proceeding should not be allowed to cross-examine a witness upon an answer given by him to a question put by the Court without the permission of such Court. In this connection, we need only direct the attention of the Magistrate to the cases of Tarini Charan Chowdhry v. Saroda Sundari Dasi [3 B. L. R., A. C., 145 (158)], and The Empress v. Grish Chunder Talukdar (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 614).

The rule will therefore be made absolute on these terms.

Sale in execution of decree—Setting aside sale—Material irregularity—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 291, 311—Evidence.

Where a debtor's property under attachment had been ordered to be sold at a fixed date, after the disposal of a certain claim thereto made under section 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but no hour had been fixed for the sale as required by section 291, and the property was sold at a very inadequate price by reason of the paucity of bidders,

Held, affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge, that there had been material irregularity causing substantial injury to the debtor; and that it is sufficient under section 311† of the Code, if the evidence, though not "direct evidence," shows that the injury was a necessary result of the irregularity complained of.

Tassaduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmed Husain (I. L. R. 21 Cal., 66 L. R., 20 I. A., 176) explained.

ON the 19th August 1893 the respondent's property was attached under an order of that date, and on the 9th September 1893 a sale proclamation was issued fixing the 20th November for the sale. On the 27th September a claim to the property was made under section 278 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the 11th November was fixed for the hearing, which, however, was postponed to the 25th November. On the 20th November, the Subordinate Judge adjourned the sale to the 25th, and ordered the property to be sold on that date after the disposal of the claim The hearing was again postponed to the 27th. The property was put up for sale on the 25th, but no bidders attended. On the 27th November the claim was rejected, and the property was sold for Rs. 200 to the appellant, who was one of only three bidders. The respondent then applied for an order setting aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity causing him [292] substantial injury; and the Subordinate Judge made the order asked for. The purchaser appealed.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Babu Srinath Das, and Babu Bidhu Bhusan Gangooly, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Ghose and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is an appeal by the auction-purchaser from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Pabna and Bogra setting aside, under section 311 of the Code of

* Appeal from Order No. 285 of 1894, against the order of Babu Srinath Pal, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Zillah Pabna, dated the 30th of April 1894.

Application to set aside sale of land on ground of irregularity.

† [Sec. 311:—The decree-holder, or any person whose immoveable property has been sold under this chapter, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting it;

but no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity.]

Civil Procedure, a sale of certain property on the ground of material irregularities in publishing and conducting it, by reason of which the judgment-debtors have sustained substantial injury.

The facts are shortly as follows: The property in question was attached by an order of the 19th August 1893, and on the 9th September following a proclamation of sale was issued fixing the 20th November for the sale. Meantime, on the 27th September 1893, Giribala, a step sister of one of the judgment-debtors, preferred a claim to the property under section 278 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the 11th November was fixed for hearing the same. On that date, the hearing was postponed to the 25th November, and as the property could not be sold until the disposal of the claim case, the Subordinate Judge on the 20th November adjourned the sale to the 25th and ordered the property to be sold on that date after the disposal of the claim case. On the 25th November, the claim case was again postponed to the 27th, and notwithstanding this, the property was put up for sale on the 25th, but on the report of the Nazir that no intending purchasers were present the sale was also postponed to the 27th. On that date, the claim of Giribala was rejected, and the property was then sold for Rs. 200 to Nityanand Sarkar, am-mukhtear on behalf of Surno Moyee Debi, the present appellant.

On these facts, which are fully established by the evidence, the Subordinate Judge has held, and we think rightly held, that there were material irregularities in connection with the sale. Both on the 20th November, when the sale was postponed to the 25th,[293] and on the 25th when it was again postponed to the 27th, no hour was fixed for the sale as required by section 291 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the order passed on each date that the sale would take place after the disposal of the claim case was of such a vague and indefinite character that intending bidders could not possibly have known when and at what time the sale would actually take place, and consequently there were no bidders present on the 25th November, and there were only three bidders on the 27th. The property was then sold for Rs. 200, whereas the evidence of one of the decree-holder's witnesses, Koilash Ghose, shows that a smaller share of 16¼ gds. had been previously sold for Rs. 4,000. The Subordinate Judge has accordingly found that the judgment-debtor has sustained substantial injury by the low price which the property fetched, and he thinks that this was no doubt due to the irregularities we have referred to, and in this view he has set aside the sale. Before us, the learned Vakil for the appellant has contended that inasmuch as there is no direct evidence connecting the material irregularities with the injury as cause and effect, the Subordinate Judge was wrong in setting aside the sale; and in support of this contention he has relied on the case of Tassaduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 66: L. R., 20 I. A., 176) which is the latest authority bearing upon this particular subject. He has also referred to the following cases: Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 656: L. R., 10 I. A., 25); Arunachellam Chetti v. Arunachellam Chetti (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 19: L. R., 15 I. A., 171); Gur Buksh Lall v. Jawahir Singh (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 599): and Jagan Nath v. Makund Prasad (I. L. R., 18 All., 37).

The case of Tassaduk Rasul Khan (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 66: L. R., 20 I. A., 176) is a decision of the Privy Council on appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The Judicial Commissioner set aside the sale on the ground that it was a nullity, because the provisions of section 290 of the Civil Procedure Code had not been obeyed. He was further of opinion that, to set aside a sale under such circumstances, it was not necessary for the objectors to prove substantial injury, but that substantial injury might be [294] inferred to have resulted, as the law had not been complied with. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in reversing the order of the Judicial Commissioner observed as follows: "It was contended on the part of the respondents that the non-compliance with the interval of thirty days between proclamation and sale made the sale a nullity. Their Lordships cannot accede to that contention. The proceeding in this case was brought by the respondents under section 311, which deals with material irregularity. The non-compliance with the provisions for posting was a material irregularity. But in the cases of Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh, and Arunachellam Chetti v. Arunachellam Chetti it was held that in all cases of irregularity under section 311 evidence must be given of substantial injury having resulted. In the present case, the decree-holder failed to comply with the full requirements of section 290, but both on principle and authority their Lordships are of opinion that the case must be treated, as the respondents themselves treated it, as one of material irregularity to be redressed pursuant to the provisions of section 311, and in the application of that section it was incumbent on the respondents to have proved that they sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity. They gave no such evidence, and it would be extremely improbable that injury could have happened from the non-compliance with the strict letter of section 290. Their Lordships cannot accept the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner, that loss is to be inferred from the mere fact that a sale was bad without full compliance with the provisions of section 290. The section clearly contemplates direct evidence on the subject."

The learned Vakil for the appellant has laid great stress on the words "direct evidence" used by their Lordships in the concluding paragraph of the passage we have cited, and he has argued that what their Lordships meant was that direct evidence, and direct evidence only, must be given in proof of substantial injury having resulted from a material irregularity. We have given the matter our careful consideration, and we think that it is very doubtful whether their Lordships by using these words intended to restrict the mode of proof connecting a material irregularity with substantial injury to evidence of a particular description or to vary the rule laid down in the cases of Mac- [295]naghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (I.L.R., 9 Cal., 656; L.R., 10 I.A., 25) and Arunachellam Chetti v. Arunachellam Chetti (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 19; L.R., 15 I. A., 171) that in all cases of irregularity under section 311 evidence must be given of substantial injury having resulted from the irregularity. We are rather inclined to think that what their Lordships intended to say by using the words "direct evidence" was that there must be evidence shewing that substantial injury was the necessary result of the irregularity complained of. We observe that the present case is somewhat different from the case of Tassaduk Rasul Khan. In that case, as we understand the report, there was no evidence of substantial injury, while in the present case substantial injury is proved by the very inadequate price at which the property was sold. No doubt, there is no direct evidence in the strict sense of the term that the inadequate price was caused by the irregularity, still there is evidence from which we think the inference necessarily arises that the irrregularity was the cause of the injury. The uncertainty as to when and at what particular hour the sale would be held was sufficient to prevent intending purchasers from being present on the 25th November; and on the 27th when the property was put up and sold only three bidders attended; and to the paucity of bidders, we think, may reasonably be ascribed the very low price the property fetched. Under all these circumstances we find it impossible to avoid the conclusion that the substantial injury sustained by the judgment-debtors was the necessary consequence of the irregularities, and in this view we think that the order of the Subordinate Judge is right and should be affirmed.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that on a previous occasion the property had been sold at a low price, and that the knowledge that a claim had been made to the property cast a cloud over the title of the judgment-debtors, and so materially affected the bids; but even admitting the soundness of this argument, we are unable to hold that for these reasons alone the property was sold for a price so much below its market value.

We think therefore that this appeal fails, and must be dismissed. We make no order as to costs.

H. W. Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and Tenant —Disturbance, by Landlord, of peaceable possession—Suspension and apportionment of Rent.

Where the act of a landlord is not a mere trespass, but something of a graver character, interfering substantially with the enjoyment, by the tenant, of the demised property, the tenant is entitled to a suspension of rent during such interference, even though there may not be actual eviction.

If such interference be committed in respect of even of a portion of the property, there should be no apportionment of rent where the whole rent is equally chargeable upon every part of the land demised.

But if the interference is in respect of only a certain portion of the demised property, the rent for which is separately assessed, there should be apportionment.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Promothonath Sen for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babu Digumber Chatterjee and Babu Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case and the arguments adduced appear sufficiently from the judgment of the Court (Ghose and Hill, JJ.), which was as follows :--

These two appeals arise out of two suits for rent.

The plaintiff in both these cases is the zemindar of Pergunnah Haveli, within which the properties (Lot Saefgunge and Lot Mirzapore) in respect of which rent is claimed are situate. Both these properties had been leased to certain individuals, described as the Iranees, in patni under two different leases.

* Appeals from Original Decrees Nos. 341 and 342 of 1894 against the decrees of H. F. Matthews, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Purneah, dated the 26th of September 1894.

In execution of a decree upon a mortgage bond executed by the Iranees, the plaintiffs purchased the two patnis and some other properties on the 2nd February 1891 (the sale being confirmed on the 16th April 1891, 21st Magh 1298 mulki), and obtained symbolical possession in November 1891. The principal defendant in these two suits, Babu Chutterput Singh, had purchased the same properties in execution of another decree, upon an earlier mortgage [297] against the Iranees on the 8th March 1890, and in due course obtained possession through the Court.

It appears that shortly after the plaintiff was put into formal possession of the two patnis and the other properties, he attempted to realize rent, and thus to obtain actual possession; and in this he was opposed by Chutterput, the result being the institution of a proceeding by the Magistrate under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the 12th September 1892. The Magistrate, after enquiry, found that Chutterput was in possession, and accordingly confirmed him in such possession on the 13th March 1893 (1st Choit 1300 mulki).

The present suits were brought on the 21st September 1893, and they are for recovery of rent on account of the two patnis Saefgunge and Mirzapore, for the years 1298, 1299 and 1300 mulki after allowing credit to the defendant Chutterput for certain sums received from him. Both the Iranees and Chutterput Singh were made defendants; though the rents were claimed against the latter only, upon the ground, that he was in possession of the patnis.

Both the suits have been dismissed by the Court below upon the ground that in consequence of disputes between the two parties as to the ownership of the properties leading to violent disturbances and breaches of the peace, the defendant Chutterput could not be regarded as having been in undisturbed possession of the two patnis during the term for which the rents are claimed; that the plaintiff interfered with the peaceful possession and collection of rent by the defendant, and himself realized some rent from the raiyats; that he (the plaintiff) had treated the defendant as a trespasser and cannot now be allowed to treat him as a tenant, and that the plaintiff's proper remedy is not a suit for rent but for damages or mesne profits.

Against this decree, the plaintiff has preferred the two appeals now before us. The appeal No. 341 relates to Saefgunge, and the other appeal 342 to Mirzapore.

It seems to us that the two cases do not stand upon the same footing, as erroneously supposed by the District Judge. He has mixed up the facts of the two cases and treated them as one, [298] and it is owing to this that he has fallen into a serious error, as will be presently shown, as regards one of the cases. No doubt, there are some matters common to both the cases, which have already been noticed; but there are some distinctive features which differentiate the two cases.

We propose therefore to deal with the cases separately.

But before we do so, it would be just as well to refer to one point which has been raised before us by the learned Vakil for the defendant-respondent in both the appeals. It is this: that the plaintiff does not treat the defendant as the rightful patnidar, and yet sues him for rent upon the simple ground that he is in possession of the patnis, and therefore the plaintiff has no cause of action. It is unnecessary to discuss this point, because the plaintiff has put in a petition in both the cases asking that the plaints be amended so as to make it clearly appear that the defendant is the real patnidar of the two properties in respect of which the rent has been claimed, and upon this being done the learned Vakil for the defendant has waived the point.

Now first as to the appeal No. 341.

It appears upon the evidence that Lot Saefgunge consists of 19 mouzahs, of which only one mouzah, Luchmipore, was held in khas possession, the rest being held by darpatnidars. The annual rent roll of the whole property is about Rs 13,000, and the gross collection of Luchmipore is only Rs. 875. It has no doubt been said generally by some of the witnesses that there was a great deal of dispute, and many cases arose between the parties in consequence of the interference of Rai Dhunput Singh with the collection of rent by Chutterput Singh in the Purwaha estate (Saefgunge being a part thereof), and the proceeding before the Magistrate under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure embraced among several other properties Saefgunge as well; but so far as any specific evidence is to be found bearing upon the question of actual interference with the possession of that property, it appears that there was no case either civil or criminal (see the evidence of the witness Mahabeer). The rent from the darpatnidars was realized by Chutterput; but the witness Korbanally, the patwari called by the defendant, says that both in the years 1299 and 1300 Chutterput's men could not [299] collect more than Rs. 150 from Luchmipore owing to the interference of Dhunput, and the collection made by him. The witness however does not produce his collection papers shewing what he really collected, and he admits that he has not given credit to the raiyats for what they paid to Dhunput Singh. We think that the evidence, so far as it refers to Lot Saefgunge, is wholly insufficient to shew that there was any real, if any, interference on the part of Dhunput Singh with the possession of the patnidar, so that he is not in justice entitled to recover the rent claimed. It seems to us to be clear, upon an examination of the evidence, that the ground upon which the District Judge has disallowed the claim of the plaintiff has no application to this case. There is no other defence to this action except that which was accepted by the District Judge. And it follows, therefore, that the plaintiff should obtain a decree for the rent claimed in this case. The decree of the Court below will accordingly be reversed and this appeal decreed with costs.

Regular Appeal No. 342 :—

We now proceed to deal with the other appeal (342), which relates to Lot Mirzapore, and which we think stands upon a somewhat different footing. In Lot Mirzapore, several of the mouzahs have also been let in darpatni, and three mouzahs only are held khas. There is no evidence as to any interference by Dhunput with the collection of rent in one of these three mouzahs, Tangha Majna; but there is evidence shewing such interference in respect of the other two mouzahs, Bishenpore and Purmanandpur. The evidence discloses that after the plaintiff had obtained symbolical possession in November 1891, there was not only the proceeding before the Magistrate under section 145 in regard to the possession of Mirzapore, but Dhunput Singh's tehsildars collected some rent from some of the raiyats of the said two mouzahs between Aughrain 1299 and Aughrain 1300 mulki. The rents actually collected appear to be small, but still it is impossible to say that there was not an active interference on the part of Dhunput with the enjoyment of possession by Chutterput, so far as those two mouzahs are concerned. Then we have the fact that Dhunput Singh, so soon as he made his purchase, asserted his title to the whole of Mirzapore and the other properties [300] comprised in the Purwaha estate, and appointed an European Manager and a large number of burkandazes evidently with the object of overawing the raiyats of the whole estate and compelling them to pay their rents to him. And the result was the institution of several criminal cases though no doubt there is no evidence of any such case in connection with Mirzapore itself. It may be possible that Chutterput had no quiet enjoyment of any of the properties until his possession was formally confirmed by the Magistrate on the 13th March 1893 : but of this there is no distinct evidence, and we find Chutterput asserting before the Magistrate that he was in possession of the whole of the properties.

Upon these facts, two questions arise: (1) whether there was an eviction of the tenant by the act of the landlord so that the rent which would otherwise be due to the latter should be suspended during the period of such eviction ; (2) whether the rent due upon the Lot Mirzapore may be apportioned, and a proportionate rent allowed to the landlord in respect of such portion of the property as to which there was no interference proved on his part.

In the case of Upton v. Townend [17 C. B. 30 (64)] JERVIS, C.J., with reference to the question what constitutes eviction, expressed himself as follows:—

"It is extremely difficult at the present day to define with technical accuracy what is an eviction. Latterly, the word has been used to denote that which formerly it was not intended to express. In the language of pleading, the party evicted was said to be expelled, amoved, and put out. The word 'eviction'—from evincere, to evict, to disposses by a judicial course—was formerly used to denote an expulsion by the assertion of a title paramount, and by process of law. But that sort of eviction is not necessary to constitute a suspension of the rent, because it is now well settled that, if the tenant loses the benefit of the enjoyment of any portion of the demised premises by the act of the landlord, the rent is thereby suspended. The term 'eviction' is now popularly applied to every class of expulsion or amotion. Getting rid thus of the old notion of eviction, I think it may now be [301] taken to mean this—not a mere trespass and nothing more, but something of a grave and permanent character done by the landlord with the intention of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the demised premises. If that may in law amount to an eviction, the jury would very naturally cut the knot by finding whether or not the act done by the landlord is of that character and done with that intention."

In Edge v. Boileau (L. R. 16 Q. B. D., 117) where there was a covenant on the part of the lessor for quiet enjoyment, and it appeared that he had sent a notice to the sub-tenants desiring them not to pay their rents to the lessee, but the lessor himself, and threatened them with legal proceedings in default of non-compliance with such notice, it was held that this was a substantial disturbance of the lessee's quiet enjoyment of the property demised, and that the lessee was entitled to sue for damages for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment.

In Kadumbinee Dossia v. Kasheenauth Biswas (13 W. R., 338) where the tenant defendant was dispossessed of the land leased to him, by a third party to whom the landlord (plaintiff) had given a lease of the same land, and assisted him in the dispossession, it was held that the landlord was precluded from suing the tenant for rent during the period of such dispossession, though the latter had recovered a decree for possession with mesne profits.

In Kristo Soondur Sandyal v. Chunder Nath Roy (15 W. R., 230) the landlord, though he had not actually ejected the lessee (a middleman), had interfered in the collection of rents, and encouraged the raiyats to deposit their rents with him as superior landlord, and collected their dakhilas with a view to ascertain how far the arrears due from the lessee were due to the non-payment of rent by the raiyats, the Court held that the landlord was not entitled to recover the rent sued for; and BAYLEY, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court observed as follows:—

"Now the real right of the zemindar to receive rents from the farmers depends upon his securing to the latter quiet possession, and giving him proper and lawful means of realizing rents from the raiyats. In the present case, it is clear from the [302] findings of the Lower Appellate Court, as quoted above, that the quiet possession and proper and legal means of collecting rents have been directly interfered with."

On the subject of eviction and apportionment of rent, Gilbert in his book on Rents, on p. 178, says as follows:—

"But if the lessor takes a lease of part of the land, or enters wrongfully into part, there are variety of opinions whether the entire rent shall not be suspended during the continuance of such lease or tortious entry. Some have held that there shall be no apportionment in either case, but that the whole should be suspended; for this reason, I suppose, because, by the demise, every part of the land was equally chargeable with the whole rent; and therefore the lessor shall not by his own act discharge any part from the burden during the continuance of such contract. This indeed, may be a good reason why the whole rent service shall be suspended if the lord or lessor disseises or ousts his tenant or lessee of any part of the land; because this is a wrongful act to which the tenant consented not, and, if it were not attended with a total suspension of the rent until he makes restitution of the land, it would be in the power of the lord or lessor to resume any part of the land against his own engagement and contract; and so by taking that which lies most commodious for the tenant, render the remainder in effect useless, or put him to expense and trouble to restore himself to such part by course of law. Therefore to prevent these inconveniences, and that no man might be encouraged to injure or disturb his tenant in his possession, when, by the policy of the feudal law, he ought to protect him and defend him, these resolutions have been and so the law is at this day, that such disseisin or tortious entry suspends the whole rent, and the lessee or tenant is discharged from the payment of any part of it till he be restored to the whole possession."

In Neale v Mackenzie [1 M. & W., 747 (763)], where a lessee to whom one hundred acres of land had been demised, found upon his entry that eight of the acres were in the possession of another party under a prior lease from the landlord, and was thus kept out of possession therefrom, and where, notwithstanding this, the landlord dis-[303] trained the goods of the lessee for the whole rent due upon the lease, and the lessee sued for damages on account of such distraint, Lord DENMAN, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, among other matters, with reference to the question of apportionment of rent, observed as follows:—

"In the case before the Court, which is not the case of a demise by indenture, the rent is reserved in respect of all the land professed to be demised and to be issuing out of the whole and every part thereof; and as the plaintiff, as to a portion of the land comprised in the demise (which might be great or small as far as the principle is concerned) has taken no interest, and had no enjoyment and is not bound by any estoppel, we are of opinion that the distress made by the defendant is not justifiable, either in respect to the whole rent reserved or any portion of it."

In the case of Gopanund Jha v. Lalla Gobind Pershad (12 W. R., 109 where a tenant sued for rent had been evicted from a portion of the land) demised by a title paramount, PEACOCK, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, thus expressed himself :—

"According to the English law 'if the lands demised be evicted from the tenant, or recovered by a title paramount, the lessee is discharged from the payment of the rent from the time of such eviction,' and if he is evicted from part, the rent is to be diminished in proportion to the land evicted. It is laid down in Bacon's Abridgment, Tit. Rent (M) 'where a lessor enters forcibly into part of the land, there are variety of opinions whether the entire rent shall not be suspended during the continuance of such tortious entry, and it seems to be the better opinion and the settled law at this day, that the tenant is discharged from the payment of the whole rent till he be restored to the whole possession, that no man may be encouraged to injure or disturb his tenant in his possession, whom by the policy of the law he ought to protect and defend :' and it has been held that when a lessee is evicted by title paramount to that of his lessor, an apportionment of rent may take place in an action brought for the rent. It appears to me that the onus is on the lessor, who claims to be entitled to an apportionment to show what is the fair rate of the lands out of which the tenant was not evicted."

The principles to be gathered from these cases are, first, that [304] where the act of the landlord is not a mere trespass, but something of a grave character interfering substantially with the enjoyment by the tenant of the property demised to him, there is a suspension of rent during such interference, though there may not be an actual eviction. And, second, that if such interference be in respect of even a portion of the property, there should be no apportionment of the rent, the whole rent being equally chargeable upon every part of the land demised.

Some other cases upon the same subject were quoted before us by the learned Vakil for the appellant, but they do not go any further than this, that though by entry upon the land demised the rent is suspended, yet where there is no eviction but a mere trespass, there is no suspension of rent, and that the mere discontinuance of rent by the raiyats does not amount to dispossession [see Hunt v. Cope (1 Cowp., 242), Tarini Mohun Mozumdar v. Gunga Prosad Chuckerbutty (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 649), Obhoya Charan Bhooia v. Koilash Chunder Dey (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 751), and Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, p. 425].

We think that, in the circumstances of this case, the act or acts of the landlord were not mere acts of trespass, but something of a graver character, substantially interfering with and disturbing the enjoyment and possession of the property by the patnidar, and that there ought to be a suspension of rent during the period of such interference.

The period during which the landlord is not entitled in our judgment to recover rent is from Aughrain 1299 to Aughrain 1300 mulki ; and we think that the rents which fell due during this interval of time, according to the kists laid down in the patni lease should, subject to what we shall presently say with regard to apportionment, be disallowed.

As to the question whether there should be an apportionment of rent in this case (the actual interference by the landlord being only with respect to two of the several mouzahs constituting the patni), it appears that, though the whole patni rent may be taken upon the terms of the patni grant to be reserved upon every part of the land comprised in the patni, so that in default of payment by the patnidar of any part of the rent, the [305] whole patni is liable to be brought to sale, yet the rent payable for each of the mouzahs was separately assessed. The true principle upon which an apportionment is not ordinarily allowed is, we apprehend, that every part of the property demised being equally chargeable with the whole rent, it is not possible to determine what should be the proper apportionment when the landlord interferes with the possession of the tenant with respect to a part only, and that the landlord should not be permitted to resume any part of the land demised which may be most advantageous to him. In the present case, so far as the various mouzahs which were let out in darpatni are concerned, the collection of rent by the plaintiff could have been only from the darpatnidars and not from the raiyats, and it appears upon the evidence that the darpatnis were not interfered with, nor was there any interference in respect of one of the three khas mouzahs. In this view of the matter, and as the rents payable on account of the two mouzahs Bishenpore and Parmanandpore (also called Purmanpore in some of the documents) as to which there was an interference by the landlord are ascertainable from the patni lease, we think that the plaintiff is entitled to recover so much of the rent reserved by the patni lease as is assignable upon the property other than the two mouzahs Bishenpore and Parmanandpore. The rent in respect of these two mouzahs should be suspended and disallowed during the period already referred to.

It was, however, contended before us that if the landlord is entitled in this case to an apportionment of rent the tenant may well claim an equitable set-off for damage caused to him by reason of the unjust interference by the landlord. It is impossible in this case to determine what may be the amount of damage which the defendant sustained in respect of the two khas mouzahs, and what, having regard to the acts and conduct of the landlord generally in regard to the whole Purwaha estate, is the extent of equitable set-off which should be allowed to him. And we think that the question, what may be the extent of damage sustained by the defendant, should be left to be determined in a separate action framed for that purpose.

Upon these grounds, we disallow the plaintiff the rents payable for the two khas mouzahs Bishenpore and Parmanandpore, [306] and which fell due according to the patni lease between Aughrain 1299 and Aughrain 1300 mulki, and save and except this, allow the rest of the claim.

In the circumstances of the case, we think that each party should bear his own costs both in this and the lower Court.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

The Secretary of State for India in Council............Defendant No. 1

versus

Dip Chand Poddar and others............Plaintiffs.*

Railways Act (IX of 1890), section 77—Notice of suit—Agent of Manager—Traffic Superintendent—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 147, 149—Practice—Pleadings.

The Traffic Superintendent is not the Manager's agent and notice to him is not notice to the Railway Administration within section 77† of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890).

Under section 77 of the Indian Railways Act it is not necessary for the defendant to plead want of notice of action in order to avail himself of it, but he may raise the objection at the hearing.

THE plaintiffs brought this suit against the Secretary of State for India as the Proprietor of the Eastern Bengal State Railway, and against the Bengal Central Flotilla Company, for compensation for goods lost while being conveyed from Calcutta to Noakhali. The plaintiffs alleged that six bales of cotton goods were consigned to them on the 8th of June 1893, and that only five of these were delivered; the other bale was detained at Khulna, where goods are transhipped from the Bengal Central Railway to the steamers of the Bengal Central Flotilla Company, and did not reach Noakhali till the end of September, when the covering was torn and the contents so damaged as to be unsaleable, and the plaintiffs refused to take delivery.

For the Secretary of State it was pleaded that he was not liable, as there was no negligence shown; that the bale was badly packed, and when weighed at Khulna was found to be in excess of [307] the weight stated by the consignor; that the bale had been detained at Khulna because it was found on arrival there to be torn; that while in the godowns at Khulna some of its contents had been stolen and that some of the stolen clothes had been recovered, and the bale sent on to Noakhali for delivery to the plaintiffs. The price of the goods as claimed was also disputed. The Flotilla Company denied all liability, as they were ready to deliver the goods in the same condition as when received. The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree for the value of the goods as claimed. The Secretary of State appealed to the Judge of Noakhali, who dismissed the appeal.

Notification of claims to refunds of overcharges and to compensation for losses.

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ, was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs (respondents) against the Secretary of State for India and the Bengal Central Flotilla Company for compensation for the loss of goods delivered for carriage to the Eastern Bengal State Railway and the Flotilla Company. The plaintiffs allege that they sent notices of demand to the Traffic Superintendent and to the District Collector before the institution of the suit. The defence was denial of liability on the ground that there was no negligence on the part of the defendants. A further objection, not taken in the written statement, was urged on behalf of the Secretary of State at the time of argument, that the claim for compensation was untenable under section 77 of the Indian Railway Act (IX of 1890) for want of notice to the Railway Administration.

The first Court overruled the objection in bar and found for the plaintiffs on the merits, and give them a decree for a certain amount, and that decree has been affirmed on appeal by the District Judge.

In second appeal it is urged on behalf of the Secretary of State, first, that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that the Traffic Superintendent should be considered as the Manager's agent, and that the notice to him was a sufficient compliance with [308] section 77 of the Railways Act ; and, secondly, that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in giving the plaintiffs a decree for the amount claimed when there is no evidence to prove that that was the value of the goods damaged.

Upon the second point it is necessary to say only this, that the evidence of the plaintiffs' agent shows that the amount claimed is the true value of the goods, and that evidence has been considered sufficient by the Lower Appellate Court. The second contention of the appellant must therefore fail.

The first contention urged for the appellant is however in our opinion correct. Section 77 of the Indian Railways Act requires that in a case like this a notice of the claim should be preferred to the Railway Administration within six months from the date of the delivery of the goods, and by section 3 of the Act " Railway Administration " in the case of a State Railway is defined to mean the Manager, and to include the Government. The notice that was given to the Government was not served within six months from the date of delivery of the goods ; and the notice which was served within six months was a notice not to the Manager but to the Traffic Superintendent ; and though there is nothing to show that the notice, though addressed to the Traffic Superintendent, reached the manager, within six months from the date of delivery of the goods, the Lower Appellate Court holds the notice to be sufficient, because it is of opinion that the Traffic Superintendent should be considered as the Manager's agent in such matters. We think the Court below is wrong in law in taking this view.

The learned Vakil for the respondents argued in support of the decree of the Court below that, though the notice served in this case might not have been shown to be sufficient under the law, the plaintiffs were not bound to prove the service of any notice, want of notice not having been pleaded in defence ; and in support of this argument the cases of Davey v. Warne (14 M.&. W., 199), Smith v. Pritchard (2 C. & K., 699), and certain other English cases, were relied upon. We are of opinion that this argument cannot succeed, regard being had to the terms of section 77 of the Railways Act and to the provisions of sections 147 and 149 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which [309] authorize the Court to frame issues from certain materials besides the pleadings and to amend the issues at any stage of the case. The objection on the ground of absence of notice, though not taken in the written statement, was raised in argument, and the objection was entertained and disposed of, though erroneously, by the Courts below. It cannot therefore be thrown out on the ground that it was not specially pleaded.

But though we hold that the objection on the ground of want of notice cannot be thrown out altogether, we are of opinion that as it was not taken in the written statement and was urged only in argument, the plaintiffs are entitled to have an opportunity of meeting it. In our opinion it will be sufficiently met if it is shewn that the notice served on the Traffic Superintendent reached the Manager within six months from the date of delivery of the goods.

The case must therefore go back to the first Court, in order that it may be disposed of after determination of the point indicated above. Both parties will be at liberty to adduce evidence upon the point. Costs will abide the result.

As the appeal is only on behalf of defendant No. 1, and the ground upon which the appeal succeeds relates only to the liability of defendant No. 1, the decrees of the Courts below as against defendant No. 2 will stand.

F. K. D. Appeal allowed and case remanded.

At the separation of members of a joint family governed by the Benares School of Hindu Law, in 1885, the unrealized debts of the family were left undivided. The debts were subsequently realized by some of the members of the separated family. In a suit brought by the other members in 1893 (inter alia) to recover their shares in the debts so realized.

THE facts of this case are fully set forth in the judgment of the High Court. The present report relates only to a portion of the claim, viz., debts forming items Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6 of Schedule IV of the plaint filed in the case, which were realized by the defendants more than three years before the institution of the present suit. The Subordinate Judge held that article 127, Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), governed the case, and the plaintiffs' claim to their share in these realizations was not barred by limitation.

R , 11 Bom., 216) the ruling was that the suit was barred, and there was no decision on the present question.

The judgment of the High Court (Beverley and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows :—

These appeals arise out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs under the following circumstances. The plaintiffs and defendants were at one time members of a joint Hindu family subject to the Mitakshara law. According to the plaintiffs' case a separation took place between them in the year 1293 (1886), and the bulk of the immoveable property, together with ornaments, etc., was divided among the different members ; but it is alleged by the plaintiffs that two elephants, together with debts payable to the joint family upon bonds and decrees standing in the names of the different members, and certain pieces of land, were left joint. The principal defendant in the case (defendant No. 1) was to realize the major portion of these bond and decretal debts. The plaintiffs allege in their plaint that he has realized the amounts covered by the bonds and decrees which stood in his name, but has refused to give them their shares in the same ; that as regards the elephants he has sold one and appropriated the price thereof to his own use, and was claiming the other as his own. They further allege that they on their part had realized a certain debt on behalf of themselves and others entitled to it, and were willing to deposit the amount in Court, and that the defendant Hemraj had similarly realized the debts which stood in his name and divided the same rateably among the persons entitled. Upon these allegations the plaintiff sued to obtain partition of the lands which were said to have been left joint, for a declaration that the debts realized by the defendant No. 1 were on behalf of all the persons who had formed members of the joint family, and for a decree for their share in the same and in the price of the elephant sold by Banoo Tewary. They also asked for a declaration that the elephant in his possession belonged to all the parties, and for a [312] direction that it may be sold and the proceeds divided rateably. The defendants other than Banoo Tewary and Jhinga Tewary supported the plaintiffs' allegations. The defendant Hemraj expressed his willingness to pay to Banoo Tewary his share in the money which he (Hemraj) had realized, and they all asked that their share in the bond and decretal debts might be decreed in their favour.

The defendant No. 1 alleged that the family had separated in 1285 (1878) and not in 1293 (1886), and that nothing was left joint : that in fact all the properties possessed by the joint family had been divided, that the bond and decretal debts which he had realized belonged to him exclusively, and that nobody else had any interest in them. He denied the existence of two elephants at any particular time, and claimed the one in his possession as his own property acquired by his money. And he pleaded that so far as the debts were concerned the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation.

The defendant Jhinga set up a totally different case. He alleged that the family had never separated, and claimed a division of all the properties.

Upon these allegations of fact several issues were framed in the lower Court, but it is unnecessary to refer to them particularly. As a matter of fact it appeared in the course of the trial that the lands which were said to have been left joint had been subsequently partitioned either by the Collector or privately, and that the parties were in separate possession of their respective shares. The Subordinate Judge accordingly gave the plaintiffs a declaration of their rights in some of the lands mentioned in Schedule II, and as regards the others he dismissed their suit; but he found that the story of the defendant that a complete partition had taken place in 1285 was untrue. He held upon the evidence that the family had actually separated in 1293 when the bulk of the landed property was partitioned as alleged by the plaintiffs, but the debts owing to the family not being ripe for realization were left outstanding to be divided when realized. He also found that the existing elephant was joint property, and he accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of their one-fifth share in the amounts realized by the defendant No. 1, and also gave a declaration in respect of their right to a one-fifth share in the elephant.

[313] From this decree there are three appeals, viz., one by Jhinga, another by defendant No. 1, and the third by way of cross-appeal by the plaintiffs in respect of the price of the elephant appropriated by Banoo Tewary.

They also ask for a direction that the existing elephant may be sold and the proceeds distributed among the parties entitled.

As regards Jhinga's appeal we may say at once that we entirely agree with the Subordinate Judge that there is absolutely no evidence excepting his own discredited statements in support of his story, and his own conduct, as proved by the documents executed by him, contradicts his testimony. His appeal will accordingly be dismissed with costs.

On behalf of the defendant No. 1 two contentions have been raised in this Court—(1) that the lower Court is wrong in holding that separation took place in 1293 and not in 1285; and (2) that the lower Court is wrong in overruling the plea of limitation raised by the defendant.

On the question of partition we are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge is right in his conclusion that the family separated in 1293 and not in 1285. The evidence of the defendant himself leaves no room for doubt that his story of a separation in 1285 is false. He admits that after 1285 various properties were purchased in his father's name, which were divided among the different co-sharers. He admits that the shares so given were of considerable value, amounting to twelve or thirteen thousand rupees, and the sole explanation he furnishes is that he gave the shares to the other parties out of favour. We agree with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the explanation given by the defendant is absolutely false, and that the only ground upon which his action can be explained is that those persons to whom the shares were given were entitled to them, and that no separation had taken place in 1285 as alleged by him. We think that the other circumstances referred to by the Subordinate Judge also tend to the same conclusion.

Mr. Gregory relied upon two documents to prove separation in 1285.

As regards the mukhtarnamah given by the members of the [314] family to the father of the defendant it is clear that it was given for the purpose of enabling him to transact the business of the family. There were many transactions in the separate names of the different members and it was clearly necessary for one of them to have a mukhtarnamah from the others in order to be able to transact the business of the family. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that the mukhtarnamah does not establish separation. The sale of the decree by Budhoo Tewary in favour of Udho Tewary is proved, as the Subordinate Judge points out, to be an unreal transaction made for a certain purpose stated by the pleader, Umes Baboo. We agree therefore with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the partition was in Assar 1293.

The main point, however, turns upon the question of limitation.

Mr. Gregory for the defendant urged that the items Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6 in pages 28 and 29 of the Paper Book were barred by the Statute of Limitation, as those sums were realized beyond three years from date of suit. The Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs' suit comes under article 127 of the Limitation Act Mr Gregory's contention is that it is governed by article 62. Article 127 of the Limitation Act runs as follows: "In a suit by a person excluded from joint family property to enforce a right to a share therein the period of limitation is twelve years from the time when the exclusion becomes known to him." The only case directly in point is Thakur Prasad v. Partab (I. L. R., 6 All., 442) and although there was no argument in that case, it seems to us that the reasoning of the District Judge which was adopted by the High Court is deserving of consideration. Article 127 presupposes the existence of a joint family, and proceeding upon the hypothesis that there is a joint family it provides that when any member of such joint family is excluded from the enjoyment of the joint property or any portion thereof, the period of limitation shall run from the date when the exclusion comes to his knowledge. But when there has been a disruption of the status of jointness, it is difficult to conceive that it could have been the intention of the Legislature that the same provision should apply. The case of the plaintiffs is, that everything was divided, the family became separate, and only those debts were left undivided [315] which were not ripe for realization. They were to be divided of course when they were realized In such a state of circumstances it does not appear to us that article 127 would apply. The person or persons in whose names the debts stood would not be trustees for the other separated members, and if they realized the debts and withheld payment to the others the claim of those who were thus deprived of their shares in the money can only be treated as coming under article 62 of the Limitation Act. That article provides as follows: "In a suit for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiffs' use, the period of limitation shall be 'three years' from the time when the money is received." The defendant was acting on behalf of the other co-sharers merely as their agent in the realization of their shares in these moneys, and we think therefore that the case is subject to three years' limitation, and that the claim of the plaintiffs, so far as the items Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6 are concerned, is barred inasmuch as they were realized more than three years before the institution of the suit.

With regard to the cross-appeal of the plaintiffs we are of opinion that it is clearly established that there was another elephant belonging to the joint family which was sold by the defendant some time in 1299 (1892) for the price stated by the plaintiffs in their evidence. The reason given by the Subordinate Judge for disbelieving that portion of the plaintiff's evidence does not appear to us to be sufficient.

On the whole case, therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration regarding their one-fifth share in the sum of Rs. 3,286 plus 2,500, the value of the elephant sold by defendant No. 1. They are also entitled to an order that the elephant now existing might be sold under the direction of the Court and the proceeds distributed among the persons entitled thereto.

In order to avoid a multiplicity of suits, and having regard to the allegations made in the plaint and written statements, it seems to us that the decree in this case ought to contain a similar declaration in favour of the defendants other than Jingha, who appears to have received from the defendant No. 1 his share in these sums of money. Of course as regards these defendants Banoo [316] Tewary would be entitled to set off his share in the amounts realized by any of them on behalf of all the members.

The result, therefore, is that instead of Rs. 1,532 the decree in favour of the plaintiffs will be for 1/5th of 5,786.

Save and except this modification and the direction as to the sale of the elephant and the declaration as to the rights of the defendants other than Jhinga, we affirm the decree of the Court below.

Considering the circumstances we think that in appeals Nos. 262 and 325 the parties ought to pay their own costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed in part.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 423, clause (b), sub-section 3—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sections 147, 379—Enhancement of sentence.

In a case where the accused were convicted by a Deputy Magistrate of the offence of rioting under section 147, and theft under section 379,† of the Penal Code, and sentenced to four months for the first and two months for the latter offence, but on appeal the District Magistrate, considering the case to be one of theft rather than rioting, abandoned the sentence under section 147, but upheld the conviction under section 379 of the Penal Code and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment, Held, that what the District Magistrate had in effect done was to enhance the sentence under section 379 of the Penal Code, which he had no power to do under section 423, cl. (b), sub-section 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

THIS was a reference by the Sessions Judge of Shahabad to this Court asking for an authoritative decision on the following point :—

On 28th August 1896 Ramkhelawan Chowbe, Ramgad Chowbe, and Mohipat Ahir, were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of [317] Shahabad of the offences of (1) rioting under section 147, Penal Code, and (2), theft under section 379, Penal Code, and were sentenced for the first offence to four months and for the latter offence to two months' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal, the District Magistrate, Mr. Egerton, considering the case to be one of theft rather than of rioting, made the following order: "The conviction is upheld, and that part of the sentence which is passed under section 147, Penal Code, will be changed to a sentence under section 379, Penal Code; the conviction under section 147, Penal Code, is changed to one under section 379, Penal Code, and the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment is upheld."

The accused thereupon applied to the Sessions Judge to refer the case to the High Court on the ground that the sentence under section 379, Penal Code, had been enhanced by the District Magistrate in contravention of section 423, clause (b), sub-section 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Sessions Judge accordingly referred the matter for the decision of this Court.

It seems to us that the legal effect of the order of the District Magistrate in this case is to acquit the accused of the offence under section 147 of the Penal Code, and enhance the sentence under section 379. If the accused have been rightly acquitted of the offence under section 147, it follows that the sentence imposed under that section must fall through. And we are of opinion that the necessary consequence of the order of the District Magistrate maintaining the same sentence which the Deputy Magistrate had awarded is to enhance the sentence under section 379 which he had no authority to do under section 423, clause (b), sub-section 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure [see in this connection the decision of this Court, in Arpin Sheik v. Arobdi Datial.*

[318] The order of the District Magistrate enhancing the sentence from two to six months under section 379 of the Penal Code will be set aside.

* Revision case No. 60 of 1893 decided by PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ., on the 22nd February 1893.

In this case a rule was obtained by the petitioner Arpin Sheik to shew cause why the sentence passed by the Sessions Judge should not be set aside.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty for the Petitioner.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. G. C. Kilby) for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows.--

In this case the Magistrate has convicted the petitioner of robbery, under section 392 of the Penal Code, and hurt, under section 323 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him for the former offence to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment, and for the latter to one day's rigorous imprisonment.

On appeal, the Sessions Judge found that the charge of robbery was not established, and he held that it was what we may term an exaggeration of the actual facts of the case. He accordingly set aside the conviction on the charge of robbery, but, in confirming the conviction of hurt, he sentenced the appellant to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that this was an enhancement of sentence which the Sessions Judge as an Appellate Court was not competent to pass.

In granting the rule we intimated that, although the sentence appeared to be open to this objection, in dealing with the case we should consider the facts found and pass such sentence as would seem to us to meet the ends of justice. We have no doubt that the Sessions Judge had no power to pass this sentence which amounted to an enhancement from one day to six months for the offence of hurt. At the same time, after considering the facts found by both Courts, it seems to us that the attack on the complainant was of a somewhat serious nature, and that severe injuries were inflicted. We think therefore that the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment is a proper sentence, and we accordingly direct that that sentence be recorded under section 323 of the Penal Code. The effect of this order will be to make legal the sentence which the Sessions Judge has already passed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Kanti Chunder Mookerjee............Defendant

versus

Saligram and another............Plaintiffs.*

Second appeal—Order setting aside order granting review—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 591, 623, 629.

No second appeal to the High Court lies from an order setting aside an order granting a review of judgment.

THIS was an application for the admission of an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Lakimpur, dated 2nd September 1896, setting aside an order of the Munsif of Dibrugarh, dated 24th June 1896, by which he granted a review of a former order by which the suit was decreed against the defendant, the present appellant.

The case was put in the loazima board, the Deputy Registrar noting on it that "section 629 of the Civil Procedure Code permits of but one appeal against an order admitting a review in an application under section 623," and referring to a previous case [appeal from order 61 of 1897 decided by TREVELYAN and BANERJEE, JJ., on 7th December 1893],† in which it was held [320] that "there is no provision of law allowing a second appeal in a case of this kind."

On the application for admission of the appeal coming on for hearing,

Mr. Abdool Majid and Moulvie Mahomed Mustofa Khan appeared for the Appellant.

The order of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows :—

The appeal is rejected.

Moulvie Mahamed Yusoof, and Moulvie Mahamed Habibulla for the Appellant.

Babu Golap Chunder Sarkar for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge dismissing an appeal to him from an order of the first Court admitting a review. Objection has been taken, somewhat late, that we have no jurisdiction, because no second appeal lies. We think it clear that the objection is fatal. Section 591 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits but one appeal. There is no provision of law allowing a second appeal in a case of this kind. That being so, the appeal must be dismissed, but under the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 19th January, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE GORDON.

Queen-Empress
versus Jogendra Nath Mukerjee and others.........Accused.

Warrant of arrest—Illegal issue of warrant—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), sections 76, 81, 90 -Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sections 143, 186, 406—Justifiable assault—Criminal Procedure Code, section 160—Investigation by Police—Witness.

Where a District Magistrate issued a warrant for the arrest and production of a witness for the purpose of giving evidence at an investigation held by the police, and in attempting to execute such warrant the Police arrested the wrong person and were assaulted in the attempt,

Held, that apart from the fact that the attempt to arrest was made on the wrong person, a District Magistrate has no authority to issue a warrant for the production of a witness at an investigation by a Police Officer, but only before his own Court under sections 76, 81 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Held, also, that as the investigation was held by a Police Officer under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code, the proper course was for the Sub-Inspector of Police to require the attendance of this witness under section 160 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and on failure by her to comply with such order, prosecute her under section 174 † of the Penal Code.

Held, also, that the accused were justified in their resistance, and that no offence, either under section 143 or section 186 of the Penal code, was committed, and that they should be acquitted.

(Non-attendance in obedience to an order from a public servant.)

Monmohini as a witness. The Police were unable to obtain her appearance before them as a witness, and moved the District Magistrate for the issue of a warrant for her apprehension and production at the investigation by the Police, as a witness. On obtaining the warrant, the Police attempted to arrest one Aghoremoni instead of Monmohini, and, in the attempt, were assaulted by five men, who were subsequently convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Howrah under sections 143 and 186 of the Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 30 each, or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month.

Babu Hara Prasad Chatterjee (with him Babu Debendra Chandra Mullick) for the accused.—There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code which authorises a Magistrate to issue a warrant for the arrest and production of a person for examination before a Police Officer. A Magistrate can only issue a warrant for the appearance of a person before a Court of Justice to give his evidence. See sections 76, 81, 90, 91 of the Criminal Procedure Code. No doubt the Police have power under section 160 of the Criminal Procedure Code to require the appearance and attendance before them, during a Police investigation, under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code of any person acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case they are enquiring into, but they cannot compel a witness by force to attend before them. See Queen v. Behary Sing (7 W. R. Cr., 3). For non-compliance with an order to appear before the Police the person whose attendance is required can only be prosecuted under section 174 of the Penal Code.

The issue of the warrant being illegal and ultrà vires there can be no conviction of the accused under either of the sections [322] 143 or 186 of the Penal Code. See In re Rakhmaji (I.L.R., 9 Bom., 558), Queen-Empress v. Tulsi Ram (I.L R., 13 Bom., 168), Lalla Singh v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 286), In the matter of Baroda Kant Pramanick (1 Cal., W. N., 74), Cod v. Cabe (45 L. J. M. C., 101).

The issue of the warrant being illegal, it cannot be said that the Police officers were acting in the discharge of their public duties ; and if in the attempt to execute an illegal warrant the Police officers were assaulted the accused persons could not be held guilty of an offence under section 186 of the Penal Code. In the present case, not only were the Police officers not acting in the discharge of their public duties, but they laid hands on a wrong person, which, as the Magistrate finds, " led to the Police being assaulted " by one or other of the accused.

Section 99 of the Penal Code, to which reference has been made by the Magistrate in his explanation, has no application whatever to a case where the public officer concerned purports to act under a warrant or other authority, the issue of which is illegal and ultrà vires. Whether the action of the Police officers was bonâ fide or not does not arise now, and is not before the Court. Queen-Empress v. Tulsi Ram (I.L.R., 13 Bom., 168).

No one appeared for the Crown.

This case comes before us on a reference by the Sessions Judge of Hooghly under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and we have heard the learned Vakil who appeared in support of the reference. It appears that one Upendra Nath Bhuttacharjee preferred a complaint of criminal breach of trust under section 406 of the Penal Code against certain persons, and this complaint was referred to the Police for enquiry by the Magistrate of Howrah. One of the witnesses whom the complainant wished to be examined by the Police in support of his charge was a lady named Monmohini Devi, and the Sub-Inspector of Police who was holding the investigation by an order in writing, required her to attend before him for [323] the purpose of being examined as a witness in the case. She, however, failed to attend in accordance with his order, and accordingly the Sub-Inspector reported the matter to the District Magistrate, who eventually issued a warrant for her arrest and production before the Sub-Inspector in order that she might be examined by him as a witness. The Sub-Inspector, a head constable and some constables, armed with the warrant, proceeded to the lady's residence to execute it, and there having lain hands on one Aghoremoni instead of on Monmohini they were obstructed, and one or other of them was assaulted by certain persons. These persons, five in number, were accordingly prosecuted for committing offences under sections 143 and 186 of the Penal Code, were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Howrah of such offences, and sentenced each to pay a fine of Rs. 30 or in default to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment.

The learned Sessions Judge is of opinion that the District Magistrate had no authority in law to issue a warrant of arrest against Monmohini for her production as a witness before the investigating Police Officer, and that therefore the conviction of the five accused persons under sections 143 and 186 of the Penal Code is bad in law; and in support of this view he has referred to In re Rakhmaji (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 558), Queen-Empress v. Tulsi Ram (I. L. R., 13 Bom , 168), Lalla Sing v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 286), and the learned Vakil has drawn our attention to another case in point, In the matter of Baroda Kant Pramanick (1 Cal., W. N., 74). We have considered the terms of the reference, the explanation of the District Magistrate, the authorities cited, and the arguments advanced by the learned Vakil in support of the reference, and we are of opinion that the Judge has taken a correct view of the law in this case. We are unable to find any provision in the Criminal Procedure Code authorising the issue of such a warrant of arrest as the District Magistrate issued in this case. Reading sections 76 and 81 of the Code together it would appear that a Magistrate is only competent to issue a warrant of arrest for production of a person before his own Court and not before a Police Officer.

[324] No doubt, as the District Magistrate points out, section 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code empowers him to issue a warrant in any case in which he is competent to issue a summons, but we observe that the Code makes no provision for the issue of a summons by a Magistrate requiring a person to appear before a Police Officer. The investigation in the present case was being made by the Police under chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code, and accordingly the Sub-Inspector was empowered under section 160* by an order in writing to require the attendance of Monmohini before him, and on her failure to comply with the order she might have been prosecuted for disobedience under section 174 of the Penal Code; but we think that no warrant of arrest could under such circumstances be lawfully issued against her. We are also of opinion that inasmuch as the issue of the warrant was illegal the convictions under sections 143 and 186 of the Penal Code cannot be sustained, and the authorities above cited support this view. The District

Magistrate relies on section 99 of the Penal Code; but we think that this section has no application to a case like the present in which the Police officers were acting under a warrant, the issue of which was altogether illegal. For the above reasons we set aside the conviction and sentences, and direct that the fines, if realised, be refunded.

CRIMINAL REVISION

The 19th January, 1897

PRESENT

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE GORDON.

Jagarnath Mandhata and others . . . . .Petitioners

Queen-Empress. ....Opposite Party.*

Bengal Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1878), sections 4, 40, 75—Bengal Excise Act Amendment Act (Bengal Act IV of 1881), section 3—Right of Search —Gurjat-ganja—Exciseable article—Foreign exciseable article.

In a case where an Excise Sub Inspector attempted to search a house for gurjat-ganja, a "foreign exciseable article," under the Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1878), and resistance was offered —

Held, that gurjat ganja being a "foreign exciseable article" under [325] section 4 of the Act as amended by Bengal Act IV of 1881 the excise officer had no legal authority to enter and search the house under section 40 of the Act, he had authority only to enter and search for any "exciseable article" as defined in section 4 of the Act and that no offence, either under section 141 or section 353 † of the Penal Code, was committed.

Held, also, that section 75 of the Act does not apply to a "foreign exciseable article."

ON 26th August 1896 the Excise Sub-Inspector of Puri received information through an informer that gurjat ganja was concealed in the house of accused No. 1, Jagarnath Mandhata. After taking down this information in writing, * Criminal Revision No 665 of 1896, against the order passed by F. E. Pargiter, Esq., Sessions Judge of Cuttack, dated the 7th of November 1896, affirming the order passed by N. Bhuttacharjee, Deputy Magistrate of Puri, dated the 7th of October 1896.

† [Sec 353 —Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person being a public servant in the execution of his duty as such public servant, or with intent to prevent or deter that person from discharging his duty as such public servant, or in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by such person in the lawful discharge of his duty as such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.]

in accordance with section 40 of the Excise Act (VII of 1878) the Sub-Inspector went to the village where Jagarnath lived, taking with him a head-constable and a constable of the Khurdah Police Station, in accordance with section 40 of the Excise Act, also four excise peons and the carter in whose cart they travelled. On arrival at the village the Sub-Inspector, taking with him in addition two of the villagers, as witnesses, proceeded to the house of Jagarnath. In an out-house, forming the entrance to the inner apartments, they found Jagarnath and Bisunath accused No. 3. Bisunath was pounding the ganja. The Sub-Inspector arrested Bisunath and gave the pounded ganja into the custody of one of the excise peons, himself keeping possession of the loose ganja. Jagarnath then interfered and told the Sub-Inspector he must not arrest Bisunath. The Sub-Inspector thereupon told Jagarnath, who he was and what he had come for The party then went into the second courtyard, where the Sub-Inspector pointed out to Jagarnath the room which he suspected contained ganja, and asked for the key, the door being locked.

Jagarnath told his son, Satyabadi, to go and fetch the key. Satyabadi went away, and after some delay they heard a noise of some one jumping down into the room. The Sub-Inspector insisted on Jagarnath getting the key, and at this moment Satyabadi returned, and both he and Jagarnath then ordered the Sub-Inspector and his party to leave the house, stating that they would not allow it to be searched. The Sub-Inspector thereupon ordered his peon to break open the door, and while he was attempting to do so, he was twice pushed aside by Jagarnath. In the [326] meantime 40 or 50 other villagers had assembled, and the Sub-Inspector, fearing that he would be attacked and beaten, went away with the head-constable to the Delary Police outpost, which was six miles distant, and there lodged an information with the head-constable in charge against the three accused.

Jagarnath, in his defence, stated that no resistance was offered to the search made in his house, and that they did not find any ganja, and pleaded not guilty.

Accused No. 2 and No. 3 pleaded an alibi.

The Deputy Magistrate found all three accused guilty under sections 147 and 353 of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to rigorous imprisonment for two months.

On appeal to the Sessions Judge of Cuttack, the Sessions Judge upheld the conviction, and on 7th November 1896 delivered the following judgment :—

4. "The appellants have been convicted under sections 147 and 353 of the Penal Code of having attacked a special Excise Sub-Inspector and his attendants when he visited the appellant Jagarnath's house and found gurjat-ganja there. The facts are quite clear, and there is no reason to disbelieve the witnesses for the prosecution. The common object is quite clear; it was to prevent the house from being searched. It is contended on the appellant's behalf that the Excise officers exceeded their duty in making the search, and were not protected by section 99 of the Indian Penal Code This contention rests on the argument that they made the search under section 40 of the Excise Act, and that applies only to 'exciseable articles' and not 'foreign exciseable articles.' But reading sections 4 and 17 and 17 A together, I am of opinion that 'exciseable article' includes 'foreign exciseable articles,' and that the latter is only a particular sub-class under the former class. Section 75, therefore, applies to the gurjat-ganja which is admittedly a 'foreign, exciseable article,' and section 40 therefore covers the proceedings of the Excise officers; and even if it did not, they acted in good faith under colour of their office, and the rulings Bhawoo Jivaji v. Mulji Dayal (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 377), and Queen-Empress v. Daiip (I. L. R., 18 All., 246) shew that section 99 covers their conduct I think, therefore, the convictions are right. The appeal is therefore dismissed."

The accused thereupon moved the High Court to set aside the conviction and sentences.

Babu Monmotho Nath Mitter for the petitioner.—The Excise Officer had no authority to enter and search the house of the [327] petitioners. Section 40 of the Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1878) empowers him to enter and search the house of a man, when he is suspected of having kept concealed in his house any exciseable articles which are liable to confiscation under section 75 of the Act. In the present case, according to the finding of both the lower Courts, gurjat-ganja, which the petitioners were suspected of having kept concealed in their house, is a "foreign exciseable article," and not an "exciseable article." Under the Act "exciseable" and "foreign exciseable" articles are different from each other, and the Sessions Judge is in error in holding that "exciseable article" includes "foreign exciseable article." There was no such term as "foreign exciseable article" in Bengal Act VII of 1878 when it was originally passed, but that term was introduced by the amending Act (Bengal Act IV of 1881), and that introduction was not by an amendment of the definition of the term "exciseable article" as given in section 4 of Act VII of 1878, but by the addition of a separate definition altogether. It also appears from the different sections of the amending Act that, whenever the Legislature had occasion to deal with "foreign exciseable articles," they have added new sections, vide sections 17A and 61A. Section 75, as it originally stood in the Act of 1878, has been amended by section 10 of Act IV of 1881, but there is nothing in that amendment to indicate that "exciseable article" includes "foreign exciseable article." The Excise Officer had therefore no authority under section 40 to enter and search the house of the petitioners, who were legally justified in offering such resistance to the Excise Officer and his party as was necessary to prevent the house from being searched. The common object of the assembly being to offer lawful resistance, there was no unlawful assembly as defined by section 141 of the Penal Code. Section 99 of the Penal Code has no application to the facts and circumstances of the present case.

The petitioners have been convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Puri of offences punishable under sections 147 and 353 of the Penal Code, and have been sentenced each to two months' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal the conviction and sentences have [328] been affirmed by the Sessions Judge. The facts found by both lower Courts are that Janki Nath Basu, Special Excise Sub-Inspector of Puri, having received information that gurjat-ganja was concealed in the house of the petitioner, Jagarnath Mandhata, went to his house to search it, accompanied by certain Police Officers and Excise peons, and that he and his party were opposed by the petitioners and others in their attempt to search the house in question, and were at the same time assaulted. The main ground urged in support of the rule, which we granted on the application of the petitioners, is that, inasmuch as gurjat-ganja is a "foreign exciseable" article as defined in section 4 of Bengal Act VII of 1878 (as amended by Bengal Act IV of 1881), it is not included in the term "exciseable article" as used in sections 75 and 4 of that Act; and consequently the Excise Officer had no legal authority under section 40 to enter and search the house of Jagarnath Mandhata. We have considered the terms of the various sections referred to, and the definitions of "exciseable" and "foreign exciseable" article, as given in the Act, and we are of opinion that the Excise Officer had no legal authority to search the petitioner's house. Section 4 of the Act, as amended by Bengal Act IV of 1881, contains separate and distinct definitions of "exciseable article" and "foreign exciseable article," and therefore, we think, that, whenever either of these expressions occurs in the Act, it is used in the sense and with the meaning given to it in the definitions. The words used in section 75 are "exciseable article" and the words "foreign exciseable article" do not occur therein, so that in the view we take the Excise Officer in the present case had no authority under section 40 to enter and search the petitioner's house; he had authority only to search for any exciseable article as defined in section 4 of the Act.

The learned Judge has expressed the opinion that, reading sections 4, 17 and 17A together, "exciseable article" includes "foreign exciseable article," and that the latter is only a "particular sub-class," under the former class; and that section 75 is therefore applicable to gurjat-ganja. We are, however, unable to adopt that view. As already stated, section 4 distinguishes between "exciseable" and "foreign exciseable" articles.

Section 17 refers to exciseable articles only, while section [329] 17A gives to the Board of Revenue, with the sanction of the local Government, the power to declare by notification that the possession of any "foreign exciseable article" is prohibited within districts and tracts specified in the notification. No doubt, it appears from the Deputy Magistrate's explanation that a notification has been duly published prohibiting the possession of any "foreign exciseable article" without a license from the Collector in the District of Puri, but all the law provides with reference to such articles is that the person in possession thereof shall be liable to a fine (see section 61A). There is nothing to indicate, as far as we can discover, that "foreign exciseable articles" are meant to be a sub-class of "exciseable article;" and, indeed, we do not find that such articles are liable to seizure and confiscation as exciseable articles are under section 75 of the Act. It follows, therefore, that the Excise Officer had no authority to proceed under section 40 of the Act. We may also refer to section 82 of the Act, in which a distinction is drawn between an "exciseable article" and a "foreign exciseable article," thus indicating that the Legislature did not mean "foreign exciseable" articles to be a sub-class of "exciseable" articles. We also think that section 99 of the Penal Code, and the authorities referred to by the Sessions Judge in his judgment, are not applicable to the facts and circumstances of the present case. The common object of the assembly was to resist the search of the house, which, as we have already said, the Excise Officer had no legal authority to make; and that being so, we are unable to say that such assembly was an "unlawful assembly," as defined in section 141 of the Penal Code, and that when force was used the offence of resisting was committed. Similarly, we are of opinion that the conviction under section 353 of the Penal Code cannot be supported, because the Special Excise Sub-Inspector, when assaulted, was not acting in lawful discharge of his duty. [See In re Rakhmaji (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 558)]. We observe that the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the Excise Officer was protected by section 99 of the Penal Code; and he cites two cases [Bhawoo Jivaji v. Mulji Dayal (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 377) and Queen-Empress v. Dalip (I. L. R., 18 All., 246)] in support of this view. But the facts of those cases are essentially [330] different from the facts of the present case, and we do not think that the law laid down therein is applicable here; or that section 99 of the Penal Code can protect the Excise Officer, when his conduct was altogether illegal. For the above reasons we set aside the conviction and sentences.

We might, however, hold that the petitioners are guilty of the offence of ordinary assault punishable under section 352* of the Penal Code, but we are not quite sure whether the resistance offered or the force used was not necessary to resist the Excise Officer in what he attempted to do, viz., to break open the door of the petitioner's house. But in any view of the matter, it seems to us that the incarceration, which the petitioners have already suffered under the sentence imposed by the Magistrate, is sufficient in the circumstances of the case, and that there need not therefore be any formal conviction for assault under section 352.

† Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1237 of 1895, against the decree of K. N. Roy, Esq., District Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated the 20th of April 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Rash Behari Bose, Munsif of Serajgunge, dated the 10th of September 1894.

Vayangara Vadaka Vittil Manja v. Pariyangot Padingara Kuruppath Kadugochen Nayar (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 89), followed; Brojendra Kumar Roy Chowdhry v. Rash Behari Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 300), distinguished.

The only evidence on which the Lower Appellate Court had acted as establishing such collusion was the finding of the Court in the former suit (gathered from the grounds of appeal in that suit). Held, that that finding was inadmissible in evidence as laid down in Surender Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 352), being the finding in a case in which G, S and A were all co-defendants, and a third party the plaintiff: and the case was remanded for the determination of the question whether G, S and A were wrong-doers, and were as such held liable for the costs of the former suit.

SRI GOBIND CHOWDHRY, defendant No. 1, the proprietor of a three annas share in mouzah Mouhaly, let out in putni 2 annas and 5 gundas to the plaintiffs, and the remaining 15 gundas to Anand Chunder Tarafdar, defendant No. 2. Under a previous contract he had, however, agreed to grant a putni of the entire 3 annas share to one Prannath Nundy. On that contract Prannath Nundy brought a suit No. 25 of 1891 in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Pubna against the plaintiffs and the defendants in this suit for cancellation of the leases granted to the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 2, for execution of a lease in his favour by the defendant No. 1, and for possession of the property. In that suit Prannath obtained a decree, which was upheld on appeal, and the present plaintiffs and the defendants were made jointly liable for his costs. In execution of the decree for costs the plaintiffs' property was attached and advertised for sale. They paid the money into Court and brought this suit against the defendants for contribution. The defendant No. 2 appeared and contended that the suit was not maintainable, that he was not liable to contribute, and, that if he was so liable, the proportion of his liability should not exceed the proportion of the share let out to him in putni. The Court of First Instance dismissed the suit on the ground that no suit for contribution lies by one of several joint wrong-doers against another. The plaintiffs appealed to the Officiating Judge of Pubna, who dismissed the appeal.

[332] The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babu Mohini Mohun Chuckravarti for the Appellants.

Babu Hur Chunder Chuckravarti and Babu Sarat Chunder Khan for the Respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows.—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for contribution, on the allegation that the plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 took from defendant No. 1 a 2 annas 5 gundas and a 15 gundas share of a certain zemindari in putni by two separate documents, that thereupon a suit was brought by one Prannath Nundy against the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for enforcing specific performance of a contract to grant a putni to him of the said two shares; that that suit was decreed with costs, and the whole costs decreed in favour of Prannath Nundy were realized from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs seek to recover two different amounts from the two defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The defence of the defendants was a denial of liability. They also pleaded that the suit was not maintainable, and they took some exception as to the extent of the liability of each.

The Courts below have thrown out the suit on the ground that no suit for contribution lies by one of several joint wrong-doers against the others.

In second appeal it is contended that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in finding that the plaintiffs and the defendants were joint wrong-doers, or that they conspired together in setting up a false defence in the suit in which the decree for costs was made, when there is no legal evidence to sustain the finding; and further that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in treating this suit as one for contribution by one of several wrong-doers against the others

Upon the first point what the Lower Appellate Court says is this: "From the grounds of appeal of the original suit, it is clear that the Court held that the plaintiffs and the defendants made a conspiracy to defeat the contract between the defendant No. 1, Sri Gobind Chowdhry and Prannath Nundy, and, as such, were joint wrong-doers, and they knew that they were [333] doing an illegal and wrongful act." Exception is taken to this finding on the ground that the grounds of appeal in the former suit could not be used as evidence to establish the fact found. We are of opinion that this contention is correct. The utmost that the grounds of appeal can be taken to show is that the plaintiffs, who were some of the appellants, admitted in their grounds that the finding of the first Court was what the Lower Appellate Court in this case states it to be. But though that may be so, the finding of the Court in the former suit would be no evidence in the present suit of the fact found, for this simple reason, that that finding was arrived at in a case in which the present plaintiffs and the defendants were all co-defendants and a third party was the plaintiff. This is the rule of law laid down by a Full Bench of this Court in Surender Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 352). The finding of the Lower Appellate Court upon this point cannot therefore stand.

The next question is whether the case should be remanded for the determination of the question whether the plaintiffs and the defendants in this case combined to defeat the plaintiffs in the former suit, and with that object put in false defences. We are of opinion, having regard to the manner in which this case has been dealt with by the Courts below, that if the determination of this question is necessary for the right decision of the case, the case ought to go back to the Court of First Instance. It becomes important, therefore, to determine whether it is necessary for the decision of the case that the question stated above should be determined. The learned Vakil for the appellants relies upon the case of Brojendro Kumar Roy Chowdhry v. Rash Behari Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 300) in support of his contention that the plaintiffs in a case like this are entitled to contribution quite irrespective of the question referred to above, as the suit which resulted in the award of costs in respect of which contribution is asked for was a suit based, not upon tort, but upon contract. But we are of opinion that that case is distinguishable from the present one, as no question arose in that case as to whether the parties who were made liable for damages and costs in that [334] suit had incurred that liability by reason of their having set up any false defence. On the other hand, we think the case of Vayangara Vadaka Vittil Manja v. Pariyangot Padingara Kuruppath Kadugochen Nayar (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 89) is much more in point upon this question. In that case it was held that where the plaintiffs colluded with the defendant in a former suit to endeavour to defeat the plaintiffs there, and were made liable for costs, no suit for contribution in respect of such costs would lie. Following this decision of the Madras High Court, which in our opinion lays down a wholesome rule, we think the case ought to be remanded to the first Court for the determination of the question stated above and of any other question relative to the apportionment of liability that may be found necessary.

The costs will abide the result.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE GORDON.

Jatra Mohun Sen.........(Plaintiff) Applicant

versus

Aukhil Chandra Chowdhry (Defendant No. 1) and others...... .....Opposite Parties.

Sale for arrears of Revenue--Right of Auction-purchasers to annul incumbrances--Act XI of 1859, section 37-- Suit to cancel under-tenures--Parties--Review Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 630.

The right that is given by section 37 of Act XI of 1859 to the auction purchaser of an entire estate in the permanently-settled districts of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, sold for arrears of revenue, to avoid and annul an under-tenure is a right that must be exercised by all the purchasers jointly where there are more purchasers than one.

THE plaintiff brought a suit to recover possession of some land comprised in two schedules appended to the plaint as appertaining to a taluk held and owned by him. The defendant No. 1 resisted the claim upon the ground chiefly that he, the defendant, being one of the purchasers of the entire estate within which the taluk set up by the plaintiff was situated, at a sale for arrears of Government revenue, the plaintiff was not entitled as against him to enforce his right as talukdar. The other defendants did not appear. The Court of First Instance decreed the claim [335] in part, and the Lower Appellate Court affirmed that decree so far as it was in favour of the plaintiff, and gave him a decree for a portion of that part of the claim which was dismissed by the first Court. The Lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to enforce his decree as talukdar against the defendant auction-purchaser on the ground that section 37 of Act XI of 1859 gives the right to avoid incumbrances only to the purchaser of an entire estate, and that the defendant No. 1, who was merely one of several purchasers of the estate, was not the purchaser of an entire estate and was not therefore entitled to avoid incumbrances. The defendant No. 1, in appeal to the High Court, contended that the right to avoid incumbrances belongs to the purchaser or purchasers at a sale for arrears of Government revenue whenever an entire estate is sold, quite irrespective of the fact whether the purchase is made by one or more persons, and quite irrespective also of the fact whether, where the purchase is made by more persons than one, only one of them or all of them seek to avoid the same. This contention was held to be correct.

The following was the judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Gordon, JJ.) so far as it is material for the purposes of this report :—

"The provisions of section 37 of Act XI of 1859 are intended as a safeguard for the realization of Government revenue, and are intended to prevent any proprietor for the time being from so incumbering the estate, and thereby reducing its value, as to diminish the security afforded by the estate for the realization of Government revenue. The right in question attaches to the purchaser or purchasers at a sale for arrears of Government revenue, whenever what is sold is an entire estate, as distinguished from a share of an estate which may under certain circumstances be in the first instance brought to sale for arrears of Government revenue due from the sharer in whose name it is recorded, but the law does not require that, in order to exercise the right to avoid incumbrances, the purchasers, when there are more than one, should all unite in a body to bring a suit or take other steps necessary for the purpose. Of course when some only of several purchasers seek to avoid an [336] incumbrance it will be avoided only to the extent of their shares, and with regard to the shares of the other co-sharers, the incumbrancer will be left undisturbed."

The plaintiff then applied for a review and obtained this rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the application should not be granted. The Court (BANERJEE and GORDON, JJ.) granted the application on the ground that in their judgment in the appeal under review they had omitted to consider two decisions of the High Court, one in the case of Dwarka Nath Pal v. Grish Chunder Bandopadhya (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 827), and the other in the case of Bungo Chunder Mozoomdar v. Brojo Mohun Waladar (Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1772 of 1892). The case was then at once re-heard under section 630 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Woodroffe, Babu Akhoy Kumar Banerjee, and Mr. Percival for the Petitioner.

Babu Hari Mohan Chuckerbutty for the opposite party.

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows: —

The main question raised at this re-hearing is whether the right that is given to the auction-purchaser of an entire estate in the permanently-settled districts of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, sold for arrears of revenue, under section 37 of Act XI of 1859 to avoid and annul an under-tenure, is a right that must be exercised by all the purchasers jointly, where there are more purchasers than one, or whether it is open to any one of a number of co-purchasers to enforce that right. The Lower Appellate Court has taken the former view as being the one that is in accordance with the true meaning of the section, and it has accordingly held that it was not competent to the defendant No. 1, who was one of a body of purchasers by whom the estate had been purchased, to defeat the plaintiff's right as talukdar. Against that judgment this second appeal was preferred, and in our former judgment we held that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge was wrong, and that under section 37 of Act XI of 1859 any one of several purchasers of an entire estate sold for arrears of revenue was competent to avoid an under-tenure subordinate [337] to the estate, although the other co-purchasers might not join him. We held that the object of section 37 was simply to protect the public revenue, and that to secure that object it gave to the purchaser of an entire estate as distinguished from a purchaser of a share of an estate sold for arrears of revenue as provided in section 53 of the Act, the right to avoid incumbrances and under-tenures, and to take the estate in the condition in which it was at the time of the Permanent Settlement. In taking that view, we omitted to take into consideration one other wholesome purpose that the language of section 37 was intended to serve, viz., the purpose of preventing hardship to holders of incumbrances and under-tenures such as they would be subjected to, if where more persons than one purchase an estate, it was competent to any one of them to set aside an incumbrance or an under-tenure notwithstanding that his co-purchasers might be unwilling to join him in doing so. This matter was taken into consideration in the unreported case to which we have referred, viz., Bungo Chunder Mozoomdar v. Brojo Mohan Watadar (Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1772 of 1892), in which there occurs the following passage in the judgment: "If we could feel sure that the only object of section 37 was that referred to above, we should be bound to attach the greatest possible weight to this argument. But it is not unreasonable to suppose that, besides the one mentioned above, which is no doubt its primary object, the section has been intended to secure also certain other objects, such as the prevention of undue inconvenience and hardship which might arise from subjecting the holders of incumbrances to a multiplicity of suits by different purchasers at one sale, or to suits for partial cancellation of incumbrances at the instance of some out of several co-purchasers when the others are unwilling, or (as in this case) incompetent, to effect such cancellation. And if that is so, we must hold that the language of the section has advisedly been made what it is and we must construe it literally." The same view has been taken in the case of Dwarka Nath Pal v. Grish Chunder Bundopadhya (I.L R, 6 Cal., 827), and it has our full concurrence. We may add that stringent provisions like that laid down in section 37 of Act XI of 1859 have always been construed strictly and in favour of holders of [338] incumbrances and under-tenures so as to prevent hardship as much as possible. We need only refer to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Surnomoyee v. Suttees Chunder Roy Bahadur (10 Moo. I.A., 123).

Babu Hari Mohun Chuckerbutty for the appellant-defendant No. 1 contended that, though this may be true for those cases where an auction-purchaser is the plaintiff and seeks to avoid a tenure, the same rule ought not to hold good where the auction-purchaser is not a plaintiff seeking to cancel an under-tenure, but is only a defendant resisting the claim of an under-tenure-holder to recover possession. We are unable to accept this contention as correct. It has been found in this case that the plaintiff-respondent before us owned a taluk, and that his right as proprietor of that taluk has not been affected by the law of limitation. His right as talukdar must, therefore, be held to be a subsisting right, unless it is shown to have been avoided by the revenue sale at which the appellant became one of the purchasers. The appellant failed to show that he was the sole purchaser or that defendants Nos. 7 and 8 who, according to the plaintiff, were some of the purchasers, have not acquired any right as auction-purchasers; in other words, he has failed to show that he represents the entire body of auction-purchasers. The defendant No. 1 has also failed to show that anything was done by the entire body of auction-purchasers to avoid the plaintiff's taluk. That being so, in the view we have taken of section 37, that taluk must be held to be a subsisting taluk, and the plaintiff must be held entitled to recover upon the strength of his title as a proprietor of that taluk. The result then is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

F. K. D. Appeal dismissed with costs.

PRESENT:
MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Kailash Chandra Chuckerbutty and others............Plaintiffs
versus Kashi Chandra Chuckerbutty and another............Defendants.*

Hindu Law—Bengal School of Hindu Law—Co-heiresses—Compromise—Reversioners.

According to the law of the Dayabhaga, when several daughters inherit the estate of their father, they are competent to enter into any arrangement regarding their respective rights in that estate, provided that such arrangement does not interfere with the rights of the reversionary heirs except by way of accelerating their succession.

THE plaintiffs in this suit claimed the share of one Subhadra in certain lands as heirs of their maternal grandfather, one Radhakrishna Chuckerbutty.

Radhakrishna Chuckerbutty, Kali Shankar Chuckerbutty, and Bhabani Shankar Chuckerbutty were three brothers constituting a joint Hindu family, holding certain lakheraj lands. Bhavani Shankar predeceased Radhakrishna, leaving a widow, Syama Sundari, who died some years afterwards. Next died Radhakrishna, leaving him surviving a widow, Saroda Sundari, and three daughters, Subhadra, Bishakha and Gaganeswari. Subhadra, whose share of the lands was in dispute, was married to the defendant No. 1 during the life-time of her father. Bishakha, the mother of the plaintiffs, and Gaganeswari, were married after the death of their father while they with their mother were living jointly with their uncle Kali Shankar. Saroda Sundari, Radhakrishna's widow, died on the 13th of Pous 1273 B.S (27th December 1866). Radhakrishna's share of the joint lands remained with Kali Shankar, who refused to part with it in favour of the three daughters of his deceased brother. Bishakha, the plaintiff's mother, sued Kali Shankar for her share of her father's lands in 1870, making her sisters, Subhadra and Gaganeswari, defendants in the suit. The suit was compromised by each of the sisters getting a third of the lands that Kali Shankar gave up. Subhadra was in possession of her one-third share till her [340] death without issue in 1299 (1892). Bishakha, plaintiff's mother, died in 1295 (1888), and Gaganeswari became a widow without any male child in 1294 (1887). The plaintiffs, as already stated, sued for recovery of possession of Subhadra's share in the lands as heirs of their maternal grandfather Radhakrishna. Defendant No. 1, who was in possession of all the lands in suit, asserted his claim to the share upon the compromise of 1870, the effect of which, according to his contention, was to create a separate estate for his deceased wife. The terms of that compromise were contained in two petitions, one filed by the plaintiff and the other by Subhadra and Gaganeswari. The material portion of Bishakha's petition was as follows:—

"This suit has resulted in compromise with me by the said Kali Shankar Chuckerbutty, the principal defendant, as also the co-sharers, defendants Nos 2 and 3, whereby they have relinquished to me a total quantity of (here the amount was set out) land and a third of the joint homestead or 2 gandas 2 karas and 2 karantis of land, while Subhadra and Gaganeswari have each taken on as much quantity of lal lands with specification of boundaries, &c. . . . .

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1098 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Gopal Chandra Bose, Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 9th of April 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Romesh Chandra Sen, Munsif of Comillah, dated the 15th of May 1894.

with a third of joint homestead, etc —and I as well as defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have given up our claims to all other lands Under the circumstances I, as well as my son and son's son and so on in succession, will hold and enjoy with power to sell or make a gift thereof, the exclusive possession of all the . . . land which has fallen to my share, as also an equal or a third share of the homestead, jointly with my co sharer defendants, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and the same shall never be claimed either by defendant No. 1, or any of the other co-sharers. In the above way we will hold now and for ever the respective shares each in adverse right to others. Neither myself nor my future heirs will lay claim to the lands of others, nor dispute for any right thereto."

The petition filed by Subhadra and Gaganeswari was to the same effect.

Babu Promotho Nath Sen for the Appellants.

Babu Hari Mohan Chuckerbutty and Babu Aukhoy Coomar Banerjee for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ) was as follows: –

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants to recover possession of certain immoveable property, on the allegation that the said property, along with other properties, belonged to one Radhakrishna Chuckerbutty, the maternal [341] grandfather of the plaintiffs, that upon the death of Radhakrishna's widow in whom they had vested by inheritance, the three daughters of Radhakrishna, viz, Bishakha, mother of the plaintiffs, Gaganeswari, defendant No. 2, and Subhadra, the wife of defendant No. 1 became jointly entitled to the same, that Kali Shankar Chuckerbutty, brother of Radhakrishna, having kept Bishakha out of possession, she brought a suit against him and her two sisters Subhadra and Gaganeswari to recover possession of her share in the properties left by her father; that that suit resulted in a compromise, by which Bishakha and her two sisters obtained certain properties to be held by them separately; that subsequently Bishakha died and Gaganeswari became a childless widow; and that upon the death of Subhadra, the property obtained by her under the terms of the compromise became vested in the plaintiffs.

The defence, so far as it is material for the purposes of this appeal, was to the effect that the properties obtained by Subhadra under the compromise, did not belong to Radhakrishna, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim the same during the lifetime of Gaganeswari, the surviving daughter of Radhakrishna and of defendant No. 1, who is the heir to Subhadra's property in preference to the plaintiffs, her sister's sons.

The first Court gave the plaintiffs a decree, but on appeal the lower Appellate Court has reversed that decree, holding that Hindu joint tenants such as widows and daughters, "are incompetent to convert, by mere acts of their own, joint estates into estates of severalty,' and that Gaganeswari was consequently entitled to hold Subhadra's share.

In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that, under the Bengal School of Hindu law, daughters are incompetent to convert their joint estates into estates in severalty, and that it ought to have held that, under the terms of the compromise, the plaintiffs were entitled to the properties left by Subhadra in preference to Gaganeswari and Subhadra's husband. On the other hand, it is contended for the defendants-respondents in support of the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that all that the daughters of Radhakrishna did under the compromise was [342] only to give up their rights in favour of each other during their joint lives, and that, if it be conceded that any estates in severalty were created by the compromise in favour of the three daughters of Radhakrishna, the properties now in dispute did not all belong to him.

We are of opinion that the lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that, under the Hindu law of the Bengal School, when several daughters take a joint estate, they are incompetent to convert that joint estate into estates in severalty. We think that according to the law of the Dayabhaga, when several daughters inherit the estate of their father, they are competent to enter into any arrangement regarding their respective rights in that estate, provided that such arrangement does not interfere with the rights of the reversionary heirs except by way of accelerating their succession. This view is fully borne out by the law as laid down in the case of the widow, which is analogous to that applicable to the case of daughters, and also by that laid down in cases relating to the succession of daughters (see the Dayabhaga, chapter XI, section 2, paragraphs 30 and 31, and the cases of Janoki Nath Mukhopadhya v. Mothuranath Mukhopadhya (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 580), and Padmamani Dasi v. Jagadamba Dasi (6 B. L. R., 134). We are also of opinion that the respondents' contention that all that the daughters gave up in favour of each other under the compromise related to their rights during their joint lives is untenable, and we think that what the daughters intended to do by the compromise was to create in favour of each an absolute estate in the properties allotted to her, freely alienable by her and descendible to her heirs. How far they were competent to do so and how far this arrangement would entitle the plaintiffs to succeed in the present suit are questions which remain to be considered. Whilst taking this view of the compromise, we must, on the other hand, say that it does not in terms amount to a relinquishment by each daughter of her right of survivorship, so as to make the shares allotted to the other daughters pass on to the reversionary heirs on their death. The petitions of compromise nowhere say that; but, on the contrary, they distinctly provide that, upon the death of each daughter, the properties taken by her, [343] if not alienated by her in her life-time, should go to her sons, grandsons, etc., that is, to the heirs of her separate property which must mean her stridhan, though the word stridhan is not used in the petitions. That being so, can it be said that though the compromise does not in terms entitle the plaintiffs to claim the estate left by Subhadra, still the effect of the Hindu law, which is to prevent the compromise from taking effect to its fullest extent, is to accelerate the succession of the plaintiffs who are the ultimate reversionary heirs at the present date in regard to the properties left by the deceased daughter? We are of opinion that this question must be answered in the negative. For, we think it was competent to the daughters of Radhakrishna to come to any arrangement amongst themselves as to their respective rights which would last during the continuance of the daughter's estate, that is, up to the time of the death of the last surviving daughter, and that irrespective of the fact whether the last surviving daughter became disqualified to inherit after the succession had vested in her and her other sisters jointly. In support of the view that the subsequent disqualification of a daughter after the succession has vested in her along with other daughters does not deprive her of her right to continue to hold the daughters' estate, we need only refer to the case of Amirto Lal Bose v. Rajonee Kant Mitter (15 B. L. R., 10 23 W. R., 214). That being so, the estate that devolved on the daughters of Radhakrishna would not determine until after the death of Gaganeswari, and, until that event happens, the arrangement come to between the daughters, which was assented to by all the daughters, should, in our opinion, remain in operation. This would not in any way interfere with the rights of the reversionary heirs for the simple reason that those rights do not come into existence until after the death of Gaganeswari. Now, what is the effect of the arrangement come to amongst the daughters? As we have already indicated its effect was to make the properties allotted to each daughter remain her property capable of being alienated by her, and, if not alienated, capable of passing on her death, to the heirs to her separate property as distinguished from the property inherited by her from her father. [344] In this view, the properties obtained by Subhadra, granting that they were properties which, as the plaintiffs alleged, originally belonged to Radhakrishna, would pass to the nearest heir to her stridhan, that is, to her husband, defendant No. 1, in the same way as the properties left by the plaintiffs' mother passed to them, not because they were the reversionary heirs of their maternal grandfather, but because they were the nearest heirs of their mother. We therefore think that the plaintiffs' suit has been rightly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court, though upon a wrong ground. The result then is that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Recognizance to keep the peace—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 107—Jurisdiction of Magistrate.

In a case where an accused was bound over to keep the peace by the Deputy Magistrate of the district in which the accused was temporarily residing at the time when the Magistrate received information and instituted proceedings against him:

Held, that, although the accused permanently or habitually resided in another jurisdiction, he was sufficiently within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate within the meaning of section 107† of the Criminal Procedure Code.

IN this case the District Magistrate of Dinajpur, upon information contained in a Police report, drew up a proceeding on the 2nd of May 1896 under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code against two accused persons, calling upon them to show cause before the Deputy Magistrate of Dinajpur why they should not be bound down in their own recognizances of Rs. 500 each with two sureties of Rs. 200 each to keep the peace for one year.

[345] On the 29th of June the accused appeared before the Deputy Magistrate to show cause, and the first accused, Shama Charan Chuckerbutty, contended that as he was not residing within the District of Dinajpur, the Magistrate of Dinajpur had no jurisdiction to require security from him under section 107. The Deputy Magistrate found that both the accused were actually residing within the district of Dinajpur at the time when the acts likely to lead to a breach of the peace were committed and when the proceeding was drawn up by the District Magistrate, and therefore ordered that they should each execute a bond in their own recognizances for Rs. 250 with two sureties of Rs. 100 to keep the peace for one year.

Thereupon the accused Shama Charan Chuckerbutty applied to the High Court for and obtained a rule to set aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate on 14th August 1896.

Mr. Jackson (with him Babu Grish Chunder Chowdry) for the Petitioner. —Inasmuch as Shama Charan Chuckerbutty habitually resides in the district of Maldah, the Magistrate of Dinajpur had no jurisdiction to institute proceedings and issue process against him under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and in support of this contention I rely on the following cases: In the matter of the petition of Jai Prakash Lal (I. L. R., 6 All., 26). In the matter of the petition of Rajendra Chandra Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 737). In the matter of the petition of Dinonath Mullick (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 133).

Mr. A. Chowdhry and Babu Surat Chundra Rai Chowdhry for the Opposite Party.

This is a rule upon the Magistrate of Dinajpur to show cause why an order passed by the Deputy Magistrate of that district under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be set aside. The learned Judges in granting the rule observed as follows: "The main ground for the application is that one of the parties bound down to keep the peace is not a resident of the district, and as it may possibly be necessary to look at the [346] evidence on the record, we do not separate the case of the two applicants, but let the rule run in favour of both." One of the two petitioners, Shama Charan Chuckerbutty, is the suddernaib, and the other, Tarak Nath Ghose, is the tehsildar of one Ghanesham Babu, proprietor of certain villages situated within the district of Dinajpur. Shama Charan Chuckerbutty resides in the district of Maldah, while Tarak Nath Ghose lives in the district of Dinajpur. The Deputy Magistrate has found on the evidence that there is a dispute existing between these two persons on the one side and the tenants of the villages in question on the other, which is likely to cause a breach of the peace. These villages have been recently measured, and an attempt is being made by the proprietor, through his agents, the present petitioners, to enhance the rents of the tenants; and with the object of compelling the tenants to submit to their landlord's demand the petitioners assembled a large number of paiks and burkendazes, and attempted to overawe them by threats, show of force and other oppressive measures, and have thus, in the opinion of the Deputy Magistrate, committed various acts within the local limits of his jurisdiction, which show that they are likely to commit a breach of the peace therein; and he has accordingly bound them down to keep the peace for the period of one year.

As regards Shama Charan Chuckerbutty, Mr. Jackson has contended that, inasmuch as he habitually resides in the district of Maldah, the Magistrate of Dinajpur had no jurisdiction to institute proceedings and issue process against him under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code; and in support of this contention he has relied on the following cases: In the matter of the petition of Jai Prakash Lall (I. L. R., 6 All., 20), In the matter of the petition of Rajendra Chandra Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 737), and In the matter of the petition of Dinonath Mullick (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 133). We observe that the facts of these cases are not similar to those of the present case. In those cases it appears that the petitioners had committed no acts likely to cause a breach of the peace within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, who instituted proceedings against them under [347] section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code; whereas in the present case it is found that petitioners have committed various acts of this character within such limits.

It appears upon the record that Shama Charan, being deputed by the zemindar, came over to the Dinajpur district, committed various acts calculated to cause a breach of the peace, and was residing (though temporarily) within the local limits of that district at the time when the Magistrate received information of the probability of a breach of the peace, and instituted proceedings under section 107 of the Code Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate finds that "he was hovering about the district, or at least he did so in the months of Falgoon, Chyt, Bysack, Joisto and Assar." This would cover the whole of the period antecedent and subsequent to the institution of the proceedings. He means, as we understand, that Shama Charan was hovering in various parts of the district during these months. That being so, we are of opinion that the Magistrate had jurisdiction over him.

Section 107 says: "Whenever a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class receives information that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace, or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace, within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction, or that there is within such limits a person who is likely to commit a breach of the peace or do any wrongful acts as aforesaid in any place beyond such limits, the Magistrate may in manner hereinafter provided require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace for such period not exceeding one year as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix."

It appears to us that if, at the time when the Magistrate receives information and institutes proceedings, the accused person is residing within the local limits of his jurisdiction, he would have authority to proceed against him under section 107, though that person may be habitually or permanently residing in another jurisdiction. To hold otherwise would lead to various difficulties and inconveniences. No doubt, there are observations in the cases cited before us which may at first sight seem to be opposed [348] to this view; but having regard to the facts of those cases we do not think that those observations militate against the opinion which we have formed in this case.

As regards Tarak Nath Ghose no such question of jurisdiction arises.

Upon these grounds we are of opinion that this rule should be discharged.

C. E. G. Rule discharged.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 24th February, 1897.
PRESENT:
MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

Srinath Roy
Godadhur Das.*

Deposit of Title-deeds—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 59—Equitable mortgage—Immoveable properties situated partly outside the limits of Calcutta—Transaction in Calcutta—Decree for sale—Form of decree—Practice.

The defendant borrowed money from the plaintiff in Calcutta by deposit of title deeds relating to immoveable properties situated partly inside and partly outside the limits of the town of Calcutta. In a suit by the plaintiff it was held that the transaction having taken place in Calcutta the mortgage was valid as an equitable mortgage under section 59† of the Transfer of Property Act, though some of the properties were situated outside the limits of the town, and that according to the practice of the Court the appropriate remedy in such a mortgage suit is a decree for sale.

THE facts of the case are these: One Godadhur Das borrowed a sum of Rs. 35,000 from Rajah Srinath Roy, and deposited with him in Calcutta the title deeds of premises No. 306, Upper Chitpore Road, No. 7, Shampookar Street, and No. 138, Baliaghata Street, and executed the following memorandum which was registered: "Having this day borrowed from you Rs. 35,000 I do hereby deposit with you the title deeds as collateral security for the repayment of the said sum." Of the abovenamed properties the first two are situate within and the third outside the town of Calcutta. On default by the defendant in repayment of the loan, the plaintiff having obtained leave under clause 12 of the Charter brought the present suit for recovery of his claim by sale of the properties mortgaged.

[349] At the hearing two questions arose: first—whether an equitable mortgage could be created with respect to properties situated outside the town of Calcutta; and, secondly, whether the mortgagee was entitled to a decree for sale.

Mr. Sen Gupta and Mr. C. R. Das for the Plaintiff.

No one appeared for the Defendant.

* Original Civil Suit No. 91 of 1896.

† [Sec. 59:—Where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses.

Mortgage when to be by assurance.

Where the principal money secured is less than one hundred rupees, a mortgage may be effected either by an instrument signed and attested as aforesaid, or (except in the case of a simple mortgage) by delivery of the property.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid mortgages made in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi and Rangoon, by delivery to a creditor or his agent of documents of title to immoveable property, with intent to create a security thereon.]

Mr. Sen Gupta.—The mortgage is valid under section 59, paragraph 3 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). That section lays down no restriction as to the situation of the property. All that is necessary to the validity of a mortgage contemplated under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act is that the deposit of title deeds should be made within the towns mentioned in that section. See Madho Das v. Ramkissen (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 238), Manekji v. Rustomji Naserwanji Mistry (I. L. R., 14 Bom., 269). Besides, the plaintiff in this case has obtained leave under clause 12 of the Charter. As regards the second question as to whether the mortgagee was entitled to a decree for sale. In England an equitable mortgagee by deposit of title deeds, whether such a deposit was accompanied by a memorandum in writing or not, was entitled only to foreclosure and not to sale. See James v. James (L. R., 16 Eq., 153). But now however, under the Conveyancing Act of 1881, 44 and 45 Vict., c. 41, section 25, an equitable mortgagee may obtain a decree for sale in lieu of foreclosure. If the mortgage in the present case is valid under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) the mortgagee is entitled to the same rights as an ordinary mortgagee under section 67 of that Act.

Jenkins, J.—In this case the documents of title relating to the immoveable property mentioned in the plaint were delivered with intent to create as security thereon, and as the transaction took place in the town of Calcutta I am of opinion that a good mortgage was thereby created, though some of the properties are situate outside the limits of the town. The only question is as to the appropriate remedy. I was referred to the statement in a text book that the practice in mortgages of this class is regulated by the English practice, and if that statement [350] were correct then the remedy would be foreclosure. It seems, however, that the practice in this Court has for a long series of years been to decree a sale, and I accordingly will make a decree in that form. I think it would be right to preface the decree with a statement to the following effect: "It appearing that the documents of title relating to the immoveable properties in question and mentioned in the plaint have been delivered to the plaintiff or his agent with intent to create security thereon. Declare, &c."

By this means it will appear on the face of the decree that the case comes within the last paragraph of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Attorney for the Plaintiff: Babu Ashutosh Dhur.

Review—Appeal—Appeal from original decree—High Court Rules, Part II, Chapter VIII, Rule 17—Deposit of cost for paper book—Order of dismissal for default—Procedure to set aside such order—Civil Procedure Code (1882), sections 623, 626.

A decree of a Division Bench of the High Court, dismissing an appeal for default in depositing the estimated costs of preparation of the paper book under Rule 17 of the High Court Rules, Part II, Chapter VIII, can only be set aside by an order under section 626 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Ramhari Sahu v. Madan Mohan Mitter (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 339), so far as it decides the contrary, is wrongly decided.

THE question referred to the Full Bench in this case arose in a rule upon the application of the petitioners for restoration of an appeal from an original decree, which was dismissed for default [351] in the payment of costs for the preparation of the paper book in the appeal The appeal was dismissed on the 29th July 1895, under High Court Rules, Part II, Chap. VIII, Rule 17, by a Division Bench consisting of PRINSEP and NORRIS, JJ., who were at that time hearing cases from "the Patna Group" of districts; and the present application was made to TREVELYAN and BEVERLEY, JJ., who subsequently took charge of those districts, and the rule was granted by them. At the hearing of the rule the opposite party objected that the prayer of the appellants was really one to set aside the decree, and that this could be asked for only by way of review under section 626 of the Civil Procedure Code, before Mr. Justice PRINSEP, Mr. Justice NORRIS having then retired from the Bench of the High Court. The Bench hearing the rule were of opinion that the objection was well founded, but as there was a ruling of another Division Bench to † [Sec. 626:—Application when rejected. If it appears to the Court that there is not sufficient ground for a review, it shall reject the application.

(b) No such application shall be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence which the applicant alleges was not within his knowledge, or could not be adduced by him, when the decree or order was passed, without strict proof of such allegation.]

the contrary in the case of Ramhari Sahu v. Madan Mohan Mitter (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 344) the present case was referred to a Full Bench.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the order of reference by TREVELYAN and BEVERLEY, JJ., which was as follows:—

"On the 28th March 1894 a decree was made by the second Subordinate Judge of Chupra in a suit in which one Fatimunnissa was, amongst others, a defendant. She died on the 30th of April 1894, leaving her surviving Mahomed Asgar, her husband, an adult son, Athur Hosain, and three minor sons. The heirs of Fatimunnissa were, by an order of this Court, dated the 25th July 1894, permitted to prosecute an appeal in this Court, from the above-mentioned decree, Mahomed Asgar acting as next friend for his minor sons. Mahomed Asgar died on the 15th September 1894, and by an order of this Court, dated 7th of February 1895, his sons were substituted in his place, and his adult son was appointed 'guardian ad litem' of the minors.

"On the 9th of April 1895, an estimate for the costs of preparing the paper-book, amounting to Rs. 782 was served. On the 23rd of May the case first came on the loazima list, and was then postponed for a fortnight to allow the appellant to put in an affidavit.

"On the 1st June 1895, Athur Hosain affirmed an affidavit, [352] saying 'I am dangerously ill, and cannot do any work and cannot walk, hence I am unable to try to search for money for the expenses of the suit in appeal in High Court at Calcutta.'

"On the 7th June 1895, this Court, doubting the truth of the affidavit, allowed fifteen days' time for the deposit of the money, and in their order the learned Judges stated that, 'If within that time the deposit is not made, it will become necessary for us to consider whether the interests of the minors should not be entrusted to other hands for the purposes of this suit.' The money not having been paid, the same learned Judges on the 15th of July directed the case to be placed on the board for orders, on the 29th July. On the latter date the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution by a Division Bench consisting of PRINSEP and NORRIS, JJ., and a decree was accordingly drawn up and signed.

"On the 29th August Athur Hosain died, having, it is now said, been ill since March.

"On the 6th February 1896, the minors represented by a new next friend asked us to restore the case and to permit them to deposit the necessary money. We issued a rule which we have now heard. There are three questions to be determined—

"First.—Have we power to make an order of this kind?

"Second.—Is the application barred by limitation?

"Third.—Do the merits of the case justify an order?

"We have no difficulty in dealing with the last two questions. Section 7 of Act XV of 1877, in our opinion, saves the limitation, and on the merits we should be inclined to make the order.

"It is contended that an order of the kind asked for can only be made by way of review, i.e., under section 626 of the Civil Procedure Code. If that contention be right we have no jurisdiction, and the application can, under section 627, be dealt with by Mr. Justice PRINSEP only.

"Our attention has been called to a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in Letters Patent Appeal No. 6 of 1895 (I.L.R., 23 Cal., 339) on the 13th March 1895, in which it was held that an application of this kind did not amount to an application for a review, but could be properly made under section 558 of the Civil Procedure Code. In a subsequent judgment (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 344) in the case by two out of the [353] three learned Judges who decided the Letters Patent Appeal, it was held that the application should be regarded as one under Rule 17 of Chapter VIII of the Rules of this Court (Appellate Side).

"In our opinion the decree of the 29th of July can only be set aside by an order under section 626 of the Civil Procedure Code. A decree can only be set aside as far as we are aware in a way expressly provided by law. Except under section 626 there is, as far as we can see, no such provision applicable to the present case.

"It is, in our opinion, desirable that the question whether we have any power to make an order should be determined by a Full Bench. We, therefore, refer this case for the decision of a Full Bench."

Babu Harendra Narayan Mitra (for Moulvie Serajul Islam) and Syed Mahomed Tahir for the Petitioners.

Babu Kali Kishen Sen for the Opposite Party.

Babu Harendra Narayan Mitra contended that the application could be granted under section 558 read in connection with Rule 17, or at all events under Rule 30. [PETHERAM, C.J.—Did the appellants appear on the 29th July, when the appeal was dismissed? Babu Kali Kishen Sen, Vakil for the opposite party, pointed out that the appellant's Vakil did appear and ask for time.]

The order of the Court (PRINSEP and NORRIS, JJ.) is not a "decree" under section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Jagarnath Singh v. Budhan (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 115). [O'KINEALY, J.—See section 158. The Court had not the materials to decide the case and dismissed it.] The dismissal by default is by an order and not by a decree. Munsab Ali v. Nihal Chand (I.L.R., 15 All., 359). No doubt the dismissal in that case was for a default under section 556, but the provision of section 558 was applicable here, as was decided in Ramhari Sahu v. Madan Mohan Mitter (I. L R., 23 Cal., 339). [PETHERAM, C. J.—There is no provision there for setting aside the order in this case.] I submit that section 558 and Rule 17 must be read together, but if that could not be done, Rule 30 is sufficiently wide to authorize an order for [354] receiving the money now. [MACPHERSON, J.—After the decree?] An order may be made so long as the matter is pending. The Rule does not lay down any limitation A liberal construction of section 558 would make Rule 17 more consistent. Section 623 does not apply.

The opposite party was not called upon.

The judgment of the Full Bench (Petheram C. J., and O'Kinealy, Macpherson, Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows: —

In March 1894, a decree was given against one Fatimunnissa and others. She died and her heirs prosecuted an appeal in this Court. In April 1895 they were called upon to deposit Rs. 782 as costs for the preparation of the Paper-Book. The money was not paid, and after some delay the appeal was on the 29th July 1895 dismissed for want of prosecution under Rule 17 of the Rules for the preparation of Paper-Books in appeals from Original Decrees. An application was then made to a Divisional Bench of this Court on the 6th February 1896, and the Judges of that Bench, being of opinion that the decision and decree of the 29th July could only be set aside by review, referred the case to a Full Bench, as they disagreed with the judgment of another Divisional Bench of this Court in Ramhari Sahu v. Madan Mohan Mitter (I.L.R., 23 Cal., 339).

Now, under the Code there are only two ways known to the law by which a judgment and decree of a Divisional Bench of this Court can be set aside in India. These two methods are described in sections 558 and 623 of the Code.

The present case is clearly not one in which default was made in appearing at the hearing of the case, for the record shows that the pleaders on both sides were in attendance and heard. It seems to us, therefore, that the view expressed in the reference is correct, and that the case of Ramhari Sahu v. Madan Mohan Mitter (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 339) so far as it decides the contrary is wrongly decided.

[The rule was discharged by the Division Bench on the 15th February 1897.]

[355] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 1st January, 1897.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Bhiram Ali Shaik Shikdar............Defendant

versus

Gopi Kanth Shaha............Plaintiff.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 244—Question for Court executing decree—Issue raised by defendant in separate suit—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections, 65 and 73—Right of occupancy, Transferability of.

Section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code bars a suit brought for the determination of certain questions specified therein, but does not bar the trial of any issue involved in those questions if the issue is raised at the instance of a defendant in a suit brought against him. Basti Ram v. Fattu (I. L. R., 8 All., 146) distinguished.

In the absence of custom or local usage to the contrary, a raiyati holding in which the raiyat has only a right of occupancy is not saleable at the instance of the occupancy raiyat or any creditor of his other than his landlord seeking to obtain satisfaction of his decree for arrears of rent.

THE lands in suit, in which the defendant had a mere right of occupancy, were sold in execution of a money decree obtained by the plaintiff against him and purchased by the plaintiff himself on the 21st August 1885. The plaint set forth that the plaintiff had been recognized as a tenant by the proprietors, and that he had obtained formal possession in 1886, but had failed to obtain actual possession. The suit was for khas possession with mesne profits.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1349 of 1895, against decree of A. Pennell, Esq., District Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 4th of May 1895, modifying the decree of Babu Krishna Chandra Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 30th of July 1894.

The defence (so far as it is material) was that the defendant had no saleable interest in the property, and that the plaintiff did not therefore acquire any interest by his purchase.

The Court of First Instance dismissed the suit. That decision was reversed on appeal by the Lower Appellate Court, and the defendant brought this appeal to the High Court.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckravarti for the Appellant.

[356] Babu Saroda Charan Mitter and Babu Promotho Nath Sen for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

This was a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent to recover possession of some land constituting a raiyati holding of the defendant with the right of occupancy, on the allegation that the plaintiff purchased the same at a sale in execution of a decree for money obtained by him against the defendant, the plaintiff further alleging that he had, sometime after the sale, obtained from the landlord a settlement of the same.

The defence in substance was that the holding in question was not transferable by sale, and that the plaintiff, therefore, acquired no right by his purchase

The first Court found for the defendant, and dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Lower Appellate Court has reversed the decision of the first Court and given the plaintiff a decree.

In second appeal it is contended for the defendant that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong, inasmuch as the holding in question, being merely a raiyati holding with a right of occupancy, was not transferable, there being no evidence of any custom in favour of the transferability of such holdings, and that the Lower Appellate Court ought to have held that the plaintiff had acquired no right by his purchase. On the side of the plaintiff-respondent, it was contended, in the first place, that section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure was a bar to the defendant's raising the question whether the plaintiff acquired any right by his auction purchase, and, in the second place, that, according to the law as enacted in the Bengal Tenancy Act, a right of occupancy is transferable, unless the transfer is objected to by the landlord. The two questions, therefore, that arise for determination in this appeal are: first, whether section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a bar to the defendants' contention that the plaintiff acquired no right by his auction purchase; and, second, whether a raiyati holding in which the raiyat has only a right of occupancy is transferable in the absence of any custom or local usage in favour of its transferability.

[357] We are of opinion that the first question must be answered in the negative. In support of the contention that section 244 was a bar to the suit, the case of Basti Ram v. Fattu (I. L. R., 8 All., 146) was cited. But that case is quite distinguishable from the present. There the judgment-debtor whose occupancy holding had been sold brought a suit to establish his tenant-right to the holding notwithstanding the sale, on the ground that an occupancy right was not saleable by law, and it was held that he was not entitled to maintain the suit, section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure being a bar to such a suit. In the present case, the party who raises the objection that the plaintiff has acquired no right by his auction-purchase because the holding sold was a non-transferable one, has not brought any suit. He is only raising that objection in defence to the suit which the other side has brought, and section 244 is not, in our opinion, any bar to this plea being raised by the defendant in his defence. All that section 244 enacts is that certain questions therein specified shall be determined by the order of the Court executing the decree and not by separate suit; and granting that the question that the defendant now raises was one that came within the scope of section 244, still it does not follow that a defendant is precluded from raising that question by the provisions of section 244 when the question was not raised in the execution proceedings and has not been determined. The view that we take of section 244 is that it bars a suit brought for the determination of certain questions, but it does not bar the trial of any issue involved in those questions, if the issue is raised at the instance of a defendant in a suit brought against him. In our opinion section 244 in this respect differs from section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which not only bars the trial of a suit or of an issue where the suit or the issue has actually been previously heard and determined, but also the trial of an issue which might and ought to have been raised in a previous suit by either party. Of course it would have been different if the question that is now raised had been raised in the proceedings under section 244 and determined. But then the trial of the issue would have been barred, not under section 244 by its own force, but under section 13 as being a matter that was res judicata, a decision under section 244 having the force of a decree. If section 244 was a bar [358] to anything in a case like this, it would be a bar to the suit brought by the plaintiff, for it was competent to the plaintiff to have obtained a decision of the question that is now raised by instituting proceedings under section 244.

The answer to the second question must depend in the first instance upon the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which governs this case. Now referring to the chapter relating to occupancy rights, that is Chapter V of the Act, we find that while section 26 expressly makes occupancy rights heritable, there is no provision in this chapter, such as we find in the two preceding chapters relating to tenures and raiyati holdings at fixed rates, declaring occupancy holdings to be transferable. This omission, to our minds, clearly indicates that the Legislature did not intend to make occupancy rights transferable. Great stress was laid upon section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as showing that the holding of an occupancy raiyat is intended to be made transferable; and section 73 of the Act was also referred to as pointing to the same conclusion. But we are of opinion that neither section 65 nor section 73 bears out the contention of the learned Vakil for the respondent. Section 65 enacts that where a tenant has an occupancy right, he shall not be liable to ejectment for arrears of rent, but his holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the rent thereof, and the rent shall be a first charge thereon. That, no doubt, makes an occupancy holding saleable at the instance of the landlord in execution of a decree for rent; but though that is so, it does not follow from that that an occupancy holding is saleable at the instance of the occupancy raiyat or of any creditor of his other than his landlord seeking to obtain satisfaction of his decree for arrears of rent. Such an inference is, in our opinion, clearly negatived by the absence in Chapter V of any provision relating to the transferability of occupancy holdings. Nor does section 73 warrant any contrary conclusion, seeing that there are cases in which occupancy raiyats may transfer their holdings without the consent of the landlord; we mean cases in which such holdings are transferable by custom or local usage. Of course, if occupancy holdings were transferable under the law as it stood before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, they would continue to be transferable, as there is nothing in the Act to the contrary. If, on the other hand, they were not transferable [359] before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, then, as the result of our examination of the Bengal Tenancy Act shows, they have not been rendered transferable by that enactment, and the old law in that respect continues unaltered.

This brings us to the consideration of the old law on the subject; and that need not detain us long, as the old law on the subject is clearly and conclusively laid down by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Norendro Narain Roy v. Ishan Chundra Sen (13 B. L. R., 274 : 22 W. R., 22). In that case it was held that a right of occupancy was a right that was personal to the raiyat, and and could not be transferred by sale. It may be anomalous that a landlord may, in satisfaction of his decree for arrears of rent, sell an occupancy holding, and yet neither the occupancy raiyat nor any creditor of his can sell it. But if there is any anomaly, we must take it that the anomaly has been intentionally created. It may well be that the Legislature thought it desirable not to make occupancy holdings liable to be cancelled for arrears of rent, as they were under the old law, and, as a compensation to the landlord, it was enacted that the landlord may bring occupancy holdings to sale for the satisfaction of any decree for arrears of rent due thereon; and yet the Legislature might have thought it undesirable to make occupancy holdings freely transferable by the occupancy raiyat, or at the instance of his creditors, apprehending that the effect of such free transferability would, in many instances, be to place the holdings of cultivating raiyats in the possession of money-lenders, and to place the raiyats themselves at their mercy.

It remains now to consider, the effect of the landlord's consent to the transfer under which the plaintiff claims. Ordinarily, the only persons interested in impugning the validity of the transfer of an occupancy holding are the occupancy raiyat and the landlord; and where the former transfers his holding and the latter accepts the transferee in the place of the former tenant, there may arise no difficulty in the way of the transfer being given effect to. But that case is very different from the one now before us, where the transfer has been effected by compulsory sale at the instance of the raiyat's creditor, and the landlord's recognition has been obtained years after the transfer, although since the purchase he had been receiving rent from the former tenant. For [360] all these reasons we are of opinion that the second question raised in the case should also be answered in the negative. The result is, that the decree of the Lower Appellate Court must be set aside and that of the first Court restored with costs in this Court and in the Court of Appeal below.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 28th January, 1897.
PRESENT:
MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE GORDON.

Aukhoy Chandra Hati............Petitioner
Calcutta Municipal Corporation............Opposite Party.*

Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (Bengal Act II of 1888), sections 335, 336—Date of taking out license.

In a case where the owner of a cowshed delayed taking out a license under section 335 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (Bengal Act II of 1888), until the end of the month of May;

Held, that under the section as it stands there is nothing to compel a licensee to take out his license before 1st June in every year.

THE petitioner in this case who was a goala was charged before the Deputy Magistrate of Sealdah by the Conservancy Inspector of Ward No. 4 of the Calcutta Municipality with keeping cows on 20th and 21st May 1896 in an unlicensed cowshed, and that he kept his shed on those two days in a noxious state, and had thereby committed an offence under sections 335 and 337 of the Calcutta Consolidated Municipal Act. In defence the petitioner did not deny the second allegation of the prosecution, but alleged that as regards the first allegation he had applied to the Municipality for a license in accordance with the provisions of the section. The Deputy Magistrate of Sealdah sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50 for committing an offence under section 335 of the Calcutta Municipal Act.

Babu Boidonath Dutt and Hari Charan Sarkal for the Petitioner.- The prosecution was premature. The alleged offence under section 335 is said to have been committed on the 20th and 21st May 1896. Under section 335 of the Calcutta Municipal [361] Act the owner of a cowshed is allowed time until 1st June in every year to take out his license. In this case the application for a license had already been made. This applies to all licenses and not merely to old licenses.

Mr. Barrow (Babu Nogendranath Mitter with him) for the Opposite Party.— No doubt paragraph 2 of section 335 allows an owner time up to the 1st June in every year to take out a license, but this only applies to a renewal of a license and not to cases where an owner has only just started keeping cows for profit. If that were so, an owner of cows might keep them in an unlicensed shed for the first five months of every year, and then abandon them without taking out a license. This was not the intention of the Legislature. Paragraph 1 of the section expressly prohibits any person from keeping any animal for profit, except in a place licensed by the Commissioners, that no place shall be licensed unless the conditions prescribed by the last paragraph of the section have been complied with, and that the penalty mentioned in section 336 is incurred whenever any animal is kept without a license. The license must be taken out before such animals are allowed to be kept. The petitioner has never taken out a license before and cannot defend himself by contending that he did not do so until 1st June of that year.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:—

The only question involved in this rule is what is the true construction of paragraphs 1 and 2 of section 335 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act, Bengal Act II of 1888.

The petitioner has been convicted under sections 335 and 336 of the Act of keeping cows for profit in an unlicensed shed on the 20th and 21st May 1896, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 and Rs. 1-8 as costs.

Section 335 runs as follows:—

"No person shall keep any animal for profit within Calcutta except in a place licensed by the Commissioners. Such license shall be taken out yearly before the first day of June in every year. The word 'animal' in this section shall include an elephant, camel, horse, mule, donkey, horned beast, sheep, goat and pig.

[362] "The Commissioners in meeting shall determine the places where such animals may be kept, and the rules as to paving, drainage, water-supply, cubical space, light and other conditions, subject to which the license may be granted, and may impose an annual fee not exceeding Rs. 10 for such license, and no place shall be licensed until the conditions imposed have been complied with."

It was contended on behalf of the petitioner before the Deputy Magistrate who tried him, and it has also been contended before us, that the conviction is illegal, because by paragraph 2 of section 335 he was allowed time up to the 1st June 1896 to take out a license, and that therefore the prosecution for keeping an unlicensed shed in the month of May was premature.

It has, however, been argued by the other side that paragraph 1 of the section expressly prohibits any person from keeping any animal for profit except in a place licensed by the Commissioners; that no place shall be licensed unless the conditions prescribed by the last paragraph of the section have been complied with; and that the penalty mentioned in section 336 is incurred whenever any animal is kept without a license. That section runs thus:—

"Whoever, being the owner of any land, permits any animals to be kept thereon in contravention of the provisions of the last preceding section, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 100, and to a further fine not exceeding Rs. 20, for each day during which the offence is continued after he has been convicted of such offence, and the person keeping the animals shall also be liable to a similar fine," and so on.

The section says: "In contravention of the provisions of the last preceding section." The question is whether by keeping animals without a license on the 20th and 21st May, the petitioner contravened the provisions of section 335.

No doubt, the law prescribes that no person shall keep any animal except in a place licensed by the Commissioners; but what we have to see is whether it is intended that the license must be taken out before such animal can be allowed to be kept, and whether the penalty provided by section 336 is incurred whenever a party keeps an animal for profit without a license; or does not [363] the law allow such license being taken out at any time before the first day of June in every year, and the penalty is not incurred, unless the license is not obtained by the end of the month of May.

With a view to enable us to arrive at a correct conclusion upon this question, we have examined several other sections relating to licenses for carriages and carts, profession, animals, slaughter house, market, and druggists' shop. We desire to refer particularly to section 368 (druggists' shop), sections 94 to 96 (carts), sections 87 to 90 (profession), sections 341 to 346 (slaughter houses).

It appears to us that, in cases where the Legislature thought that the penalty should be incurred immediatly when the act is done without a license, they have unmistakeably expressed it in the Act (e.g., section 341), but where they considered that persons might well be allowed to do acts subject to the license being taken out, and that some time might properly be given to them for obtaining such license, they have indicated their intention in different language and manner (e. g., sections 368, 335 and 336).

The question no doubt is not free from difficulty, but it seems to us, after the best consideration we have been able to give to it, that section 335 was not intended to bear the meaning which the prosecution would have us to accept, and that when the Legislature have thought it fit to accord to persons the liberty of taking out licenses before the 1st of June in every year, the penalty provided by section 336 is not incurred, unless such license is not obtained by the end of the month of May; otherwise there would really be no object in inserting paragraph 2 in section 335.

Upon these grounds we think that the conviction is wrong and that this rule should be made absolute. The fine and costs, if realized, will be refunded.

C. E. G. Rule made absolute.

[364] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 16th February, 1897.

PRESENT :

MR JUSTICE SALE.

T. Barlow and others

versus

Gobindram and another.*

Trade-mark—Right of exclusive user—Infringement—Combination of numerals as a trade-mark.

The question of the right to the exclusive user of a trade-mark or trade number is largely if not entirely, a question of fact, and the question whether it exists in any given case must depend upon whether the evidence in that case is sufficient to show such an association or connection between the mark or the number and the firm which uses it as to indicate to the ordinary purchasers in the market that the goods are the goods of that particular firm.

To show that a particular trade number has acquired a reputation in the market, and that purchasers buy the goods by that number and not from an examination of the nature or quality of the cloth, is not sufficient to establish the right of exclusive user of that number.

* Original Civil Suit No. 410 of 1896.

There must be such an association between the number and the firm's name as to indicate in the understanding of the public that the goods bearing that number came from that particular firm.

The right of exclusive user of a name or a number as a trade-mark is not an absolute and unqualified right which would entitle the owner to prevent another person from using it under all circumstances. It is only when the use of that name or number deceives or is reasonably likely to deceive the public that it can be interfered with or prevented. There must be a reasonable probability of purchasers being deceived, it is not enough to show a mere possibility of deception.

THE plaintiffs, who are merchants and importers, carrying on business in Calcutta, have for many years imported black-beetled cloth, and are by far the largest importers in Calcutta of this particular variety of cloth. They alleged they were entitled to the exclusive use of the number 9000 as a mark for distinguishing the above variety of cloth and as indicating that the same was of a certain quality and of their importation. The mark on the cloth imported by the plaintiffs consisted of the following combination, viz.,—a balloon ticket attached to the cloth with the name of the plaintiffs printed on the ticket, and under it the number 9000 stamped on the cloth; and that on the cloth im-[365]ported by the defendants consisted of a butterfly ticket with the name of the importers in nagri character printed on it and the name of the importing firm and the number 9000 stamped on the cloth.

The only infringement complained of in this suit was the unauthorized use of the number 9000 in respect of cloth not imported by the plaintiffs. No reference was made in the plaint to any other mark or design used by them in combination with the number 9000, and no suggestion was made that there was any imitation by the defendants of the general combination of marks used by the plaintiffs to distinguish their goods.

The plaintiffs based their claim on two allegations: (1) that they used the number 9000 to denote that the cloth bearing the number was of a certain quality and was of their importation; and (2) that the number had come to be recognized in the market as representing the quality and importation of the cloth.

The defendants are dealers in cloth who have been in the habit of purchasing black-beetled cloth from various firms in Calcutta, (and amongst them from Messrs. Hoare, Miller & Co), and of selling the same by retail in the Calcutta market. In September 1895 the plaintiffs received information that the defendants were selling the above cloth in the market bearing the number 9000 imported by the firm of Hoare, Miller & Co. The defendants admitted this, but denied that the plaintiffs had any right to the exclusive use of the number 9000 as a distinguishing mark for the goods imported by them, and they also denied that in selling and disposing of the goods marked in the manner aforesaid they infringed any right to which the plaintiffs were entitled. This suit was brought for the purpose of restraining the defendants by an injunction from selling or dealing with any black-beetled cloth other than that imported by the plaintiffs, which is stamped or impressed or marked with the number 9000 or any colourable imitation of such number.

Mr. Hill, Sir Griffith Evans, Mr. Hyde and Mr. Peacock for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Jackson, Mr. T. A. Apcar and Mr. Caspersz for the Defendants.

[366] Sir Griffith Evans.— Plaintiffs claim the right of exclusive user of the number 9000. Numerals can be used as a trade-mark. See the definition of "trade description" in section 3 of the Merchandise Marks Act 1887 (50 and 51 Vict., C. 28). In Ralli v. Fleming (I. L R., 3 Cal., 417) it was held that a combination of numerals should be protected as a trade-mark. The plaintiffs' cloth bearing the number 9000 has gained a reputation in the market as regards quality and origin of importation, and they are entitled to restrain others from using that number as their trade-mark. Somerville v. Schembri (L. R., 12 Ap. Ca., 453). The law laid down in the last case was adopted by KEKEWICH, J., in Humphries & Co. v. The Taylor Drug Co. (59 L. T., 820). The adoption of the number 9000 by the defendants is likely to deceive the ordinary purchasers in the market, and therefore they are guilty of infringing the plaintiffs' right of exclusive user.

Mr. Jackson for the Defendants.—A mere numeral or combination of numerals standing alone cannot constitute a trade-mark, see Sebastian on Trade Marks (3rd Ed.) p. 86. Section 64 of the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vict. C. 57), and section 3 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 and 51 Vict. C. 28). There is no evidence that the number 9000 indicated that the goods marked with it were imported by the plaintiffs, nor have they been able to show that the use of the number by the defendants was likely to deceive the public in the market. It has not been proved that the user was calculated to deceive, or that there was actual intention to deceive. Johnston v. Ewing (L. R., 7 Ap. Ca., 219), Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog (L. R, 8 Ap. Ca., 15), Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. (11 H. L C, 523), Robinson v. Finlay (L. R., 9 Ch. D., 487).

Sale, J.—The plaintiffs in this suit claim to be entitled to the exclusive use of the number 9000 as a mark for distinguishing certain cloth known in the Calcutta market as black-beetled cloth which is imported by them into Calcutta, and they seek to restrain the defendants by the injunction of this Court from selling or dealing with any black-beetled cloth other than that imported by the plaintiffs, which is stamped or impressed or marked [367] with the number 9000, or any colourable imitation of such number. The defendants admit that they purchased and obtained delivery of, from Messrs. Hoare, Miller & Co., a consignment of five cases of black-beetled cloth marked with a certain design, a part of which design was the number 9000, and that they have since sold and disposed of the said goods in the Calcutta market. They, however, deny that the plaintiffs have a right to the exclusive use of the number 9000 as a distinguishing mark for the goods imported by them, and they also deny that in selling and disposing of the goods marked in the manner aforesaid they infringed any right to which the plaintiffs are entitled. The plaintiffs are merchants and importers carrying on business in Calcutta, and the defendants are cloth dealers who have been in the habit for some years of purchasing black-beetled cloth which is known in the Indian market as kala kapra from various firms in Calcutta (and among them from Messrs. Hoare, Miller & Co.), and of selling the cloth so obtained by them by retail in the Calcutta Market.

The plaintiffs have for many years imported black-beetled cloth into the country, and are by far the largest importers in Calcutta of this particular variety of cloth which is principally used to cover umbrellas. Formerly umbrellas were commonly imported into this country in the finished state. It is now very generally the practice to manufacture them locally, with the result that the demand for the cloth required in the manufacture has largely increased.

The plaintiffs adopted the practice generally followed in the piece-goods trade of distinguishing black-beetled cloth imported by them by various marks and designs, sometimes used in combination with numbers and sometimes without numbers. It does not appear that the plaintiffs have for the purpose of distinguishing black-beetled cloth imported by them ever used numbers alone and independently of some object design. Mr. Sutcliffe, who is an assistant in the plaintiffs' firm, and who since he arrived in this country in December 1891 has been in charge of the piece-goods department, states in his evidence that the plaintiffs use some sixty different numbers for distinguishing black-beetled cloth imported by them; that all these numbers are used [368] in combination with some with distinctive object design, and that besides these numbers sometimes object designs are used to distinguish this cloth without any numbers at all A considerable portion of the business in black-beetled cloth done by the plaintiffs consists in importing cloth upon the orders or indents of native dealers or shopkeepers, who again sell the articles to purchasers in the market who frequently are the ultimate consumers, that is to say people who manufacture umbrellas, or are in some way engaged in that trade; sometimes the purchasers are up-country dealers or their agents. It is not, I gather from the evidence, the plaintiffs' practice in their business to distinguish a particular quality or description of cloth always by the same object design or combination of object design and number. Different numbers and different object designs are frequently used to distinguish importations of cloth which are identically the same in quality, kind and measurement. For example, when the plaintiffs are importing the same quality of cloth for different dealers, although the cloth so imported may be the same in every respect, it is the plaintiffs' rule to stamp or impress the different consignments with different numbers, and sometimes with different object designs. In this way the use of a particular number is confined to the importation made for a particular dealer. It is explained that this practice is adopted to prevent dealers who import cloth through the plaintiffs from competing with and underselling each other in the market.

The plaintiffs commenced to use the number 9000, which is the subject-matter of the present suit, as a distinguishing mark for cloth imported by them in November 1894, and the circumstances under which this number came to be so used are as follows: Amongst the native dealers for whom the plaintiffs have imported black-beetled cloth is a man named Gunput Dass, who carries on business as a cloth seller at Monohur Dass's Katra in Burra Bazaar under the name of Sookdeb Seetaram. In July 1894 Gunput Dass in his firm of Sookdeb Seetaram required the plaintiffs to supply him with fifteen cases of black-beetled cloth of the same quality and description as the cloth imported by them bearing the number 9015. As a matter-of-fact, the cloth bearing this number was imported at the instance of [369] another dealer, and accordingly Sookdeb Seetaram was informed that the cloth could not be supplied to him bearing the number 9015, but that he might have the same cloth marked with the number 9000. To this Sookdeb Seetaram agreed, and the usual contract was entered into, and in due course the cloth impressed with the number 9000, and bearing what is known as the balloon ticket, arrived and was delivered by the plaintiffs to Sookdeb Seetaram.

It appears that cloth of the same quality and description is also imported by the plaintiffs distinguished by the balloon ticket only and without any number, and that it is also imported and delivered to different dealers under the numbers 9510, 9010 and 9025 in combination with certain tickets bearing object designs. Mr. Sutcliffe is unable to say whether the balloon ticket is one of these. But it is certain that the balloon ticket is used by the plaintiffs in combination with three different numbers 9000, 9300 and 815 to distinguish different varieties of black-beetled cloth.

In the month of September 1895 the plaintiffs received information from the broker employed by them that the defendants were selling black-beetled cloth in the market, bearing the number 9000 imported by the firm of Hoare, Miller & Co., and subsequently a piece of cloth was produced to the plaintiffs, which it was represented had been purchased at the defendants' shop by one Rambux who was employed for the purpose by Gunput Dass. The piece of cloth so produced to the plaintiffs bore not only the number 9000, though differing in colour and appearance from the number as stamped on the plaintiffs' cloth, but it also bore the plaintiffs' balloon ticket. Now, if the evidence in this case sufficiently established the tact that the defendants were selling black-beetled cloth stamped with the plaintiff' balloon ticket which bears on the face of it the design of a balloon and also the plaintiffs' name inscribed thereon, it would be strong to show that the defendants were endeavouring to pass off goods imported by Hoare, Miller &Co., as goods imported by the plaintiff. What the evidence is on this point, and what it proves, I shall have to consider presently. Meanwhile, inasmuch as the cloth which was being sold by the defendants undoubtedly bore the number 9000, and was undoubtedly imported by Messrs. Hoare, Miller [370] & Co., correspondence ensued on the subject of the use of the number 9000 by the latter firm, which resulted in Messrs. Hoare, Miller & Co, on being satisfied that the plaintiffs' user of the number 9000 was prior in time, giving an assurance to the plaintiffs that they would discontinue the use of the number without however admitting the plaintiffs' claim to the exclusive right of using that number.

On the 31st October 1895 the plaintiffs through their solicitors wrote to the defendants requiring them to desist from selling or otherwise dealing with black-beetled cloth bearing the number 9000, imported through firms other than themselves. No reply to this letter was received, and on the 29th of May 1896 the present suit was instituted.

It is to be observed that the only infringement complained of in this suit is the unauthorised use of the number 9000 in respect of cloth not imported by the plaintiffs. No reference is made in the plaint to any other mark or design used by them in combination with the number 9000, and no suggestion is made in the plaint that there has been any imitation by the defendants of the general combination of marks used by the plaintiffs to distinguish their goods.

It is necessary at the outset to see what the allegations in the plaint are on which the plaintiffs base their claim to the exclusive use of the number 9000 on black-beetled cloth imported by them.

These allegations are in substance two in number. The first is that the plaintiffs used the number to denote that the cloth which bore the number was of a certain quality, and that it was imported by them. This allegation shows the purpose and object the plaintiffs had in view in using this number.

The second proposition is that at the time of the infringement complained of, the number was recognized in the Calcutta market and by the dealers in different parts of India as representing that the cloth on which it was impressed had a particular reputation as to quality, and was imported by the plaintiffs.

In other words, what the plaintiffs say in the plaint is that the number was used by them to denote both the quality and the origin or importation of the cloth, and they go on to say that the [371] number is recognized in the market as representing the quality and importation of the cloth.

It is clear from the cases which have been referred to that both these propositions must be established as the foundation of the right of exclusive user.

In the Singer Manufacturing Company v. Loog (L. R., 8 Ap. Cal., 15) Lord WATSON at page 38 of the report says: "I think it is established by the evidence that the name "Singer" as used by the appellant-company and their predecessor in business Isaac Merritt Singer has long been and still is generally understood to denote sewing machines of their manufacture," and again: "It is clearly proved that a customer desiring to purchase a Singer Sewing Machine invariably understood that he was buying and expected to get, not merely a machine made by Mr. Singer or the company, but a machine of the same shape and character with one or other of the classes which he or they were known to be making at the time."

The learned Judge then proceeds: "The legal consequence of these facts is that the appellant company have a right, an exclusive right, to use the name 'Singer' as denoting sewing machines of their manufacture." In the sentences which follow the learned Judge points out what is necessary to constitute an infringement of this right of exclusive user. He says: "No one has a right to use the word for the purpose of passing off his goods as theirs, or even when he is innocent of that purpose to use it in any way calculated to deceive or aid in deceiving the public. None of the numerous authorities cited at the bar by the appellants' Counsel carry the exclusive right of a trader to a particular name beyond that limit. There is no authority, and in my opinion no principle for giving the trader any higher right. If he cannot allege and prove that the public are deceived or that there is reasonable probability of deception he has no right to interfere with the use of the name by others."

And so again in Somerville v. Schembri (L. R., 12 Ap. Ca., 453), the same learned Judge in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council made use of the following observations at page 457 of the report:—

"In the first of these cases the interest which a merchant or [372] manufacturer has in the trade-mark which he uses was thus defined by Lord CRANWORTH. 'The right which a manufacturer has in his trade-mark is the exclusive right to use it for the purpose of indicating where, or by whom, or at what manufactory the article to which it is affixed was manufactured.' As soon, therefore, as a trade-mark has been so employed in the market as to indicate to purchasers that the goods to which it is attached are the manufacture of a particular firm, it becomes, to that extent, the exclusive property of the firm, and no one else has a right to copy it, or even to appropriate any part of it, if by such appropriation unwary purchasers may be induced to believe that they are getting goods which were made by the firm to whom the trade-marks belong."

And, again, in Johnston v Orr Ewing (L R., 7 Ap. Ca., 219) Lord SELBORNE in dealing with the question of the right of the respondent to the exclusive user of the Two Elephant mark, after stating the effect of the evidence says at page 221 of the report: "Hence it happened that many of the customers who desired to purchase the plaintiffs' yarn in Bombay and the markets supplied from thence, were in the habit of knowing it as, and calling it, 'bhe hathi,' which in the Guzerati language means 'two elephants'; sometimes prefixing the word 'Graham's' and sometimes 'Sooneri,' which means 'golden.' It is in my opinion clear upon the evidence that these words 'bhe hathi' so used (whether alone or not) had reference to the device upon the plaintiffs' ticket, that they were used to describe the plaintiffs' goods, and those only, and that any customer or native dealer in Bombay or the districts thence supplied, when he asked for 'bhe hathi' yarn, would be asking for the yarn exported by the plaintiffs and bearing their trade-mark."

The learned Judge then adds: "The plaintiffs' title to their own trade-mark being clearly made out, the only question is whether the defendants have infringed it." The question then of the right to the exclusive user of a trade name, or trade number is largely, if not entirely, a question of fact, and the question whether it exists in any given case must depend upon whether the evidence in that case is sufficient to show such a connection or association between the [373] name or the number and the firm which uses it as to indicate to the ordinary purchasers in the market into whose hands the goods marked with the name or number may come that the goods are the goods of that particular firm.

It is necessary, therefore, to turn to the evidence in this case to see whether such an association of the number 9000 with black-beetled cloth imported by the plaintiffs' firm has been made out so as to show that this number appearing on that cloth is in effect a representation to the ordinary purchaser that the cloth bearing that number belongs to or has been imported by the plaintiffs.

The evidence which has been given in respect of the right of exclusive user of the number 9000 claimed by the plaintiffs falls under two heads: First, there is the direct evidence bearing on the user of the number 9000 by the plaintiffs and the reputation it bears in the market as applied to black-beetled cloth, and next there is a very large body of evidence dealing with the practice as to the use of numbers and their signification in the piece-goods trade generally, and to the meaning and use of a variety of numbers used in that trade. All this body of evidence last mentioned seems to me to have but a very remote bearing on the points at issue in the case. Both sides, I regret to say, have insisted upon appealing to the practices and usages prevailing in the piece-goods trade generally, and the result has been that a great many side-issues and remote questions have been discussed and evidence given thereon, which has led to an unnecessarily protracted hearing. Indeed, much of the evidence which has been adduced in this case only serves to show and to emphasize the fact that no general rule as to the right of exclusive use of numbers can be established from particular instances applicable to all the various numbers used in the piece-goods trade Each case must depend upon its own particular facts, and it is impossible for the Court to form or to express any opinion as to rights of persons who are not parties to this suit, as regards particular numbers, when the facts and circumstances relative to the use of those numbers are not fully before the Court.

I propose therefore only dealing with the evidence so far as it bears directly on the use of the number 9000 and its reputation and meaning in the market in connection with the black-beetled [374] cloth. I turn first to the evidence of Mr. Sutcliffe and the broker Proladh Roy Both these witnesses say that between the months of November 1894 and September 1895 there was in their opinion a rapid sale of the plaintiffs' number 9000 black-beetled cloth in the market, and that an active demand for this particular cloth rose. They say that the purchasers of black-beetled cloth purchase usually by the number affixed to the cloth, and not from an examination of the quality of the cloth, and that the number 9000 quickly acquired a reputation in the market. Mr. Sutcliffe says that by September 1895, which is the date of the alleged infringement by the defendants, the number had acquired in his opinion a good reputation.

But to show that a particular number has acquired a reputation in the market, and that purchasers buy the cloth by the number and not from an examination of the nature or quality of the cloth, is not sufficient to establish the right of exclusive user of that number, as MARKBY, J., has pointed out in his judgment in the case of Ralli v. Fleming (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 417), see p. 433 of the report. It is consistent with this evidence that the reputation which the number acquired was a reputation for quality only. It does not necessarily follow that the purchasing public showed a preference for the goods because the plaintiffs imported them, or that the number as understood by the public represented that the goods were in fact imported by the plaintiffs.

In cross-examination Mr. Sutcliffe was pressed as to the relative importance of the ticket bearing an object design and the number as used by the plaintiffs on their black-beetled cloth, and Mr. Sutcliffe in answer to a question said: "If the ticket were taken off I think a buyer would know our cloth from the number." I am sure that Mr. Sutcliffe was speaking particularly of the number 9000 when he gave this answer, but even if he did, it does not appear that Mr. Sutcliffe had any grounds for forming this opinion beyond that there seemed to him a demand for his firm's goods bearing that number.

So also the witness Proladh Roy says: "The number 9000 is well-known in the Bazar.

[375] "Q. What does the number indicate?

"A. It indicates that the cloth is Barlow's."

This again is the expression of an opinion only, and its value must depend upon the grounds on which it is based.

It does not appear that this witness had any better basis for his opinion than Mr. Sutcliffe. Moreover, the witness goes on to say that the other numbers used by the plaintiffs for precisely the same kind of cloth, i.e., the numbers 9015, 9010, 9025 and 9001, acquired but little or no reputation, yet the cloth was the same in each case and the importers were the same. It seems, therefore, reasonable to infer that any reputation the number 9000 acquired must have been independent of any association between the number and the plaintiffs as the importers in the minds of the purchasers. I do not think that any of the other witnesses who have been called say that purchasers or general dealers in the market understood from the number 9000 that the cloth on which that number appeared was the plaintiffs'.

The other witnesses are witnesses who are unconnected with the plaintiffs' firm, and an examination of their evidence shows that none of them are prepared to say that purchasers or general dealers in the market understood, from the number 9000 and from that number alone, that the cloth was the plaintiffs'. I shall refer to the evidence of these witnesses shortly. I take the evidence first of Gunput Dass. This is the person to whom the plaintiffs exclusively delivered the cloth bearing the number 9000 up to the time at least of the alleged infringement. Gunput Dass says: "9000 cloth became known in the market. Two or three months after it came out I began selling it. All beparis began asking for this number."

This evidence so far only tends to show that this cloth was asked for and sold by him by the number, but then he adds: "Purchasers look to the quality of the cloth and also to the number," and that statement goes to show that purchasers rely on their own judgment as to the quality of the cloth, besides looking to the number imposed upon it.

The next witness I refer to is Ram Dutt. This witness is a broker. He says he gets orders for kala kapra 9000. "It has a good reputation," and then he adds: "If some one asks me for 9000 [376] cloth I would go to Sook Deb Seetaram and Jeebun Ram who take such cloth from Barlow & Co."

Nowhere does he say that the general reputation of the number 9000 in the market informs the purchaser that the cloth is the plaintiffs'.

The witness adds that on some cloth the name of the firm is written, and on others there is the ticket showing who the importers are. These facts, it is obvious, are facts which would inform the purchaser who the importer was, apart altogether from the number used on the cloth.

The next witness Sabha Chand said he purchased a consignment of 9000 cloth direct from the broker Praladh Roy, and that he went to Praladh Roy in consequence of something said to him by some beparis. He again does not profess to say that purchasers generally understood from the number 9000 alone that the black-beetled cloth belongs to or is imported by the plaintiffs. Moreover, in answer to the Court he said that in purchasing cloth they look to the marks and also use their own judgment in selecting the cloth. That also is evidence which tends rather to show that the purchasers use their own judgment in selecting cloth, and certainly do not necessarily buy cloth marked with 9000 merely on the faith or belief that it is the plaintiffs'. Heralal Chowdbry, another broker, says that a bepari in purchasing cloth looks at the sample and gives his orders according to the opinion he forms of the quality of the cloth from the samples. He says he came to know of the cloth 9000 in September or October 1895, and he adds: "Barlow's 9000 has a good reputation in the market."

Towards the close of his examination he says, "the best known kala kapra in the market is Barlow's 9000," and I take him to mean that this particular variety of cloth is most in demand in the market, but he does not say that this is so because it is known as the plaintiffs' cloth, or that the number 9000 gives the purchasers that information or that purchasers buy under that belief. Moreover, in cross-examination, he seems as regards one point to support what the defendant Tikunchand has said. He says he does not consider that when offering a number of marks to a purchaser that the particular mark chosen [377] is of much importance. He says it does not make much difference to him which mark is chosen. and that even if the cloth comes out without any number at all it would not necessarily make any difference.

The witness Fakir Chand Dey represents an important class of witnesses, namely, those who are the actual consumers of this cloth. He says he does an umbrella business, and buys kala kapra to cover umbrellas with. He says he knows Barlow's kala kapra 9000, and all he knows is that Barlow's number 9000 is a superior quality of cloth. He adds that he does not know much about its reputation. He says he never bought number 9000, but only number 9015. The evidence of this witness and of others who follow him rather tends to show that there is in fact no reputation in the market as to number 9000 kala kapra being the plaintiffs' cloth, because it is difficult to believe that if any such general reputation existed as to the ownership or importation they would not have known of it.

Srinibash Geenka is a broker, and his evidence merely goes to show that when people want Barlow's cloth they ask for Barlow's cloth. His evidence does not tend to show that there is any such reputation in the market, which of itself supplies the information that the number 9000 belongs to Barlow & Co. He was not cross-examined.

Ram Kristo Dey is a dealer in umbrellas. He says he knows kala kapra 9000, and that he knows it is imported by Barlow. He says he gets it because it was selling largely in the market, and that it was of good quality.

In cross-examination it appears that his knowledge of this number 9000 being Barlow's was not derived from any reputation in the market but from information supplied by the broker direct. Punchanun Dutt, another umbrella dealer, speaks of the number 9000 being a well-known number in the market. This is the dealer who obtained a direct consignment of twenty-five cases of the number 9000 cloth from Barlow about or shortly before the institution of this suit. This witness makes one statement, which at first sight seems to be of more importance than the statements of the witnesses I have referred to. He says: "When I go to purchase cloth I ask for number 9000. I make no [378] mention of the balloon ticket." If what he meant was that on going to a general dealer in the market and on asking for number 9000 he obtained the plaintiffs' goods that would be some evidence to show that there was a general understanding in the market that the number 9000 was the plaintiffs', but it turns out that he is only referring to a purchase made by him direct from Barlow and Company, and his evidence also shows that when he purchased in the open market he used, not the number only, but the name of the importer. He says he has only purchased in the Bazar once, and that was Messrs. Mitchell, Bardsley & Co.'s cloth, and on asking for it he asked for Mitchell, Bardsley & Co.'s cloth numbered so and so.

These are all the witnesses who speak to the reputation of number 9000 on black-beetled cloth in the market.

This evidence in my opinion fails to establish that there was any such association between the number 9000 and the plaintiffs' name as to indicate in the understanding of the public that black-beetled cloth bearing the number came from their firm. If so, then there is no right of exclusive user on the part of the plaintiffs as regards the number 9000, and this suit must fail on that ground. But it is desirable perhaps that I should express my opinion on the evidence bearing on the question of infringement, assuming for this purpose that the plaintiffs have the right of exclusive use which they claim. I do not wish to be understood as saying that a number and a name stand necessarily in the same position so far as the question of both being properly the subject-matter of a right of exclusive user is concerned. It has been said that the case of Ralli v. Fleming already referred to affords an instance where the right of exclusive user of a number has been recognised. But when this case is examined I do not think it can be regarded as an authority for the recognition of any such right.

The facts in that case showed that there had been an imitation of the general combination of marks used by the plaintiffs, and the learned Chief Justice appears to have based his opinion very largely on this circumstance. MARKBY, J., on the other hand, thought the only infringement the plaintiffs were entitled to complain of was the use by the defendants of the number 2008, and as regards this number he held that the plaintiffs had failed [379] to establish their claim to the right of exclusive user, and the injunction which was issued in accordance with the opinion of GARTH, C.J., was to the following effect: "Order, that the defendants be restrained from selling any cloth impressed with the combination of marks described in exhibit D annexed to the affidavit of Alexander Westerhout, or any other combination resembling that used by the plaintiffs, and especially from using the number 2008 in any such combination."

The right of exclusive user of a name, as has been pointed out in the case of Singer v. Loog, is not an absolute and unqualified right which would entitle the owner to prevent another person from using it under all circumstances. It is only when the use of the name deceives or is reasonably likely to deceive the public that it can be interfered with or prevented. The same limitation must apply to the right of exclusive user of a number.

The use therefore of the number 9000 on cloth sold by the defendants can only be an infringement of the plaintiffs' right, if it can be shown that such use was intended to deceive the ordinary or unwary purchaser into the belief that the goods were imported by the plaintiffs or that such use would render it reasonably probable that the purchaser would be so deceived. It is said that there is evidence to show an actual intention to deceive on the part of the defendants.

As regards the alleged purchase of a piece of cloth from the defendants' shop bearing the plaintiffs' balloon ticket the evidence is of a very weak and unsatisfactory character. It is not denied that Rambux did purchase a piece of kala kapra from the shop of the defendants. The defendant Tikumchand has produced his books, and I think the evidence satisfactorily shows that the piece which was sold and delivered to the witness Rambux bore the usual combination of marks appearing on all the cloth obtained by the defendants from Messrs. Hoare, Miller & Co., and that the ticket on the cloth in this particular piece was not a balloon ticket, but Messrs. Hoare, Miller's Butterfly or Projaputty ticket. The manner in which the witnesses Gunput Dass and Rambux gave their evidence left little doubt in my mind that one or other of them caused the balloon ticket to be surreptitiously substituted for the butterfly ticket which they found on the cloth, and that it [380] was falsely represented to the plaintiffs that the cloth bearing the balloon ticket had been purchased from the shop of the defendants. I need hardly say, however, that I have no doubt that the plaintiffs honestly believed this representation and were deceived thereby. It appears that the defendants' shop and the shop of Gunput Dass are in the same building, and within a few feet of each other. It is contended that the adoption by the defendants of the number 9000, as the number to be stamped on the goods obtained by them from Messrs. Hoare, Miller & Co., was not accidental, and reliance is placed on the fact that the defendant Tikumchand in his cross-examination has stated that he considers the number to be of no importance. It is said that this statement is inconsistent with the fact that he is vigorously contesting the plaintiffs' claim to the exclusive use of the number, and inconsistent with the attempt that he made in October or November 1895 to obtain a consignment of kala kapra from Messrs. Ullman Hirschhorn marked with the number 9000.

I think I should be unduly straining this evidence against the defendants if I were to infer from it that the defendants were actuated by a desire to pass off the goods which they have obtained from Messrs. Hoare, Miller & Co., as goods imported by the plaintiffs. It may very well be that the number 9000 had obtained a certain reputation for quality in the market, and that the defendants thought that Gunput Dass, a rival trader, was doing a good business with his number 9000 cloth, and that the defendants desired to represent in the market that their cloth was in every respect the same in quality as the cloth sold by their neighbour. If this was the representation that the defendants desired to make by the use of the number 9000, and I do not think the evidence warrants that it was more than this, it was a representation which the defendants had a perfect right to make.

The cloth sold by the defendants bearing the number 9000 was imported by Messrs. Hoare, Miller & Co., under a contract entered into between that firm and the defendants, dated the 19th April 1894. Under this contract the defendants agreed to take five cases of cloth stamped with the number 7000, which was the number provided by a previous indent referred to in the contract as indent No. 244.

[381] The broker explained that the cloth previously stamped with the number 7000 was 45 inches in width, and that as the cloth by the new contract was required to be 48 inches, it was desirable that a new number should be chosen. Accordingly he suggested number 9000, and thereupon the defendants added the nagri writing to the contract to the effect that they would take the cloth stamped with the number 9000 or any other number.' The five cases arrived in September 1895 and they were all sold off by the defendants between the end of that month and the early part of November 1895. On comparing a piece of the plaintiffs' number 9000 cloth with a piece of the defendants' cloth bearing that number the observer cannot fail to be at once struck by the total dissimilarity of the general combination of marks appearing on the respective pieces. Each piece bears a very distinctive object ticket. The plaintiffs' is a balloon ticket rectangular in shape. On the defendants' cloth is a butterfly ticket which is triangular in shape. The marks are arranged differently and even the number 9000 on the plaintiffs' cloth is very unlike in colouring and appearance from the 9000 which is impressed on the defendants' cloth. The plaintiffs' number is in very bright colouring and attracts the eye at once, whereas the number on the defendants' cloth is dull and faint in colouring and does not readily attract attention.

I am aware that a comparison of different combinations of marks side by side is not conclusive on the question of infringement. But I take it that the general dissimilarity of the marks is not a matter which can be disregarded.

When numbers are used in conjunction with striking object designs it is difficult to believe that goods are dealt with by the number alone without any reference to the object design. The evidence is that the balloon mark is well known in connection with the black-beetled cloth, and taking all the facts together, I cannot bring myself to think that the use of the number 9000 by the defendants under the circumstances and in conjunction with the other marks proved in this case is calculated to deceive purchasers into the belief that the cloth so stamped and sold by the defendants is cloth imported by the plaintiffs. To constitute an infringement it is not enough to show a mere possibility of deception. [382] There must be a reasonable probability of purchasers being deceived. There is not in this case in my opinion such a reasonable probability of deception; therefore there is no infringement of any right to which the plaintiffs may be entitled. The result is, the suit must be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2.

In a mortgage bond, dated 14th June 1876, it was stipulated that the money advanced should be repaid "in the month of Jeyth 1289 Fusli, being a period of six years" The last day of Jeyth 1289 answered to the 1st June 1882 and the period of six years from the date of the bond ended on the 14th June 1882 In a suit brought upon the bond on the 12th June 1894

Held, (AMEER ALI, J , dubitante) that the money sued for became due on the 14th June 1882, and the suit was in time

Rungo Bujaji v Babaji (I L R , 6 Bom 83) Almas Banee v Mahomed Raja (I L R., 6 Cal., 239) and Gnanasammanda Pandaram v Palaniyandi Pillai (I L R , 17 Mad 61) referred to by BEVERLEY, J

THIS was a suit to recover Rs 21,392, principal and interest due upon a mortgage-bond, dated the 8th Asar 1283 Fusli (14th June 1876) The portions of the bond to which reference is necessary for the purposes of this report are as follows —

"The entire amount covered by the zuripeshgi lease and the bonds mentioned above has been found by calculation to amount to Co 's Rs 10,500 due to the ticcadars by the declarant, and at present I have taken for my necessary expenses the sum of Co 's Rs 1,500 from the said ticcadars through Syed Shah Ali Hossein, my husband and ammokhtar and have executed [383] a consolidated bond in respect of the former and present debts to the value of Co.'s Rs. 12,000 (half of which is Co 's Rs 6,000) bearing interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem, stipulating to repay the same in the month of Jeyth 1289 Fusli, being a period of six years, in favour of Mussamut Dhan Kunwar, wife of Bhikari Sahu, and Khedu Sahu aforesaid, * * * *

"I do hereby declare and give in writing that I the declarant and my heirs shall pay to the aforesaid mahajan the interest of the sum of Rs 12 000 mentioned above amounting to Rs. 720 for 12 months year by year in the month of Jeyth up to the end of lease. For this I the declarant and my heirs have not nor shall have any objection whatever. I shall repay the aforesaid amount of principal of the loan to the aforesaid mahajans within the prescribed time without any objection."

The month of Jeyth 1289 Fusli, ended on the 1st June 1882, but the period of six years mentioned in the above extract ended on the 14th June 1882. The present suit was brought on the 12th June 1894. The defendant's plea of limitation, based on the date first given, was overruled by the lower Court.

* Appeal from Original Decree No 108 of 1895, against the decree of K S. M Fakhoruddin Hossein. Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 13th of December 1894.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (BEVERLEY and AMEER ALI, JJ.) :—

Beverley, J.—This is a suit upon a mortgage bond, and the only question raised in this appeal is whether or not the suit was instituted within twelve years from the date on which the money sued for became due.

The bond is dated the 8th Assar 1283 Fusli, corresponding with the 14th June 1876, and the suit was instituted on the 12th June 1894. The question turns upon the construction of the document as to what was the date upon which the money became payable. The stipulation in the bond was to repay the money "in the month of Jeyth 1289 Fusli, being a period of six years." The period of six years from the date of execution of the bond would carry us to the 14th June 1882, and the plaintiff contends that that should be regarded as the due date irrespective of all mention of the month of Jeyth 1289 Fusli. The defendant on the other hand pleads that the debtor bound himself to repay the [384] money on or before the 29th Jeyth 1289 Fusli (there being only twenty-nine days in the month of Jeyth in that year) which corresponded with 1st of June 1882, and that consequently this suit is barred.

The lower Court has held that the plaintiff's contention is correct, and accordingly the defendant has appealed.

The deed having been executed on the 8th Assar 1283, it is not improbable that it had been drafted some days previously, that is to say, in the month of Jeyth 1283, and that when the stipulation was inserted in the deed to the effect that the money would be repayable in six years, it was thought that that period would expire in the month of Jeyth 1289. The question before us is whether the parties intended that the money should be repaid six years after the execution of the bond, without reference to any particular date, or whether it was intended that the money should be repaid in Jeyth 1289, it being casually mentioned that that month was within the period of six years from the date of the execution of the deed. I am of opinion that the former is the more liberal and proper construction to place upon the deed, that is to say, that the debtor was to have a period of full six years from the date of the execution of the deed within which to repay the money. This was the view taken by the Bombay High Court in a precisely similar case, i.e., the case of Ranujo Bajaji v. Babaji (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 83). That a liberal construction should be given in cases of doubt such as the present was also held in the case of Almas Banee v. Mahomed Raja (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 239) decided by this Court, in which it was held that in consequence of the mention of the 30th Pous in a deed it was intended that the debtor should have full thirty days in that month within which to repay the money, although as a matter of fact there were only twenty-nine days in that particular month of Pous. That decision was followed by the Madras High Court in the case of Gnanasammanda Pandaram v. Palaniyandi Pillai (I. L. R., 17 Mad., 61). Upon these authorities, and also upon the ground that in construing acts of limitation the Court is bound to give them a liberal interpretation, I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Court is correct, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[385] Ameer Ali, J.—I must say that the point is by no means clear to my mind. Section 25 of the Limitation Act does not apply to a case like this, and I am not prepared to follow the ruling of the Bombay High Court. The question is one of intention. What was the intention of the parties with regard to the document which is before us? Whether the intention was to make the repayment in Jeyth 1289, or was it to be made within six years from the time of the execution of the document? There are indications in the document that Jeyth 1289 was to be taken as the time for the repayment of the loan, and the suits that were brought by the plaintiff also give grounds, as contended for by the defendant's pleader, for the view that the time for repayment was fixed in Jeyth 1289. But although I have a doubt on the question before us, my doubt is not so strong as to justify my differing from the view taken by my learned colleague. I therefore concur in dismissing the appeal with costs.

Parties—Parties to suit—Persons having the same interest in one cause—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 26 and 30.

In a suit for the removal of masonry structures raised by one member of a community of Hindu priests upon a certain platform, on which every member of the community had individual right to perform religious rites, praying also for a declaration and injunction in connection with such removal, the plaintiffs were seven persons claiming relief as the panch or committee representing the whole community, and also in their individual capacity. It was found by the Court that the plaintiffs did not constitute the panch, and that they did not in that character represent the community:

Held, that section 26 † of the Civil Procedure Code (1882) was only an enabling section; it allowed the plaintiffs to bring a joint action; and should not be read as though all persons of the community must be joined as plaintiffs.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 660 of 1895, agianst the decree of H. Holmwood, Esq., District Judge of Gya, dated the 17th of December 1894, reversing the decree of Babu Tej Chunder Mookerjee, Munsif of Gya, dated the 22nd of June 1894.

† [Sec. 26:—All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, in respect of the same cause of action. And judgment may be given for such one or more of the plaintiffs as may be found to be entitled to relief, for such relief as he or they may be entitled to, without any amendment. But the defendant, though unsuccessful, shall be entitled to his costs occasioned by so joining any person who is not found entitled to relief, unless the Court in disposing of the costs of the suit otherwise directs.]

Persons who may be joined as plaintiffs.

Held, also, that section 30 * of the Code is an enabling section and did not debar the plaintiffs from suing in their own right in this case.

The plaintiffs in this case alleged that they were members of a [386] priestly community called Gyawals of the town of Gya, and were the panch, or representative committee of their community, and that the defendant, also a Gyawal, having caused certain masonry structures to be raised for his own use on a platform upon which all Gyawals had a common right to perform religious rites and ceremonies, the plaintiffs, as the panch as well as Gyawals in their individual capacity, brought this suit for declaration of their right for removal of the structures and for a perpetual injunction against the defendant. The Munsif held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to represent the Gyawal community, but he held the suit to be maintainable on the ground that each of the plaintiffs had a right to sue the defendant for wrong done to him individually. The Judge on appeal dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs did not obtain the permission of the Court to sue on behalf of the community, and cited the following cases in support of his judgment: Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundul (I L. R., 8 Cal., 32); The Oriental Bank Corporation v. Gobind Lall Seal (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 604); Lutifunnissa Bibi v. Nazirun Bibi (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 33); Dhanput Singh v. Paresh Nath Singh (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 180) and the two unreported cases referred to therein.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

The facts sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Sarada Charan Mitra and Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singha for the Appellants.

Babu Baidyanath Datta for the Respondent.

Babu Sarada Charan Mitra.—Neither section 26 nor section 30 debars the present suit. That the law allows a suit like the present is clear from the provisions of section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, explanation 5, and section 42 of the Indian Evidence Act. The cases referred to by the learned Judge are different from this; here the plaintiffs have each the same cause of action. Zafaryar Ali v. Bakhtawar Singh (I. L. R., 5 All., 497); Jawahra v. Akbar Hussein (I. L. R., 7 All., 178); Mohiuddin v Sayiuddin (I. L R., 20 Cal., 810); Sandes v. Wildsmith [L. R. (1893) 1 Q. B. D., 771]; Temperton v. Russell [L. R. (1893) 1 Q. B. D., 435].

[387] Babu Baidyanath Datta for the respondent contended that the suit was really carried on by the plaintiffs as the panch of the Gyawals, and they should not be permitted to fall back upon individual right. The cases referred to by the Lower Appellate Court are authorities for the rule that permission of the Court must be taken under section 30. In the case of Mohiuddin v. Sayiuddin (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 810) this Court appears at p. 816 of the report to have approved of the Allahabad rulings on the supposition that there was a "material alteration" introduced by section 30 in the present Code of 1882. There had been no alteration of the law since 1877, and the cases of Jan Ali v. Ramnath Mundal (I. L R., 8 Cal., 32) and Lutifunnissa Bibi v. Nazirun Bibi (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 33) were under the same law as the present. But even if the claim be treated as one to enforce the individual right of each of these plaintiffs, the other Gyawals ought to have been made parties. Kali Kanta Surma v. Gouri Prosad Surma Bardeuri (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 906.)

* [Sec. 30: —Where there are numerous parties having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such parties may, with the permission of the Court sue or be sued, or may defend, in such suit on behalf of all, parties so interested. But the Court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such parties either by personal service or (if from the number of parties or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable) by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct.]

(One party may sue or defend on behalf of all in same interest.)

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (BEVERLEY and AMEER ALI, JJ.) :—

Beverley, J.—This was a suit brought by seven Gyawals to restrain the defendant from taking certain action in respect of a masonry platform round a sacred tree in the town of Gya, and the plaintiffs came into Court upon the allegation that they formed a panch or committee which represented the entire Gyawal community, and further that even if that should not be found to be the case, they had the right individually to restrain the defendant from the action complained of. Upon this statement of the case the Munsif says : "Plaintiffs accordingly on behalf of themselves and as panch of the Gyawals bring this suit for the removal of the encroachments." On the evidence the Munsif found that the plaintiffs did not constitute the panch which they allege in their plaint, and accordingly he held that they did not in that character represent the entire Gyawal community, and that they could not therefore sue on their behalf except by leave of the Court as provided by section 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But at the same time he held that they had individually the right to restrain the defendant from the acts complained of, and accordingly [388] having found for the plaintiffs on the merits, he decreed the suit.

The case then went up on appeal to the District Judge, and the District Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs, not having obtained the permission of the Court to sue on behalf of the entire Gyawal community, must be cast in the suit. He does not regard the suit and does not deal with it in any way as a suit brought by the plaintiffs in their individual and personal capacity, although in his judgment he admits that "each of the plaintiffs has a valuable pecuniary interest in the preservation of this platform, and each of them therefore could harass the defendant with a series of suits for damages," and he says that this fact, namely, that each of the plaintiffs has a cause of action, is a ground for holding that they are not entitled to bring separate suits against the defendant, but, according to his view of the law, must all combine in bringing one suit, and unless they are all named as plaintiffs they must apply to the Court for leave under section 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We think that this is altogether a wrong view of the law It being admitted in this case (and this admission we take from the judgments of both the lower Courts) that each separate plaintiff had individually a cause of action, we think that there is no reason and no authority against their being allowed to bring a joint action against the defendant Section 26 of the Code of Civil Procedure clearly enables such persons to join as plaintiffs in the same suit. It says: "All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly or severally, or in the alternative, in respect of the same cause of action " The learned District Judge would read that section as though all persons must be joined as plaintiffs when they have the same cause of action against the defendant ; but that is not so. It is only an enabling section allowing a number of plaintiffs, with the same right to relief to join in one suit instead of bringing separate suits.

Section 30 treats of a somewhat different matter. It says : "When there are numerous parties having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such parties may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued or may defend in such suit, on behalf [389] of all parties so interested." The purport of that section is that with the permission of the Court a suit may be brought by one or more persons on behalf of all interested. This again is an enabling section, allowing a suit to be instituted under certain circumstances by some of the persons interested on behalf of all. But there are no words in the section to the effect that where persons have the same interest in a suit they are debarred from suing either jointly or severally unless they obtain the permission of the Court to sue on behalf of all the persons similarly interested. The section does not forbid them from suing in their own right; it merely says that if they desire to sue on behalf of others, they must obtain the permission of the Court.

We think, therefore, that the decision of the learned District Judge upon this point is erroneous, and must be reversed, but as the learned Judge has not come to any finding upon the merits, and as it appears that certain questions upon the merits were raised before him, and though not argued were left in the hands of the Court to decide after perusal and weighing of the evidence as to the facts, we think that the case must go back to the Judge in order that he may come to a decision on the merits.

The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court.

Ameer Ali, J.--As the case of Mohiuddin v. Sayiuddin (I.L.R, 20 Cal., 810) to which I was a party is referred to by the District Judge in his judgment, I think I ought to add a few words to explain the view I take of section 30 of the Civil Procedure Code.

That section is, as has been already pointed out, an enabling section, and must be read, it seems to me, in conjunction with explanation 5 to section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, which says: "Where persons litigate bonâ fide in respect of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating." Section 30 provides that where there are a number of persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of them may sue or be sued or may defend in such suit, with the leave of the Court so as to enable the judgment in that suit to be binding upon the others. The effect of section 30 therefore to my mind is, that unless such [390] permission is obtained by the person suing, or defending the suit, his action has no binding effect upon the persons whom he chooses to represent. The distinction between a joint right and right enjoyed in common with others has been pointed out by PETHERAM, C. J., in the case of Jowahra v. Akbar Hussain (I.L.R., 7 All., 178). Where there is a joint right it may be necessary for all persons jointly interested to be joined as parties, and if they are not joined the suit may be bad for misjoinder. In order to prevent the record from being unnecessarily encumbered by many names, section 30 allows one or more persons having a joint interest to sue or defend with the authorisation or permission of the Court on behalf of all. The section in fact embodies a rule of convenience based on reason and good policy, but in my opinion it was not intended to take away, nor does it take away, any right. To use the Chief Justice's words in the case just referred to: "Every one who has such a right is entitled to exercise it without hindrance, and has a right of action against any one who interferes with its exercise."

It seems to me that section 30 does not give any warrant for the contention, that because a person has a right in common with others he may not maintain an action for the establishment or enforcement of his own right. There is no obligation on him to sue or defend on behalf of the others; and if he does not seek any relief on behalf of those who have an interest in common with him or to bind them by his action, there is nothing in the section or in any other law to debar him from maintaining the action. Even if he were to bring a suit on behalf of himself and the others, he may choose to go on with the action on his own behalf, and would be entitled to do so, if he makes the necessary amendment. The English cases on the point are collected in Daniell's Chancery Practice, 5th Edition, page 215, and tend to show that the plaintiff, if he has a right in himself to bring an action, or the defendant, if he has a right in himself to defend an action, is entitled to sue or to defend in any way he chooses without making any person a party to the action or to the defence, so long as the effect remains confined to himself. For these reasons I agree with the order made by my learned colleague.

[391] CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 5th February, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE GORDON.

Kunja Behari Poddar.... ....Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 145—Authority of District Magistrate—Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

In a case where a District Magistrate made an order stating that in his opinion it was the duty of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to institute proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Held, that the District Magistrate had no authority in law to direct the Sub Divisional Magistrate to institute such proceedings.

Queen-Empress v Gobind Chandra Das (I. L. R., 20 Cal, 520), followed.

IN 1894 a dispute arose between the petitioners and the opposite party concerning an orchard, situated in Pergunnah Sovargaon, in the district of Naraingunge. The opposite party alleged that they were in actual possession of a part of the garden by virtue of a deed of sale, dated 30th Joisto 1300 B S. (12th June 1893) executed in their favour by one Gopi Sardar, the other portion to the extent of one kani having been leased out to one Isaff, and that after the purchase they allowed Isaff, who was in occupation at the time, to remain on the portion belonging to him and look after the other portion on their behalf. The petitioners, on the other hand, of whom Isaff was one, alleged that they were in possession of the whole garden, it having been leased out to them by Gopi Sardar, and that the allegations of the opposite party were made in order to dislodge Isaff and turn him out of the garden

* Criminal Revision No. 478 of 1896 made against the order passed by L. P. Shirres, Esq., District Magistrate of Dacca, dated 15th May 1896, confirming the order passed by L. T. R. Lucas, Esq., Sub-divisional Officer of Naraingunge, dated 19th March 1896.

Subsequently on 3rd May 1894 there was a riot, and one of the persons present was killed. Kailash Pal absconded, and Isaff and Saber, two of the opposite party, were committed to the Court of Sessions, the former being sentenced to three years and the latter to seven years rigorous imprisonment. On appeal to the High Court Saber's sentence was [392] reduced, and Isaff's case was ordered to be re-tried. At the re-trial the jury acquitted Isaff, and on a reference to the High Court the acquittal was upheld. Kailash Pal appeared subsequently, and after being committed to the Court of Sessions was acquitted on 11th May 1895. In the meantime on 19th October 1894 an injunction was issued under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code against Isaff and Kailash Pal, two of the opposite party. On the reference to the High Court the verdict of the jury to the effect that Isaff was in possession of the garden was upheld, and thereupon a notice was issued under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the petitioner Kunja Poddar and his men restraining them from entering the garden of Isaff under penalty of prosecution. On the application of Kunja Poddar to the District Magistrate this order was modified by both parties being served with notices restraining them from entering the garden, and the Subordinate Magistrate was directed by the District Magistrate to institute proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In the course of these proceedings the Subordinate Magistrate, on 19th March 1896, held that the opposite party were in possession, and that the petitioners had, from the date of the riot, been attempting to take forcible possession. The petitioners thereupon appealed against this order to the District Magistrate, who stated that he saw no reason to interfere; and on 4th February 1897 the petitioners applied to the High Court for a rule to set aside the order of the Subordinate Magistrate.

Mr. Donogh for the Petitioners—Under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Magistrate must be satisfied, from the police report or otherwise, that there are good grounds for proceeding under this section. The District Magistrate cannot order him to take action under this section. If he does so, it does not leave the Deputy Magistrate any discretion in the matter. Queen-Empress v. Gobind Chandra Das (I. L. R, 20 Cal., 520), Ram Chandra Das v. Monohur Roy (I. L. R, 21 Cal., 29). The dispute has always been between Isaff and the opposite party Kunja Behari, and the petitioner Kailash Chandra Pal has always stated that he was not in possession at any time. He has been made a party to the proceedings against his will. The order could not be binding on Kailash Chandra Pal. Queen-Empress v. Kupayyar (I.L.R., 18 Mad., 51).

[393] Mr. P. L. Roy for the Opposite Party.—It is clear that, as far as the Subordinate Magistrate was concerned, he thought no proceedings should be taken under section 145, because on 9th October 1894 he made an order under section 144. As on 4th June 1895 he made another order under the same section (144) prohibiting Kunja Behari from interfering with the land, the Magistrate of the district was of opinion that it was the duty of the Subordinate Magistrate to institute proceedings under section 145, and he accordingly modified the order of 4th June 1895. Acting on this order the Subordinate Officer on 14th August 1895 instituted proceedings under section 145. The case cited of Queen-Empress v. Gobind Chandra Das (I.L.R., 20 Cal., 520), does not apply to the case of a District Magistrate. The District Magistrate merely stated that he was of opinion that it was the duty of the Sub-Divisional Officer to institute proceedings under section 145. He did not direct his Subordinate Officer to do so. There is nothing in the section of the Code or in any other section preventing a District Magistrate from passing an order of the kind that he has made in this case.

We think that this rule should be made absolute, upon the first ground mentioned in the order of this Court, dated the 27th July last.

It is quite clear that, so far as the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Naraingunge is concerned, he thought that no proceedings should be taken under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for the order that he made on the 19th October 1894 was an order under section 144 of the Code, prohibiting Isaff from interfering with the land which is the subject-matter of the dispute between the parties; and we further find that on the 4th June 1895 he made another order under the same section (144), similarly prohibiting Kunja Behari, the opposite party before us, from interfering with the land in question. The Magistrate of the district, however, on the 23rd July 1895, was of opinion that it was the duty of the Sub-Divisional Officer to institute proceedings under section 145, and he accordingly modified the said order of the 4th June 1895. [394] Acting upon this order of the Magistrate of the district, the Sub-Divisional Officer, on the 14th August 1895, instituted proceedings under section 145. That order runs thus: "Whereas it has been made to appear to me that a dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace is likely to take place between Kunja Behari Poddar on one side and Kailash Chandra Pal and Isaff on the other, regarding possession to a garden bounded as follows: North by Khajobaigora khal, south by another khal, east by Gora khal of Bari Bedyananda and Isaff arable (Tangita) land, west by Bugmuchi khal, it is ordered that the above parties put in written statements in person or by pleader on the 30th August 1895 regarding their respective claims of actual possession about the said garden with any other evidence they may have to offer, and that until the Court orders what party is in possession, no party shall go to the said disputed land under penalty of prosecution." Now there was no police report or other information before the Sub-Divisional Officer at the time, upon which he could take proceedings under section 145; and, indeed, it is patent that his proceeding of the 14th August 1895 was entirely based (though he does not say so in so many words) upon the order of the District Magistrate of the 23rd July 1895. The question then arises whether the District Magistrate had authority in law to direct the Sub-Divisional Officer to institute proceedings under section 145. We think there is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure, or in any other law, authorizing the Magistrate of the District in this case to direct proceedings being taken under section 145. The officer to whom such direction was given was a Sub-Divisional Officer, and it was entirely discretionary with him either to take proceedings or not under that section as he thought proper. We have already said that, so far as he was concerned, he was of opinion that proceedings should be taken under section 144, and not under section 145; and we think that the District Magistrate had no authority over him in this respect. Queen-Empress v Gobind Chandra Das (I.L.R., 20 Cal., 520).

The rule will accordingly be made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), sections 133, 137, 437—Further enquiry—Ultrà vires—Obstruction to public thoroughfare.

In a complaint for alleged obstruction of a public thoroughfare, the Magistrate, after making preliminary enquiries, was of opinion that the alleged way was not a public thoroughfare, and refused to take action under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Sessions Judge, being of opinion that the Magistrate should have gone on with the case, directed a further enquiry under section 133. Such enquiry was held, and the Magistrate, without taking evidence in support of the complaint, made his conditional order under section 133 absolute under section 137†.

Held, that the order of the Sessions Judge, directing a further enquiry, was ultra vires, there being no section of the Code under which an order for further enquiry could be made in the case; section 437‡ having no application.

Held, also, that the Magistrate, before whom the petitioner showed cause, should not have made his conditional order under section 133 absolute without taking evidence upon the matter of the complaint, the words "evidence in the matter" meaning "in the matter of the complaint," and not simply evidence which the opposite party might offer.

THE facts of this case were as follows: In 1891 the Police of Munshigunge reported that a certain road was a public one and had been obstructed. On 3rd December 1891 the Deputy Magistrate sent the matter to the Sub-Deputy Collector for a report, and on 1st April 1892 that officer, in his report, stated that the road was a public road which had been obstructed, and that orders should issue for the speedy removal of such obstruction. Notices were thereupon issued to the petitioner who denied that the road was a public one, and alleged that the application had been made out of spite. On 16th June 1892 the Deputy Magistrate recorded the following remark, namely: "The Raja says that Babu Syama Kanta Banerjee wants to open a new road from his house"; but did not proceed in the manner laid down in Chapter X of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Nothing further having been [396] done, on 9th November 1895 the opposite party, Ainaddi Halder, moved the then Deputy Magistrate of Munshigunge to institute a case under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. He, however, refused to do so on the ground that he was satisfied, from certain preliminary enquiries that he had made, that the alleged way was not a public one. The complainant thereupon, on 19th December 1895, moved the Sessions Judge of Dacca against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Munshigunge refusing to take up the complaint. He thereupon allowed the petition of the complainant, and directed that a further enquiry should be made under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On 8th October 1896 the Deputy Magistrate, who had held a further enquiry and passed a conditional order under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, made the order absolute in the following terms:—

The second party has not established in the Civil Court that the claim of right asserted by him is well founded. I should therefore proceed with the case according to the provisions of law laid down in the Code of Criminal Procedure, and decide whether the conditional order passed by me is reasonable and proper. The onus of proving that it is not so lies on the second party showing cause, and it is incumbent on that party to apply for the appointment of a jury, or to produce evidence to-day in support of the contention. As this has not been done, I find no ground for holding that the order is not reasonable and proper. I therefore make the conditional order passed by me under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure absolute, and direct the removal of the obstruction within fifteen days.

Against this order the petitioners, Srinath Roy and others, moved the Sessions Judge of Dacca, who, on 20th of November 1896, made the following order and declined to interfere:—

I decline to interfere, the lower Court has acted in accordance with the procedure laid down in the case of Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (I.L.R., 15 Cal., 564). The present petitioners were, as therein provided, allowed an opportunity to establish their alleged rights to this road, but they have failed to do so. The lower Court's order, under these circumstances, is quite just and proper. This application is rejected, and the lower Court's procedure and orders are confirmed.

Thereupon, on 1st February 1897, the petitioners, Srinath Roy and others, moved the High Court under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the reversal of such order on the following grounds amongst others:—

[397] (1) That the Sessions Judge had acted ultra vires in remanding the case in the first instance for a further enquiry.

(2) That the conditional order of the Deputy Magistrate should have been discharged, as there was no evidence on the record against the petitioners.

(3) That the Deputy Magistrate should have given the petitioners an opportunity of producing their witnesses, which he failed to do.

Babu Basanto Kumar Bose and Babu Jogendra Chunder Ghose for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. L. Roy for the Opposite Party.

After hearing both sides in this matter, we think that the rule should be made absolute upon both the grounds on which it was granted.

The complaint was one for illegal obstruction of what the complainant described to be a public thoroughfare. The Magistrate, before whom the said complaint was instituted, after certain preliminary enquiries which he had made, was of opinion that the alleged way was not a public thoroughfare; and he accordingly refused to take action under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The complainant then went up to the Sessions Judge; and that Officer was of opinion that the Magistrate was bound to have proceeded with the case; and he directed that a further enquiry be made under section 133, and the following sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate acted upon this order, as he was bound to do, made a conditional order under section 133, and called upon the petitioners before us to show cause why the obstruction complained of should not be removed.

They appeared and showed cause; but, as it would appear upon the record, they offered no evidence; and thereupon the Magistrate, without taking any evidence in support of the complaint, made the conditional order absolute under section 137 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Now, it appears to us that the Sessions Judge's order directing a further enquiry in this case was ultra vires. We suppose he meant to make this order under section 437 of the Code of [398] Criminal Procedure, there being no other section in the Code under which an order for further enquiry can be made. On referring to that section, however, and reading it by the light of the sections occurring in Chapter XVI which ends with section 203 of the Code, it will be found that it is only in the case of an offence that a superior Court is entitled to direct a further enquiry. The act of the petitioners complained of was not an offence; and in regard to such a complaint we do not think the provisions of section 137 of the Code can have any application. In this view of the matter, it seems to us that the subsequent order of the Magistrate making his conditional order absolute must fall through, the proceedings having been taken upon the authority of the order of the Sessions Judge, which we hold to be illegal. But apart from this consideration we are of opinion that, when the petitioners appeared before the Magistrate and showed cause, he was not competent to make his conditional order absolute without taking evidence upon the matter of the complaint before him under section 137 of the Code. That section says: "If he appears and shews cause against the order, the Magistrate shall take evidence in the matter. If the Magistrate is satisfied that the order is not reasonable and proper, no further proceedings shall be taken in the case. If the Magistrate is not so satisfied the order shall be made absolute." When the section says "the Magistrate shall take evidence in the matter," we read it to mean that he shall take evidence upon the matter of the complaint, and not simply the evidence which the opposite party might offer. It seems to us that, before the Magistrate in this case could make his conditional order absolute, he was bound to have taken evidence in the presence of the opposite party, and satisfied himself that the alleged way was a public thoroughfare; that there had been an unlawful obstruction thereof; and that his conditional order was reasonable and proper. The report, or other information which the Magistrate had received, or such evidence as he might have taken before making the conditional order, is no evidence against the opposite party, the proceeding under section 133 being entirely ex parte.

Upon these grounds we make the rule absolute.

C. E. G. Rule made absolute.

[399] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 27th November, and 10th December, 1896.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

Ismail Ariff..............Defendant

S. J. Leslie...........Plaintiff.*

Costs—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), section 22—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (I of 1895), section 11—Suit brought before, but determined after, the passing of Act I of 1895—Certificate for Costs—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), section 6.

The plaintiff, before the passing of Act I of 1895, instituted in the High Court a suit to recover from the defendant a sum of over Rs. 2,000, which was reduced to a sum of less than Rs 2,000 before the hearing and therefore below the limit for suits cognizable by the Small Cause Court. At the time of its institution Act XV of 1882 was applicable, by section 22 † of which Act a plaintiff was deprived, in a suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court, of his costs if he obtained a decree "for less than 2,000 rupees" unless the Judge who tried it certified it was a fit case to be tried in the High Court. The suit was not determined until after the passing of Act I of 1895, by section 11 of which the deprivation of costs applied to cases in which the plaintiff obtained a decree for "less than 1,000 rupees." The Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiff, and, without certifying that the case was one fit to be brought in the High Court, he allowed the plaintiff the costs of the suit.

Held, on appeal, that the case was governed by section 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868): Act I of 1895 was not applicable, and the plaintiff was not entitled to his costs of suit. The principle of Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 267) applied.

THE plaintiff, an attorney, brought a suit in the High Court in December 1894, to recover from the defendant a sum of over Rs. 2,100 due by way of costs. After the plaint had been filed, the plaintiff discovered that he had inadvertently omitted to credit the defendant with a payment of Rs. 300. He at once wrote to the defendant giving credit for that sum, and reducing the claim to Rs. 1,800 odd. When the suit was instituted section 22 of the

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 4 of 1896 against the decision of Mr. Justice AMEER ALI, in Suit No. 809 of 1894.

† [Sec. 22 :—If any suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court, other than a suit to which section twenty-one applies, is instituted in the High Court, and if in such suit the plaintiff obtains, in the case of a suit founded on contract, a decree for any matter of an amount or value less than two thousand rupees, and in the case of any other suit a decree for any matter of an amount or value of less than three hundred rupees, no costs shall be allowed to the plaintiff ; and if in any such suit the plaintiff does not obtain a decree, the defendant shall be entitled to his costs as between attorney and client.

The foregoing rules shall not apply to any suit in which the Judge who tries the same certifies that it was one fit to be brought in the High Court.]

Presidency Small Cause Court's Act (XV of 1882) was applicable to it: that section providing that if any suit cognizable [400] by the Small Cause Court is instituted in the High Court, and if in such suit the plaintiff obtains in the case of a suit founded on contract a decree for any matter of an amount or value less than 2,000 rupees, * * * no costs shall be allowed to the plaintiff; unless the Judge who tries it certifies that it was one fit to be tried in the High Court. The defendant pleaded limitation as to a large part of the sum claimed. After the passing of Act I of 1895, by section 11 of which Act the words "one thousand" are substituted for the words "two thousand" in section 22 of Act XV of 1882, a decree was made in favour of the plaintiff for the sum claimed; and the learned Judge, without certifying that the case was a fit one to be brought in the High Court, gave the plaintiff costs on scale No. 2. The defendant appealed.

Mr. Dunne and Mr. Chowdhry, for the Appellant, abandoned the plea of limitation; and the only question left for determination was the question of costs.

Mr. T.A. Apcar (with him Mr. Pugh and Mr. Avetoom) for the Respondent.—There is no vested right to costs in anybody. The plaintiff brought his suit in December 1894; and the moment Act I of 1895 was passed, he could have withdrawn his suit, with leave to bring a fresh suit, and then have brought the fresh suit in the High Court. The Act has a retrospective effect, because it is a matter of procedure that the Act has changed. At the time of bringing the suit, no one had any substantive right in the costs. That being so, this is purely a matter of procedure; and the procedure to be followed is that given by the later Act,—Bhobo Sundari Debi v. Rakhal Chunder Bose (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 583). [TREVELYAN, J.—Were you not under a disability to receive costs?] Yes, at the time the suit was brought; but before the time came for awarding the costs, the Legislature had removed that disability. [MACLEAN, C. J.—Then if the judgment had been delivered on the 31st March 1895, you would have been deprived of your costs?] Possibly, but that is a common result of legislation.

Mr. Dunne for the Appellant. –The Act is not retrospective. The Legislature intended that the defendant should have the right to be exempt from payment of costs in the event of the decree being against him for a sum smaller than a certain limit. [401] The terms of the Act show that it could not have been contemplated that suits instituted before the Act should come within a rule of jurisdiction prescribed by the new Act; for, after all, it is not a question of procedure, but of jurisdiction. The new Act must refer only to suits instituted after the 1st April 1895. [TREVELYAN, J., referred to the cases of Wright v. Hale (6 H. and N., 227), and Republic of Costa Rica v. Erlanger (L. R., 3 Ch. Div., 62).] Here there is an absolute prohibition of the plaintiff's getting his costs. In the case of Wright v. Hale (6 H. and N., 227) there was no stated rule declaring any right in respect of costs. But the Small Cause Court Act entitles the defendant to exemption from liability in a certain event. To give the plaintiff his costs would be giving him something he was deprived of by the Legislature, and giving it to him because he had done what the Legislature forbade him to do. [MACLEAN, C.J.—Does not section 6 of the General Clauses Act apply? TREVELYAN, J., referred to Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 267, (272).] Those principles apply here. The new section does not repeal the old one; it merely substitutes a new jurisdiction for an old one.

C. A. V.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ.) :—

Maclean, C.J.—The only question to be decided on this appeal is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to their costs of the suit.

The suit is one by a firm of attorneys against their client to recover the balance of their bill of costs. The amount recovered is under Rs. 2,000 but over Rs. 1,000. It is contended for the appellant, having regard to section 22 of the Small Cause Courts Act (No. XV of 1882), that the plaintiff's costs ought not to be allowed. That section, so far as is material, was as follows:—

"If any suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court other than a suit to which section 21 applies, is instituted in the High Court, and if in such suit the plaintiff obtains, in the case of a suit founded on contract, a decree for any matter of an amount of value less than Rs. 2,000, and in the case of any other suit a decree for any matter of an amount or value of less than Rs. 300, no costs shall be allowed to the plaintiff. The foregoing rules shall not apply [402] to any suit in which the Judge who tries the same certifies that it was one fit to be brought in the High Court."

In the Court below the learned Judge allowed the costs, but did not certify that the suit was one fit to be brought in the High Court. He treated the matter of costs as one for the exercise of his judicial discretion.

If the matter rested only on the above section, it would be clear that the plaintiff could not be allowed his costs in the absence of any such certificate.

The difficulty arises from section 11 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts' Amendment Act (No. I of 1895), which came into operation on the 1st April 1895. This substitutes the words "one thousand" for "two thousand" in section 22, above referred to. In the opinion of the learned Judge in the Court below, as the suit had been commenced before the amending Act, the plaintiffs could not be allowed their costs unless in his discretion he allowed them.

What is the effect of section 11 of the repealing Act upon section 22 of Act XV of 1882? It repeals pro tanto the provision as to amount in the old Act, but there is no provision that it should be retrospective in its operation. It is urged for the plaintiff that the repealing Act relates to procedure only, and does not interfere with any substantive right, and consequently that the new Act is retrospective in its operation.

I think, however, that the case comes within the third class of cases stated by Mr. Justice WILSON in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench in Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 272). He says: "The third class of cases consists of those in which the law is changed by a mere repeal of a previously existing law, and the repealing enactment contains no special rule for its own interpretation. Such cases are governed by section 6 of the General Clauses Act."

Section 6 of the General Clauses Act says: "The repeal of any Statute shall not affect any proceedings commenced before the repealing Act shall have come into operation." This suit—a "proceeding" within the meaning of that section—was instituted before the repealing Act came into operation. I [403] therefore think the provisions of the repealing Act do not apply to this case, that section 22 of the Small Cause Court Act does apply, and that, as the plaintiff has recovered less than Rs. 2,000 and the Judge has given no certificate, the plaintiff cannot be allowed the costs of the suit. The appeal therefore must be allowed. The appeal also dealt with a point as to the statute of Limitation, but that was abandoned by the appellant's Counsel.

As the appellant therefore has failed as to part of his appeal and succeeded as to the other, there will be no costs of the appeal.

Macpherson, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice. I think that section 22 of the Small Cause Court Act as it stood unamended by the Act of 1895 applied to this suit. The effect of the amendment was wholly to repeal section 22 as regards all suits in which the amount decreed was less than Rs. 2,000 and over Rs. 1,000, and by section 6 of the General Clauses Act the repeal did not affect the suit which was pending when the repealing Act came into operation. The learned Judge did not certify as required by section 22, and he had no discretion in the matter of costs.

Trevelyan, J.—The question of limitation having been abandoned by Mr. Dunne, the only question which we have to decide is as to the costs.

In my opinion section 11 of Act I of 1895 has no application to the present case.

At the time this suit was instituted Act I of 1895 had not been passed, so the alteration of Act XV of 1882, section 22, does not affect this suit. The matter is, I think, concluded by section 6 of the General Clauses Act, and the English cases as to the effect of an alteration in the law of procedure upon pending proceedings have no application.

Under section 22 of Act XV of 1882, the discretion which a Judge possesses as to costs has been taken away. In case of a decree for a sum under Rs. 2,000 the plaintiff is expressly prevented from obtaining his costs, except the Judge who tries the suit "certifies that it was one fit to be brought in the High Court."

I do not understand that in this case the learned Judge has certified in terms of the section. He has treated the cases as one [404] governed by his ordinary discretion, and has given reasons which would be equally applicable to any case whether tried in the High Court or in the Small Cause Court.

Having regard to the objects of the Act, I think that a certificate can only be given in a case where a Judge considers that the case was not one which ought to be brought in the Small Cause Court. So strictly has this section been construed, that I have never known a certificate given under it. It is not necessary to determine in what class of cases a certificate should be given; but I doubt very much whether the Legislature by the terms of section 22 intended much to extend the powers which they gave to the Judge under section 9 of Act XXIV of 1864, viz., that he could only certify when "by the reason of the difficulty, novelty or general importance of the case or of some erroneous course of decisions in like cases in the Court of Small Causes, the action was fit to be brought in the High Court."

I would hold that the plaintiffs were entitled to no costs in the Court below, and that each party should pay his own costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th February, 1897.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Sukurullah Kazi and others............Principal Defendants

Bama Sundari Dasi...........Plaintiff.[1]

Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), sections 38 and 78—Suit for rent—Whether it is necessary, to enable him to sue for rent, that a putnidar should be registered under the Act.

A putnidar is not a proprietor within the meaning of sections 38 † and 78 ‡ of the Land Registration Act.

[405] THIS appeal arose out of an action for rent. The plaintiff's allegation was that she was the proprietress of a share of a zemindari, and she also held other shares as putnidar and durputnidar. She further alleged that she got her name registered in respect of those shares under the Land Registration Act. The principal defendants denied the relationship of landlord and tenant, and also pleaded that, inasmuch as the name of the plaintiff was not registered under the Act, the suit was not maintainable. The Court of First Instance

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 252 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Nuffer Chundra Bhutta, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 30th of November 1894, reversing the decree of Babu Haro Kumar Rai, Munsif of Serampur, dated 26th of January 1894.

Proprietor and manager to register within specified time.

† [Sec. 38 :—Every proprietor of an estate or revenue-free property, or of any interest therein, respectively, being in possession of such estate, property, or interest, at the commencement of this Act, i.e., the 23rd August 1876, every joint proprietor of an estate or revenue-free property being in charge of such estate or property, or of any interest therein, respectively, on behalf of the other proprietors thereof, at the commencement of this Act, and every person being manager of an estate or revenue-free property, or of any interest therein, respectively, on behalf of a proprietor thereof, at the commencement of this Act, shall, if his name and the character and extent of his interest have not already been registered, make application in the manner hereinafter provided for the registration of his name and of the character and extent of his interest as such proprietor or manager, to the Collector of the district on the general register of which such estate or property is borne, or to any other officer who may have been empowered by the Collector to receive such application, within such time as the Lieutenant-Governor may fix as hereinafter provided]

No person bound to pay rent to claimant not registered.

‡ [Sec. 78 :—No person shall be bound to pay rent to any person claiming such rent as proprietor or manager of an estate or revenue-free property in respect of which he is required by this Act to cause his name to be registered, or as mortgagee, unless the name of such claimant shall have been registered under this Act ;

Payment to each of several proprietors, etc., holding in common tenancy.

and no person being liable to pay rent to two or more such proprietors, managers, or mortgagees holding in common tenancy, shall be bound to pay to any one such proprietor, manager, or mortgagee more than the amount which bears the same proportion to the whole of such rent as the extent of the interest in respect of which such proprietor, manager, or mortgagee is registered bears to the entire estate or revenue-free property.]

dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff failed to prove the relationship of landlord and tenant; and also holding that, as the plaintiff did not get her name registered in respect of the share of one Mongola Dasi, whose putni right she had purchased, the suit was not maintainable. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, holding that it was not necessary under the Land Registration Act to register the name of the putnidar in order to enable her to bring and maintain a suit for rent; but he did not decide the point whether there existed the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties.

From this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee and Babu Gyanendra Nath Basu for the Appellants.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Haro Kumar Mitter for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) (so far as it is material for the purposes of this report) was as follows:—

Maclean, C.J.:—The first point taken in this appeal was, that inasmuch as the plaintiff was not registered, the suit was not maintainable, having regard to sections 78 and 38 of Bengal Act VII of 1876. The question is, whether the plaintiff is a proprietor within the meaning of the term as used in those sections. I think that the purview of the Act is shown by the preamble which runs as follows:-

"Whereas it is expedient to make better provision for the preparation and maintenance of registers of revenue-paying and revenue-free lands, and of proprietors and managers thereof." Looking at the sections to which I have referred and to the preamble [406] of the Act, I think the term "proprietor" was intended to be confined to a zemindar and not to a putnidar; the first objection therefore fails.

Another preliminary objection was taken that an appeal would not lie having regard to section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Having regard to sub-section (b) of that section, it seems to me that the decree in this case has decided a question relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto, and therefore in my opinion an appeal lies.

This further question consequently arises. The Munsif found as a matter of fact that the relation of landlord and tenant did not subsist between the plaintiff and the defendant from whom she is claiming rent. The Subordinate Judge did not go into that matter at all. His judgment is absolutely silent upon the point. I am therefore of opinion that, as regards this point, which is the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, the case must be remanded to the Subordinate Judge for him to go into that question, and as the whole case is remanded, it will not prevent him from going into any other points which may have been raised, or from deciding, if he thinks fit, that a decree for the entire rent might be made, instead of a decree for a share only.

Upon these grounds the appeal will be allowed and the case remanded to the Lower Appellate Court for retrial. The costs of this appeal will abide and follow the result.

S. C. G. Appeal allowed. Case remanded.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY.

Lala Ramjewan Lal............Defendant

Dal Koer............Plaintiff in Appeal No. 87.*

Hindu Law—Will—Construction of Will—"Malik," Meaning of, as applied to female legatees—Contingent bequest—Gift absolute—Life estate—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), sections 111 and 125—Direction against alienation—Costs.

A Hindu, survivor of two brothers in a joint family under the Mitakshara law, died, leaving a widow and two daughters, a brother's widow, and [407] three daughters of his brother. In his will it was provided inter alia that his daughters and brother's daughters "shall be maliks and come in possession in equal shares of all the moveable and immoveable properties." It was also provided that in the event of any of the daughters of the testator or of his brother dying childless her share "shall devolve in equal shares on the surviving daughters," "but such share shall have no connection with her husband's family." The will made a further provision that the daughters should not have on any account the right to sell or alienate their shares. Held,

(1) The expression maliks ordinarily implies an absolute gift, and there is no authority for introducing into the will the idea that a female ought not to obtain anything beyond an estate for her lifetime.

(2) Having regard to section 111† of the Indian Succession Act [applicable under the Hindu Wills Act (1870)] and the Privy Council case of Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 563), the provision of survivorship applied only to the case of a daughter dying during the lifetime of the testator, and did not take effect in the present case, the daughter whose share was in question having died several years after the testator's death.

(3) As to the direction against alienation, section 125 ‡ of the Indian Succession Act provides for a case like this, and the daughters receive their shares as if there was no such direction.

(4) The will was not open to the construction that there was a life estate only conferred by it on the daughters.

ON these appeals, questions were raised on the construction of the will of one Sunder Lal, sole surviving male member of a joint Hindu family under the Mitakshara law. The will was executed on the 25th May 1883, and Sunder Lal died on the 7th September of the same year, leaving a family consisting of a widow and two daughters, a brother's widow, and three daughters of the said brother. The principal point argued in the appeals was the nature of the estate conferred by the will upon Jiu Koer, one of the daughters of the testator's brother and the succession to that estate upon her death which occurred on the 28th July 1888.

The material parts of the will were as follow:—

Para. 10. "After giving Rs. 50 per mensem to the widow of my deceased elder brother and Rs. 50 per mensem to my fourth wife, the three daughters of my deceased elder brother and the two daughters born of the womb of my second wife as well as that daughter or daughters who may be born of the womb of my fourth wife, shall be the maliks and come in possession in equal shares of all the moveable and immoveable properties. Perchance any of the above daughters die and she leaves any male child, then such [408] male child shall be the representative of his mother and get the share left by her. But in case any of the daughters die childless, then in that case the share left by such deceased daughter shall devolve in equal shares on the surviving daughters of my elder brother and of me the declarant. But such share shall have no connection with her husband's family."

Para. 11. "Perchance any of the daughters of my elder brother or the daughters of me the declarant give birth to no son, on the contrary she or they give birth to daughter or daughters, then in the place of a son, such daughter or daughters who will be born from her own womb shall inherit the properties of the daughter (who may not give birth to a son) which she might have inherited from me the declarant, and will succeed her mother as her representative. No other person shall have any claim to it."

Para. 17. "The daughters of my elder brother or their children succeeding them will be entitled to get equal shares in the properties which exist at the present moment, or which may be acquired hereafter, and they will be at liberty to remain in possession of the properties jointly, being on good terms with one another, and after joint management take their respective equal shares of the properties and appropriate the proceeds thereof, or after separately managing their respective shares appropriate the proceeds thereof, separately to their own respective use. But my daughters or the daughters of my elder brother shall not have on any account the rights to sell or alienate, directly or indirectly, the shares of the properties or of the houses which may fall to their respective shares. In case any of them does so, it will be held null and void in the Courts of Justice."

The plaintiffs in the three cases were, respectively, Dal Koer and Jhamela Koer (the two daughters of the testator) and Birja Koer (one of the daughters of his brother). The defendant in all the suits was Ram Jowan Lal, husband of Jiu Koer, deceased. The Subordinate Judge held that the will did not confer an absolute estate on the daughters, and that the defendant was not entitled to succeed to Jiu Koer's estate.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

These three appeals are against decrees made in three several [409] suits which were tried together; and the only question before us is as to the construction of the will of one Lala Sunder Lal made on the 25th May 1882.

Before referring to the terms of the will it will be well to mention that the point is shortly whether, having regard to the terms of the will, the husband of a daughter who survived the testator is entitled to obtain the share given by the will to that daughter, or whether he is to be excluded from any rights under the terms of the will. It is not disputed that if an absolute estate was given to the daughter by this will, and there was nothing in the will giving the share to some one else on her death, the husband as her stridhan heir would be entitled to it. The important parts of the will are referred to by the learned Judge in the Court below. The testator begins by expressing a hope that the family will continue to live jointly, but in the event of disputes he makes certain provisions. Paragraphs 10 and 11 are the two first which we have to consider. Paragraph 9 first of all gives Rs. 50 a month to the widow of the testator's brother, and Rs. 50 a month to the testator's fourth wife, and then paragraph 10 provides that the three daughters of his elder brother and the two daughters of the testator's second wife as well as the daughter or daughters who may be born of the testator's fourth wife, shall be maliks and come in possession in equal shares of all the moveable and immoveable properties. Prima facie there can be no question but that a gift, when there are no controlling words, is an absolute gift, and the expression "maliks" used here would ordinarily imply an absolute gift. But it is contended that we must introduce into this will what is said to be the prevalent Hindu idea that a female ought not to obtain anything beyond an estate for her lifetime, and, therefore, although the word "maliks" is used, we must cut down the estate to the extent of an estate given to a Hindu daughter. There is no authority for such a proposition. The words are absolute, and if they stood by themselves without anything to the contrary it would be impossible for us to say that they did not give an absolute estate. The following are the words upon which the lower Court has acted and upon which reliance has been placed in this Court: "Perchance any of the above daughters die, and she leaves any male child, then such male child shall be the representative of his mother and get the share left by her. But in case any of [410] the daughters die childless, then in that case the share left by such deceased daughter shall devolve in equal shares on the surviving daughters of my elder brother and of me the declarant. But such share shall have no connection with her husband's family. Perchance any of the daughters of my elder brother or the daughters of me the declarant give birth to no son, on the contrary she or they give birth to daughter, or daughters, then in the place of a son, such daughter or daughters who will be born from her own womb shall inherit the properties of the daughter (who may not give birth to a son) which she might have inherited from me the declarant and will succeed her mother as her representative. No other person shall have any claim to it."

We think that having regard to the provisions of section 111 of the Indian Succession Act, which is made applicable to Hindus by the Hindu Wills Act, and having regard also to the recent case of Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (I.L.R., 23 Cal., 563), these provisions can apply only to the case of a daughter dying during the lifetime of the testator. "Perchance any of the above daughters die," as has been pointed out, must refer to their death at some particular time. No other time is pointed at by the will except the time when the share would be distributable, namely, the time of the death of the testator, and quite apart from section 111 and the case to which we have referred, it is clear that the scheme of this portion of the will provides for all events which might happen before the testator's death. If the daughter dies leaving a male child, the male child is to become the representative of his mother and to get the share left by her, that is to say, the share which she would have obtained if she had survived the testator. It is not disputed that a male child would obtain an absolute estate in this property. If the construction sought to be put upon this will by the respondent is correct, although the daughter would succeed to a life-estate, yet a son who succeeded her would get a very much greater interest in the estate than that of his mother, whereas the will provides that he is to get the very share left by her. Similarly, if the daughter dies childless, the share which she would have acquired goes over to the other daughters. If she dies leaving a daughter, then the daughter will also succeed her mother as her representative in the same way as the son.

[411] Much reliance was placed upon the words "but such share shall have no connection with the husband's family." That expression, it is true, is somewhat vague. The husband's family would of course include his son, etc. But assuming that it was intended to apply to the husband and persons of the family other than those related by blood to the testator, we think it was only intended so to apply where the daughter dies during the testator's lifetime. One can well understand that a man leaving property and wishing to provide for his daughter would not desire to provide for his son-in-law on the death of the daughter, as a son-in-law's relationship to the father-in-law would necessarily be altered by the death of the daughter, and the father-in-law would not have the same interest in providing for him, though he would not necessarily wish to exclude him entirely, in case his daughter was alive. He would not contemplate events happening so long after his own death. It is not to be supposed, in the absence of anything more definite, that the exclusion was to be for ever and ever, whatever events might happen, of any person connected with the husband. There is nothing on the face of the will to suggest such an exclusion. In our opinion the testator in this case intended to exclude his son-in-law only in the event of the daughter dying before his own death.

The only remaining question is, whether there is anything in the will to cut down the absolute gift in the 10th paragraph. There is nothing in any of the paragraphs in any way affecting this question, unless it be paragraph 17; and the only portion of that paragraph which may be said to deal with it is at the end: "But my daughter or the daughters of my elder brother shall not have on any account the right to sell or alienate directly or indirectly the shares of the properties or of the houses which may fall to their respective shares. In case any of them does so, it will be held null and void in the Courts of Justice." It is said that the effect of that is to give a life-estate to the daughter, that is, that the effect of giving an absolute estate plus a restriction on its sale or alienation is to give a life-estate. There is nothing in the will about a life-estate being given to the daughters, and if they had a life-estate given to them, there is no reason why there should be any provision restricting them from selling or alienating. [412] Having a life-estate, they would have no right to sell or alienate. This case is not different from any other case where a testator makes an absolute gift, and in some other part of his will puts in a provision against sale or alienation. It is a case provided for by section 125 of the Indian Succession Act. That section says: "When a fund is bequeathed absolutely to or for the benefit of any person, but the will contains a direction that it shall be applied or enjoyed in a particular manner, the legatee shall be entitled to receive the fund as if the will had contained no such direction." That embodies a well known principle of law. Moreover, regarding this question as to whether there was a life-estate, one would expect, having regard to the express gifts to the legatees as maliks, to find that there have been some gifts over after the deaths of the daughters. Paragraphs 10 and 11 refer only to events happening during their life, and there is no provision in the will as to who should enjoy the property after their deaths. We think that this will is not open to the construction that there was a life-estate. Giving a reasonable construction to the will, and taking the whole of it into consideration, we are unable to say that the estate should in any way be limited. It follows that the appeals must be allowed, the decrees of the lower Court set aside, and the suits dismissed.

Regarding the question of costs, this is, we think, a case where the defendant is entitled to his costs. This is not an ordinary case of a suit brought for the construction of a will. It is a case in which an attempt has been made to oust from his property a person who has been enjoying possession of it, although the title of the plaintiff depends upon the construction of a will. He took his risk as to whether the Court would take his view of the construction, and, having failed, he must pay for the litigation. The defendant (appellant) is, in our opinion, entitled to costs against the plaintiffs-respondents in each case, and the order we make is that the appellant do recover in each of the appeals one-third of the highest set of costs, in respect to the hearing fee, that he is entitled to in any one of these three appeals. This concerns the hearing fee in this Court alone. He is also entitled to all other costs in these appeals, and to the costs, in the lower Court.

The 15th March, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY.

Fassih-ud-din and another (plaintiffs) and others............Defendants 4 and 5.

Mesne profits—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Article 109—Wrong-doers independent of the defendant—Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 211.

In a suit brought on 26th September 1893 for mesne profits of land, for the possession of which a decree had been previously obtained against the defendant, the plaintiff claimed damages in respect of the Fusli years 1297—1300, the year 1297 F. ending on the 28th September 1890. The defendant objected inter alia that the claim in respect of the period beyond three years before the date of suit was barred by limitation, and that she was not liable for profits of the lands from which she had been dispossessed by others. Held :—

(1) Under Article 109 *, Schedule II of the Limitation Act, the defendant is liable for the mesne profits received by her or which she might have with due diligence received during the three years before the date of suit, and not before. The period of three years fixed has no reference to the time when rents fall due. Byjnath Pershad v. Badhoo Singh (10 W. R., 486); Thakoor Dass Acharjee Chuckerbutty v. Shoshee Bhoosun Chatterjee (17 W. R., 208), and Thakoor Dass Roy Chowdhry v. Nobin Kristo Ghose (22 W. R., 126) distinguished.

(2) In the case of every wrong the liability of the defendant is limited to damages for the wrong which he has himself done. With reference to the definition of mesne profits in section 211 † of the Civil Procedure Code, if the defendant was excluded from possession, she could not be said to have actually or even impliedly received the profits, nor could she with ordinary or extraordinary diligence have received them. The case was remanded to determine what mesne profits were payable between the 26th September 1890 and the date, if any, when dispossession was proved.

THE facts and arguments in this case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the legal representatives of Imambandi Begum, the original defendant, appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory, Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Moulvie Mahomed Mustapha Khan for the Appellants.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee, Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee, Babu Dwarkanath Chakrabarti and Babu Lal Mohan Ganguli for the Respondent.

[414] The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows :—

The plaintiffs, having obtained in another suit a decree for possession of property from which they had been ousted, have brought this suit for mesne profits.

This suit was originally brought only against Imambandi Begum, who was the principal defendant in the other suit, but in consequence of her alleging in her written statement that she had been dispossessed by other persons of a portion of the land in respect of which mesne profits were sought, those other persons, viz., Dulhin Golab Kunwar and Awadh Behari Narain Singh, who had also been parties to the suit for possession, were, at the instance of the plaintiffs, added as defendants in this suit.

Imambandi Begum died pending this suit.

* [Art. 109 :—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
For the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant.	Three years ...	When the profits are received, or where the plaintiff has been dispossessed by a decree afterwards set aside on appeal when he recovers possession.]

† [Sec. 211 :—When the suit is for the recovery of possession of immoveable property yielding rent or other profit, the Court may provide in the decree for the payment of rent or mesne profits in respect of such property from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession to the party in whose favour the decree is made, or until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree whichever event first occurs), with interest thereupon at such rate as the Court thinks fit.

In suits for land, Court may decree payment of mesne profits with interest.

Explanation :—' Mesne profits ' of property mean those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received, or might with ordinary diligence have received, therefrom, together with interest on such profits.]

The learned Subordinate Judge has given to the plaintiffs a decree against the heirs of Imambandi Begum, and has declined to adjudicate on the liability of the added defendants, considering it to be a question between the defendants themselves.

The heirs of Imambandi have alone appealed to this Court, so that their liability to the plaintiffs can alone be determined in this appeal, and in whatever way we may alter the decree against them, we cannot in this appeal fix any liability upon the added defendants.

The two questions argued before us were: (1) Whether the plaintiffs can recover mesne profits for more than three years before suit? and (2) whether the liability of Imambandi for mesne profits continued after she had been herself ousted from the property?

The learned Subordinate Judge has given a decree for more than three years before suit. His judgment on this question is as follows: "1st Issue—The mesne profits are claimed from 1297; and I have to determine whether the claim for 1297 and 1298 is barred by limitation. The present suit was filed on the 26th September 1893, and the plaintiffs' cause of action for the mesne profits of 1297 arose at the beginning of 1298. The Fusli year 1297 ended on the 28th September 1890; and the plaint in this case having been filed on the 26th September 1893, the claim [416] for the mesne profits of 1297 was just within time; and the claim for 1298 is à fortiori not barred by time."

The appropriate article of the Limitation Act is Article 109, which allows three years from the time when the mesne profits are received, i.e., the defendant is liable for all mesne profits received by him (or to use the words of section 211 of the Civil Procedure Code, which he might with ordinary diligence have received) during the three years before suit, and not before. There is nothing in the Act to fix the period with reference to the time when rents fall due. It is the actual receipt of the rents, whenever they may have fallen due, which creates the liability. The rents long since due or rents not yet due would, when received, equally fall within the expression mesne profits, as much as rents which are at the moment accruing due. This interpretation is that which, as far as we know, has been always placed upon this article of the Limitation Act and we know of no authority to the contrary under the present Limitation Law. In the case of Mahomed Riasat Ali v. Hasin Banu (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 157) a decree for more than the three years was admitted by Counsel to be incorrect and was accordingly varied by Her Majesty in Council. The decisions in Byjnath Pershad v. Badhoo Singh (10 W. R., 486), Thakoor Dass Acharjee Chuckerbutty v. Shoshee Bhoosun Chatterjee (17 W. R., 208), and Thakoor Das Roy v. Nobin Kristo Ghose (22 W. R., 127) are under a different law, and are not therefore binding upon us. In our opinion the plaintiffs cannot in any event recover mesne profits received by Imambandi, or which might have been received by her, before the 26th September 1890.

The second question arises as follows: In her written statement Imambandi alleged that she had been excluded from occupation of a part of the land by an order of the Criminal Court obtained at the instance of the added defendants. The second issue is wide enough to include this question. The learned Subordinate Judge treats the question as one arising between the defendants themselves, not as arising between the plaintiffs and Imambandi. It is true, he says, that if the evidence taken by the Amin be not looked into, there is no reliable evidence whatsoever to show, that Dulhin Golab Kunwar and Awadh Behari [416] ever held any of the lands in dispute. But it is clear from his judgment that he declined to allow this question to be entered into.

It remains to be seen whether the Subordinate Judge's view is justified by the law. To use the words of Mr. Justice PHEAR in Indurjeet Singh v. Radhey Singh (21 W. R., 269): "Generally from the nature of the claim to mesne profits, mesne profits ought not to be estimated for any period during which the defendant who is to be made responsible for them was not active in keeping the plaintiff out of possession." In that case the property was in the hands of a receiver appointed by the Court, and the same learned Judge pointed out that the defendant could not be answerable for damages for mesne profits in respect of those years during which an officer of the Court and not the defendant was keeping the plaintiff out of possession.

On this question the circumstance that an officer of the Court was keeping the plaintiff out of possession cannot differentiate it from the case where any person other than the defendant and not acting under or in collusion with the defendant was keeping the plaintiff out of possession.

Mesne profits are defined by section 211 of the Code of Civil Procedure as meaning those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received, or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom together with interest on such profits. If the defendant was excluded from possession, she can scarcely be said to have been in wrongful or any possession. She cannot be said to have actually or even impliedly received the profits, nor could she, with ordinary or extraordinary diligence, have received them. This view of the law was also taken in the case of Haradhun Dutt v. Joy Kisto Banerjee (11 W. R., 444).

It is complained that it would be hard upon a plaintiff to expect him to be continually enquiring whether a wrong-doer had ceased to be in possession, but in the case of every wrong, the liability of the defendant is limited to damages for the wrong which he himself has done. He is not a surety for damages resulting from the acts of other wrong-doers who are independent of him.

[417] In the case of Doe v. Harlow (12 A. & E., 40) the action was brought against a wrong-doer, his tenant, and the tenant's under-tenant. Lord DENMAN left the case to the Jury to say on the case against all the defendants how long the three had been jointly keeping out the rightful proprietors. On the application by the tenant for a new trial Lord DENMAN said: "If there had been no evidence here but that the under-tenant remained in possession I should have left the case differently." The evidence on which the Court relied was that the tenant had received rent from the under-tenant, and was therefore in possession through him. This case, we think, assumes that a wrong-doer is not responsible for the acts of another wrong-doer, who is independent of him. In Mayne on Damages, 4th Edition, p. 418, it is said that in an action for mesne profits when the ground of action is the bare fact of possession, damages can only be recovered for the time the possession was actually retained. The case must go back to the lower Court, in order that the appellants may have an opportunity of proving that Imambandi Begum was dispossessed. Inasmuch as her possession has been determined by the decree in the previous suit, the onus of proving dispossession must lie upon her representatives the appellants. They will not be liable for mesne profits for any time after her dispossession, or before the 26th of September 1890. The Court below must determine what mesne profits are payable between the 26th of September 1890 and the date, if any, when dispossession is proved. If dispossession be not proved, then the plaintiffs will be entitled to mesne profits up to date of suit. It will be necessary that an opportunity for giving evidence should be afforded to the parties.

We allow no costs of this appeal except to the added defendants who are entitled to their costs, as no case was or could have been made against them in this appeal.

Appeal allowed. Case remanded.

Subbayya v. Krishna (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 186) followed.

Lakshmandas Parashram v. Ganpatrav Krishna (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 365) distinguished.

Article 134 * of the second schedule of the Indian Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to such a suit.

The difference between the provisions of section 539 of the Civil Procedure Code and those of 52 George III, cap. 101 (Romilly's Act), pointed out.

Persons having a right to worship in a temple are within the scope of section 539. Under that section, as originally enacted, the words were " having a direct interest in the trust, " and the word " direct " has been taken out by Act VII of 1888. The inference is that the Legislature intended to allow persons having the same sort of interest that is sufficient under section 14 of Act XX of 1863 to maintain a suit under section 539.

The Collector in giving his consent to the institution of a suit under section 539 has to exercise his judgment in the matter, and see not only whether the persons suing are persons having an interest in the trust, but also whether the trust is a public trust of the kind contemplated by the section, and whether there are primâ facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust. But where the form of the permission showed that he had omitted to exercise his judgment in the matter of the interest of the plaintiffs in the trust such omission was held to be a mere irregularity and within the scope of section 578 of the Civil Procedure Code.

THE plaintiffs brought a suit under section 539 of the Civil [419] Procedure Code against defendant No. 1, the mohunt of the akra of the idol Sri Sri Narsingh, and against defendant No. 2, to whom defendant No. 1 had alienated certain immoveable properties of the idol, on the allegation that the akra was a public place of worship for Hindus in general. The plaint alleged that plaintiff No. 1 had for some time been discharging the duties of the mohunt of that akra, and that plaintiff No. 2 was the pujari of the idol; that the properties described in the schedules to the plaint constituted the debutter property of the idol; that of those certain portions had been wrongfully alienated by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2, and that defendant No. 1 had by various acts committed by him in breach of trust, disqualified himself for holding the office of mohunt. The plaintiffs prayed that the properties in dispute might be declared to be the debutter property of the idol; that the alienations in favour of defendant No. 2 might be declared to be inoperative as against the rights of the idol; that defendant No. 1 might be removed from the office of mohunt; that some competent person might be appointed mohunt in his place; and that the properties in dispute might be taken from the possession of the defendants and be delivered to the custody of the person who might be appointed. Defendant No. 2 in his written statement alleged, inter alia, that the suit was not maintainable under section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the properties in dispute did not belong to the idol. Defendant No. 1 did not appear. At the hearing a further objection was taken that the suit was barred by limitation.

The plaintiffs obtained a decree in the Court below, and defendant No. 2 brought this appeal on the grounds, inter alia, firstly, that section 539 of the

* [Art. 134 : -

Code did not apply to the facts of this case; secondly, that the consent of the Collector given in this case was not such as that section required; thirdly, that the plaintiffs had no such interest in the trust within the meaning of section 539 as would authorize them to maintain a suit under that section; and, fourthly, that the suit was barred by limitation.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhry, and Babu Mohini Mohun Chuckerbutty, for the Appellant.

Babu Lal Mohun Das, and Babu Prosano Gopal Roy, for the Respondents.

[420] Dr. Rash Behari Ghose.—The suit purports to be brought under section 539 of the Civil Procedure Code for the removal of the trustee and for a decree for possession against defendant No. 2, who is a third party. Such a suit is not contemplated by the section which only authorizes suits to obtain certain specified reliefs —See Rangasami Naickan v. Varadappa Naickan (I. L. R., 17 Mad., 462). In his judgment in that case COLLINS, C.J., says: "It appears to me that section 539 of the Civil Procedure Code was drafted on the lines of 52 George III, cap. 101, commonly called Romilly's Act, and the draftsman must have been well aware that it had been held that the Act did not apply when the question arose as to whether a trustee should be adversely dismissed for misconduct. Is it probable, therefore, that if the Legislature intended the section to apply to a case where the removal of a trustee was in question that specific relief would not have been mentioned? The section enumerates the specific reliefs that are given, and the first is appointment of new trustees under the trust. We are however asked to add words to the section, and to say that the Legislature intended to give the power to remove adversely a trustee although the Legislature refrained from saying so. The words 'granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require' cannot under the recognized rules of construction be said to give the Court the power to remove a trustee." See also the judgment of AYYAR, J., in Subbayya v. Krishna [I.L.R., 14 Mad., 186 (188)]. In Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 810) it was decided that section 539 applied both to contentious and non-contentious cases. "A jurisdiction to remove trustees has always been exercised by the Mofussil Courts. The remedy is not wanting altogether; but except in this section of the Code there is no provision of law empowering any public official to take action"—per SHEPHARD, J., in Rangasami Naickan v. Varadappa Naickan (I. L. R., 17 Mad., 462). See also Sheoratan Kunwari v. Ram Pargash (I. L. R, 18 All., 227) and Lakshmandas Parashram v. Ganpatrav Krishna (I.L.R., 8 Bom, 365). The cases upon Romilly's Act are collected in "Lewin on Trusts, 9th Ed., 1061, 1062. Although the Act authorises any two or more persons to present the petition, the words must be understood [421] to mean any persons having an interest: and the Court is bound to see, not only that the petitioners are possessed of a clear interest, but that they prove themselves to be possessed of the interest they allege in their petition. The words 'an interest' in section 539 were substituted for the words 'a direct interest, by Act VII of 1888, section 44; but the cases show the two expressions to be the same. I submit also that the sanction given was no sanction, and refer to Ex parte Skinner (2 Mer., 456). In that case Lord ELDON says: "The intention of the Legislature in framing the Act (Romilly's) was to guard charitable trusts against abuse, and for that purpose to prevent such proceedings from being instituted as are too frequently instituted for no other reason than because it is known that the costs will be payable out of the charity funds. It was with this view that the Legislature provided for the signature of the Attorney-General, or in case of there being no Attorney, of the Solicitor-General; and I desire to have it understood that no petition under the Act ought to receive that signature, except upon the same deliberation that it would be thought fit to afford to the case if it were presented in the shape of an information." As to limitation, article 120 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act applies. Mitra on Limitation, 3rd Ed., pp. 765—767. The plaintiffs had no such interest as to authorise them to bring a suit under section 539. See Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundul (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 32).

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhry on the same side.

Babu Lal Mohun Das for the Respondents.—It has been held both in Calcutta and Bombay that section 539 applies to suits for the removal of trustees and also to suits brought against third parties. The clauses of that section are not exhaustive, and the words "appointing new trustees" includes removing old trustees. It has been held by the Madras High Court that a suit will lie for the removal of a trustee. Subbayya v. Krishna (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 186). That decision was followed in Tricumdass Mulji v. Khimji Vullabhdass (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 627). The cases of Lutifunnissa v. Nazirun Bibi (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 33), Dhurrum Singh v. Kissen Singh (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 767), Sajedur Raja v. Baidya [422] Nath Deb (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 397), Raghubar Dial v. Kesho Ramanuj Das (I. L. R., 11 All., 18), Chukkun Lal Roy v. Lohit Mohun Roy (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 906), Kalishunkur Doss v. Gopal Chunder Dutt (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 49), Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London v. Gellatly (L. R., 3 Ch. D., 610) were also referred to.

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhry in reply.

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) after setting out the facts continued as follows:—

Upon the first point, the contention on behalf of the appellant is two-fold, viz., that section 539 does not contemplate a suit for the removal of any trustee; nor does it contemplate a suit against a third party, the object of the section according to the appellant being only to authorize suits for obtaining certain reliefs specified in it when such suits are not brought adversely to the trustees for the time being; and it is urged that the section is drawn upon the lines on which the English Statute known as Sir Samuel Romilly's Act, 52 George III, cap. 101, is drawn. In support of this argument the decision of a Full Bench of the Madras Court in the case of Rangasami Naickan v. Varadappa Naickan (I. L. R., 17 Mad., 462), and the cases of Sheoratan Kunwari v. Ram Pargash (I. L. R., 18 All., 227) and Lakshmandas Parashram v. Ganpatrav Krishna (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 365) are relied upon.

On the other hand it is argued on behalf of the respondents that section 539 is very different in its terms and in its scope from Sir Samuel Romilly's Act; and that both in this Court and in the Bombay High Court it has been held that it applies to suits brought for the removal of trustees, and also to suits brought against third parties in whose hands trust property may have passed under improper alienations by the trustee; and in support of this argument, the cases of Chintaman Bajaji Dev v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 612), Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 810), Lutifunnissa Bibi v. Nazirun Bibi (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 33) and Sajedur Raja v. Baidya Nath Deb (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 397) are cited.

[423] Upon the question whether section 539 should have the limited scope contended for by the learned Vakils for the appellant, or whether it should have the wider scope that the other side contends for, the arguments on both sides have been fully set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice SHEPHARD in Rangasami Naickan v. Varadappa Naickan (I.L.R., 17 Mad., 462), and also in the judgments of Mr. Justice MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and Mr. Justice WEIR in Subbayya v. Krishna (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 186). We do not think it necessary to notice in detail all these arguments. It will be enough to say that though section 539 does not expressly specify the dismissal of a trustee, or the taking possession of trust property from the hands of any third party, amongst the reliefs that are specifically mentioned, still, having regard to the fact that the cases to which the section is made applicable are cases of alleged breach of trust, that amongst the reliefs expressly mentioned are included the appointment of new trustees under the trust and the vesting of any property in the trustees under the trust, and that these specified reliefs are followed by the general clause, "such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require," we think the terms of the section include a case like the present. For the case being one of alleged breach of trust, and the section expressly authorizing the appointment of new trustees, there can be no good reason for limiting the expression, "appointment of new trustees" to cases of appointment of new trustees in addition to old trustees, to the exclusion of cases in which the appointment is in supersession of them. Moreover, where, as in this case, the alleged breach of trust consists mainly in improper alienations of the trust property by the trustee, the vesting of any property in the trustees to be newly appointed, coupled with "such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require," may well include the taking possession of the trust property from the hands of a third party, to whom the same may be shown to have been improperly alienated.

We are therefore of opinion that looking to the terms of the section, there is no good reason for thinking that it should be limited in its scope in the manner contended for on behalf of the appellant.

[424] But then it is further urged that if we look to the source from which this provision of the law (section 539) is derived, we shall find that there is a reason why its scope should be limited in the manner contended for. It is said that this section is taken from the English Statute known as Sir Samuel Romilly's Act. Now, although there may be some similarity between the provisions of section 539 of the Code and those of Romilly's Act, a comparison of the two enactments will show that they differ in many material respects.

In the first place, whereas the procedure in Romilly's Act is expressly stated to be summary, the proceedings being initiated by a petition, the procedure under section 539 is the ordinary procedure applicable to suits, the proceedings being initiated by a plaint.

In the second place, while Romilly's Act contains no qualification as to who the persons are that are authorized to file the petition therein contemplated, section 539 expressly enacts that the persons who are authorized to institute a suit under it are persons who have an interest in the trust. It is said, that this, if not taken from the Act, is taken from decisions upon Romilly's Act. That is true. The decision from which this qualification, that the persons authorized to sue must have an interest in the trust, is taken, is that in the case of the Corporation of Ludlow v. Greenhouse [1 Bligh. N. S. 17 (66) 93]; but though this one qualification is taken from that decision, other qualifications such as these—that the enactment is not to apply to cases which are brought adversely to the trustees, and that it is not to apply where any stranger is interested, which are laid down in that very case—have not been expressly incorporated in the section. And what is the inference to be drawn from this? To our minds the inference is clear that these restrictions were not intended to be imposed upon the scope and operation of the section. And the reason for this appears to be clear. Romilly's Act was held to be inapplicable to cases brought adversely against trustees, and to cases in which third parties were interested, because as we gather from the case of the Corporation of Ludlow v.

Greenhouse [1 Bligh. N. S. 17 (66) 93] the procedure prescribed by that Act, [425] viz., that by petition, was considered inapplicable to cases of those descriptions.

Nor can we accept as correct the argument that section 539 created a new and special jurisdiction.

The real object of the special provisions of section 539 seems to us to be clear. Persons interested in any trust were, if they could all join, always competent to maintain a suit against any trustee for his removal for breach of trust, but where the joining of all of them was inconvenient or impracticable, it was considered desirable that some of them might sue without joining the others, provided they obtained the consent of the Advocate-General or of the Collector of the District, and this condition was imposed to prevent an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits being brought against trustees by different persons interested in the trust. Where this condition is fulfilled, and the risk of harassing suits being brought against trustees is thus guarded against, there is no reason why suits brought under the section should be restricted in any other way.

It is argued that if a suit under this section is allowed to be brought against a defaulting trustee and a third party, the suit may be open to the objecton of misjoinder. Where a suit under section 539 is open to that objection, the objection will no doubt have effect given to it, but it does not follow that a suit against a trustee guilty of breach of trust and a third party who has puchased any trust property from him can, in no case, be brought under the section, even though the objection as to misjoinder does not apply In the present case we are of opinion that no objection on the ground of misjoinder can apply, the suit so far as any such objection is concerned being properly framed within the meaning of section 28 of the Code.

Then as to the cases cited, with all respect for the learned Judges who decided the case of Rangasami Naickan v. Varadappa Naickan (I. L. R., 17 Mad., 462), we must say that the reasons given in the judgments of Mr. Justice WEIR and Mr. Justice BEST in Subbayya v. Krishna (I.L.R., 14 Mad., 186) commend themselves for our acceptance, and we follow the view taken by them with reference to the meaning and construction of [426] section 539. The case of Sheoratan Kunwari v. Ram Pargash (I. L. R., 18 All., 227) does not call for any detailed examination, as the reasons for the decision that section 539 of the Code was inapplicable to it are not set out in the judgment very explicitly. And as for the case of Lakshmandas Parashram v. Ganpatrav Krishna (I.L.R., 8 Bom., 365) that case is quite distinguishable from the present, as the object of the plaintiff in that case, to use the words of the learned Chief Justice, was "merely to recover the trust property from outsiders" whereas in the present case the suit is brought against a trustee who is guilty of breach of trust, and a third party is added as a defendant, because part of the trust property has passed into his hands by improper alienation from the trustee. On the other hand, the view we take is supported by the decision of the Bombay High Court in Chintaman Bajaji Dev v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (I.L.R., 15 Bom., 612), and of this Court in Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (I.L R., 20 Cal., 816), in which it was held that a suit for the dismissal of a trustee comes within the scope of section 539, and also by the dicta of the learned Judges of this Court in Latifunnissa Bibi v. Nazirun Bibi (I L.R., 11 Cal., 33), and in Sajedur Raja v. Baidyanath Deb (I.L R , 20 Cal , 397), which are to the effect, that a suit brought against a trustee and a person claiming under an alienation from him comes within the scope of section 539 We may add that the case of Sajedur Raja v. Baidyanath Deb (I.L.R., 20 Cal., 397) is of special importance, as that was a case against the present defendants with reference to this very endowment on account of same breach of trust that is alleged in this case, the only difference between the two cases being that the plaintiffs there were different from those who have instituted this suit; and in that case the present appellant successfully contended that the suit which was for the dismissal of the trustee, and for vesting in new trustees the trust property, part of which had passed to him, was one which came within the scope of section 539.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that the first contention of the appellant must fail.

Then as to the second, it was argued upon the authority of the case of Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundul (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 32) that persons in the posi-[427]tion of the plaintiffs in this case who were only entitled to worship in a public temple, are not persons having an "interest" within the meaning of section 539, so as to be authorized to maintain a suit under that section.

It was further argued that a comparison of section 539 of the Code with sections 14 and 15 of Act XX of 1863 would go to show that the interest required in the first mentioned provision of law must be different from a mere right to worship.

Now, it should be borne in mind that under section 539, as originally enacted, the words were "having a direct interest in the trust," and the word "direct" has been taken out by Act VII of 1888. The inference, therefore, is that the Legislature intended to allow persons having the same sort of interest that is sufficient under section 14 of Act XX of 1863 to maintain a suit under section 539, and this change in the law is, in our opinion, sufficient to distinguish the present case from that of Jan Ali v Ram Nath Mundul (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 32) which was decided before section 539 had been amended by the omission of the word "direct"

On the other hand, we may refer to the case of Monohar Ganesh Tambekar v. Lakhmiram Govindram (I. L R, 12 Bom, 247) to show that persons having a right to worship in a temple are within the scope of section 539 We may add that the two plaintiffs in the present case have a somewhat larger interest than that of mere worshippers, plaintiff No 1 alleging that he has for some time been performing some of the duties of the mohunt, and plaintiff No 2, that he has been performing the poojah in the temple These allegations have been supported by some evidence which is not contradicted.

In support of the third contention, that the consent of the Collector is not such as section 539 contemplates, our attention has been drawn to the terms of the permission, Exhibit 7, p 47 of the Paper Book This is what the Deputy Commissioner, who is also the Collector, says "Assuming that petitioners are persons interested I accord my consent to the institution by them of a suit for the purpose of obtaining the relief directed in the petition"

[428] No doubt the language of this permission is in one respect not such as it ought to be. When the law directs that the consent of the Collector should be obtained as a necessary preliminary to the maintaining of a suit under section 539, the Collector is required to exercise his judgment in the matter before giving his consent This view is borne out by the observations of Lord ELDON in Ex parte Skinner (2 Mer, 453) But though the consent of the Collector is thus defective in language in this one respect, we do not think that the defect is fatal to the case The Collector in giving his consent has to exercise his judgment in the matter, and see, not only whether the persons suing are persons who have an interest in the trust, but also whether the trust is a public trust of the kind contemplated by the section, and whether there are prima facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust, and, as was pointed out in the course of the argument, there is nothing to show that the Collector has not exercised his judgment as to the last two points. It is only in regard to one matter, namely, that relating to the interest of the petitioners in the trust that the language of the permission may be taken to indicate that the Collector did not exercise his judgment. Though that is so, we think it is after all an irregularity in an order which the law requires should form a necessary preliminary to the institution of a suit, and such an irregularity in our opinion comes within the scope of section 578 which protects judgments and decrees from interference in appeal on mere technical grounds.

The next point for consideration is whether the suit is barred by limitation. As against defendant No. 1, no question of limitation can arise, the suit coming within the scope of section 10 of the Limitation Act; and as against defendant No. 2, the provision of the Limitation Act applicable is, we think, article 134 of the second schedule. It was urged for the appellant that that article does not apply to this suit, as it is not a suit for possession; that the article applicable is 120; and that as the suit has been brought more than six years after the date of the latest of the alienations in favour of defendant No. 2, it is barred notwithstanding that it is brought within twelve years from the date of the earliest alienation.

[429] Article 120 can apply only if article 134 is not applicable to the case. The question, therefore, is whether the suit can be treated as one for possession within the meaning of article 134. That article provides for suits to recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgage and afterwards purchased from the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration. The limitation is twelve years, and it runs from the date of the purchase.

The fifth prayer in the plaint is, "that the property may be taken from the possession of the defendants and delivered to the possession and custody of the person who may be appointed mohunt and trustee for the management of the idol's properties;" and section 539, as we have already observed, does contemplate a suit of this nature as coming within its scope.

That being so, we do not think that it would be any undue straining of language to say that a suit for such a purpose is a suit to recover possession of property which had been bequeathed in trust and afterwards purchased from the trustee. Article 134 therefore applies to this suit, and it is not barred by limitation.

The grounds urged before us therefore all fail and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

F. K. D. —————— Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 6th April, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Queen-Empress

versus

Kayemullah Mandal and others *

Magistrate, Jurisdiction of—Power of Commitment to Sessions Judge—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), sections 28, 207, 245, 254—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 147—Circular order No. 9 of 6th September 1869—Rioting.

The commitment of a case under section 147† of the Penal Code to the Court of Session by a Deputy Magistrate is not necessarily illegal.

Although the case is shown to be triable only by a Magistrate under the second schedule of the Criminal Procedure Code there is nothing in section 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code which prevents a Magistrate commit-[430]ting a case under section 147 of the Penal Code to the Court of Session, provided he finds that the accused has committed an offence, which in his opinion cannot be adequately punished by him

The instructions contained in Circular No. 9 of 6th September 1869 are to be read subject to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code.

THE accused were charged before a Deputy Magistrate with the offence of rioting under section 147 of the Penal Code, with respect to the cutting of certain crops. From the evidence it appeared that one of the men concerned in the riot, who was on the side of the person cutting the crops, died from effects of injury alleged to have been inflicted by an axe by some one connected with the affray. The Deputy Magistrate was of opinion that, following the orders contained in Circular No. 9 of 6th September 1869, it was his duty to commit the accused to the Court of Sessions. The Officiating Sessions Judge of Rungpur, Mr. Ahmad, to whom the accused was committed, being of opinion that the commitment of the accused under section 147 of the Penal Code was illegal, such offence being one exclusively triable by a Magistrate according to Schedule II of the Criminal Procedure Code, referred it to this Court for the purpose of getting the commitment quashed.

Babu Hem Chunder Mitter for the accused. - The Deputy Magistrate states that he has committed the case to the Sessions Court, because of the Circular Order of the High Court No. 9 of 6th September 1869 (1) That Circular does not apply to this case as "death has not resulted in this case from injuries voluntarily inflicted by the party accused." The Deputy Magistrate has not understood the true meaning of the Circular. Under section 206 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Magistrate can commit any person for trial to the Court of Session for any offence triable by such Court, and under section 28 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Court of Session, subject to the other provisions of the Code, may try any offence under the Penal Code. Section 254 requires that the Magistrate shall try the accused in a warrant case, if in the opinion of the Magistrate the accused could be adequately punished by him. In the present case the Magistrate does not say that the accused could not be adequately punished by him, and therefore he had no power under the law to com- [431] mit this case to the Sessions Court. The commitment should be quashed.

* Criminal Reference No. 55 of 1897, made by A. Ahmad, Esq., Sessions Judge of Rungpur, dated the 23rd of March 1897.

† [Sec. 147 :—Whoever is guilty of rioting, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both] Punishment for rioting.

The judgment of the High Court (Rampini and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is a reference by the Officiating Sessions Judge of Rungpur inviting us to quash the commitment of Kayemullah Mandal and others committed to his Court by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Gaibanda for trial of an offence under section 147 of the Penal Code

The Sessions Judge considers that the commitment of the accused in this case is illegal, inasmuch as the offence with which the accused are charged is one "exclusively triable by Magistrates." But this is not the case. The Sessions Judge has looked only at the schedule appended to the Criminal Procedure Code, but this schedule must be read along with the Code itself. Now one of the sections of the Code is section 28, under which the Court of Sessions has "subject to the other provisions of the Code" power to try an accused person for any offence Then under section 207 a Magistrate, who is competent to commit to the Court of Sessions, can commit to that Court both cases triable exclusively by that Court, and cases which in his opinion ought to be tried by that Court. The commitment of a case under section 147 to the Court of Sessions therefore is not necessarily illegal On the other hand, there are sections which limit a Magistrate's power of commitment In a summons case he is bound to proceed under section 245 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In a warrant case, he is bound by the provisions of section 254.

This section prescribes that, when a Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that an accused has committed an offence triable under Chapter XXI, which such Magistrate is competent to try, and which in his opinion can be adequately punished by him, he shall frame in writing a charge against him. This section therefore would seem to leave the Magistrate in these circumstances no option But if, on the other hand, the Magistrate finds that the accused has committed an offence which in his opinion cannot be adequately punished by him, there would seem to be nothing to prevent his committing [432] the case to the Court of Sessions, notwithstanding the fact that in the schedule appended to the Code the case may be shown as triable by a Magistrate

The learned pleader, who appears in support of this reference, however, argues (1) that the Magistrate was not of this opinion in this case; and (2) that he could not be of this opinion, as the maximum punishment for an offence under section 147 of the Penal Code is two years, and the Magistrate was himself competent to pass such a sentence But an offence under section 147 of the Penal Code is also punishable with fine of an unlimited amount, while the Magistrate could impose a fine of Rs 1,000 only. The Magistrate might therefore have committed this case to the Court of Sessions, if he had considered that the fine which he could impose would not be an adequate punishment of the accused's offence.

It is, however, true that in this case the Magistrate did not commit the accused to the Court of Sessions for this reason. His proceedings were peculiar. He first drew up a charge against the accused under section 147 of the Penal Code for trial before himself. This was on the 9th January last. Then, on the 13th March, he drew up another charge against the accused for the same offence and committed them for trial to the Court of Sessions, his reason for doing so being that a man was said to have been killed in the rioting, and he thought that in consequence of the instructions of this Court, conveyed in its Circular No. 9 of 6th September 1869, he could not try the case himself. He, of course, misapprehended the meaning of this Court's Circular, which was never intended to direct Mgistrates to commit cases to the Sessions Court otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the law And we think that as he does not say that he considered this case to be one in which he was not competent to inflict an adequate punishment, he could not under section 254* of the Criminal Procedure Code commit the case to the Court of Sessions

We accordingly quash the commitment of the accused in this case, and direct that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gaibanda do proceed with the trial of the accused without delay and complete it accordingly to law

Decree—Form of decree—Suit for arrears of rent—Failure of plaintiff to prove alleged rate of rent—Ascertainment of proper rate—Duty of Court

In a suit for arrears of rent at certain alleged rates in which the plaintiff fails to prove the rates alleged by him, it is not the duty of the Court to ascertain what were the fair rates unless it is asked to do so † Appeal from Appellate Decree No 1372 of 1895, against the decree of H Holmwood, Esq., District Judge of Gya, dated the 18th of May 1895, modifying the decree of Babu Tej Chunder Mookerjee, Munsif of Gya, dated the 4th of December 1894.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

The plaintiff alleges that he holds a thika of mouzah Makbulpore Denga from 1294 to 1300 F. The defendant was a former thikadar of this village, and it is admitted that he still occupies lands in it.

In 1889 the plaintiff sued the defendant for rent for the years 1294, 1295 and a part of 1296 F, on the allegation that he held 8 bighas 14 cottahs odd at a money rent of Rs. 41-7-9 per annum (including cesses), and some 50 or 60 bighas of other land at a corn rent, the total claim being for Rs. 2,016. The defendant, on the other hand, alleged that he held 118 bighas odd, and that he held it all at a money rent of Rs. 131-14.

The Courts found that the plaintiff had failed to prove his allegations, and they accordingly gave him a decree for the amount of [434] rent admitted by the defendant. It was expressly stated in that case that the question as to the nature and rental of the defendant's tenure was left open.

In June 1894 the plaintiff brought the present suit upon the same allegations for the rent of the years 1298, 1299 and 1300 F., the total claim being laid at Rs. 1,633 odd.

The defence was also the same as in the former suit, and it was pleaded in addition that the decision in the former suit operated as res judicata. The Munsif held that the plea of res judicata could not be maintained; but on the merits after an exhaustive review of the evidence he came to the conclusion that neither party had succeeded in proving his case, and he therefore gave the plaintiff a decree at the rental admitted by the defendant.

The plaintiff appealed. The judgment of the District Judge is so involved that it is difficult to distinguish between what is intended to be his own findings and what was merely the argument addressed to him, but at the end of his judgment he says that he finds certain propositions clearly established, which for our present purpose may be summarised as follows: (1) That the plaintiff had not succeeded in proving that any portion of the land paid a corn rent, and therefore it must all be taken to be nakdi land. (2) That the plaintiff not having proved his case as to the area the defendant's allegation of the holding 118 bighas odd must be accepted. (3) That the average rate of nakdi lands in the village is not less than Rs. 3-8 per bigha. And he accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for nakdi rent on 118 bighas odd at Rs. 3-8 a bigha, with damages and costs.

In second appeal to this Court the defendant presses his contention that the decision in the former suit operates as res judicata, and he also objects that the suit not having been brought for that purpose it was not open to the District Judge to assess a rent at rates not alleged by either party and of which there was no legal evidence.

We entirely agree with the Courts below that the decision in the former suit determined nothing whatever as to the nature or rent of the defendant's holding, those questions being expressly left open between the parties. As regards the contention that the Court was not asked to assess a rent of the defendant's holding, the respondent relies on the case of Punnoo Singh v. Nirghi [435] Singh (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 298) in which GARTH, C.J., is supposed to have laid down (as stated in the headnote to the report) that "in a suit for arrears of rent where the plaintiff fails to prove the rate of rent claimed in the plaint, it is the duty of the Court to find the proper rate of rent payable by the tenant to his landlord and not to give a decree merely for the rent admitted by the tenant."

We are of opinion that this broad proposition is scarcely borne out by the language of the judgment referred to. The report does not show what were the pleadings in the cases that came before this Court, but we have referred to the paper books of those cases, and it is clear that the issue which had to be tried was, what was the proper rent payable to the plaintiff for the land admittedly held by the defendant. That we think would be a proper issue in a suit brought to have the rate of rent determined where the parties are not agreed as to what would be a fair and reasonable rate. We can hardly suppose that the learned Chief Justice intended to lay down that in every suit brought for arrears of rent in which the plaintiff failed to prove that the defendant held at the rate alleged, it was the duty of the Court to ascertain what was a fair rate, even though it was not asked to do so. It is a general principle of law that suits must be decided with reference to the pleadings of the parties, and unless the Court is specially asked to determine a particular question as between the parties, we think that it is not only not bound to do so, but it would not be justified in so doing.

In the present case the effect of the decision of the lower Appellate Court is that the defendant is found to hold under the plaintiff a tenancy wholly different, in its nature, its area and its rental, from that alleged by the plaintiff, and in one important respect from that alleged by the defendant. The defendant, it is true, alleged that he held 118 bighas odd at a nakdi rent, but he further pleaded that that nakdi rent was a consolidated sum of Rs. 131-14. It was scarcely fair to him to take a part of his allegation as an admission wholly irrespective of the other part.

The judgment, moreover, apparently leaves it wholly undetermined where the defendant's holding is situated. From section 148 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act it would seem to be necessary that in a suit for the recovery of rent the land in respect [436] of which that rent is payable should be clearly defined. Now, the learned District Judge does not distinctly find that the defendant holds the lands specified by him in his written statement, but if that is the meaning and intention of his judgment, it is clear that as these lands do not agree with those specified in the schedules to the plaint, he has given the plaintiffs a decree for the rent of lands that were not the subject-matter of the suit.

A further objection is pressed upon us that the learned District Judge in fixing Rs. 3-8 a bigha as the rate of rent has acted upon what is not legal evidence in the cause. The Judge says: "The average rate of nakdi rent throughout the village is Rs. 3-8 from the roadcess paper." This paper appears to be a road-cess return for the years 1281 and 1282 alleged to have been filed in the Collector's office by the defendant at the time when he held a thika of the village. The Munsif says that the defendant denied on oath that he ever filed it; and there is apparently no evidence on the record that he did so. Moreover, only a copy has been filed, and the Munsif says that no one was called to prove that the original had been destroyed. The learned Judge remarks that "it was exhibited as secondary evidence, and must be given its full weight." But if no foundation was laid for the admission of secondary evidence, the copy was clearly inadmissible.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court cannot stand, and we accordingly set it aside. The case must go back to the District Judge in order that he may try the appeal according to law. What he has to consider in the case is whether the plaintiff has upon the evidence on the record proved the allegations made in his plaint, that is to say, that the defendant holds the land specified in the two schedules annexed to the plaint; that those lands are nakdi and bhaoli, respectively, as alleged, and that the defendant contracted expressly or impliedly to hold them at the rates claimed. If, as the first Court found, the plaintiff has failed to prove these allegations, the Judge will then consider whether, there being no cross appeal to his Court, the appeal should not be dismissed and the decree of the first Court affirmed. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Practice—Exceptions to report—Notice—Rule 565 of Belchambers' Rules and Orders of the High Court, Original Side.

In making an application to discharge or vary a report, it is necessary that notice should be given within the time required by Rule 565 of the Rules and Orders of the High Court, Original Side, and that such notice should be accompanied with the grounds of exceptions relied on by the party objecting to the report.

THE facts of the case necessary for the purpose of this report appear from the judgment.

Mr. R. Mitra for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri for the Defendants.

Sale, J.—This case was placed in the peremptory list for further directions on the report of the Second Assistant Registrar to whom it had been referred to take an account.

The report is dated the 1st day of February 1896, and was filed on the 8th day of July 1896. On the 17th of July, on an application by summons, the defendants obtained three weeks' further time to file exceptions to the report. Exceptions were filed on the 10th of August, that is, within the extended period, but no further steps were taken till the 15th of March, when the case was placed on the peremptory list for further directions on the report.

No notice of motion was given by the defendants to discharge or to vary the report and at the hearing for further directions the plaintiff took the objection that under the terms of Rule 565, which is to be found at page 230 of Belchambers' Rules and Orders, the exceptions could not be heard. Rule 565 is as follows:—

"An application to discharge or vary a certificate or report shall be made by motion upon notice to be given within fourteen days from the date of the filing thereof, or within such further [438] time as may be obtained for that purpose, but in that case the notice shall mention that it has been given with the leave of the Court. An application for further time may be made by petition in Chambers, without notice."

It was said that, though the rule expressly provides that notice to discharge or vary a report shall be given within the time mentioned in the rule, or such further time as the Court may allow, the practice has not been uniformly in conformity with that provision, and that the Court has in some cases allowed exceptions which had been filed within the period mentioned in the rule to be heard and disposed of, although no notice had been given as required by the rule.

Under these circumstances I thought it desirable that an enquiry should be made as to the practice which has prevailed in this Court in regard to this matter. A note * has been [439] furnished by the Registrar, which shows that there has been no uniform course of practice; that in some cases exceptions have been heard on notice of motion to vary or discharge the report, and that in other cases exceptions have been set down for disposal on requisition, and heard, although no notice to vary or discharge had been given under Rule 565. As it is desirable that there should be a uniform practice, I thought it right to consult my learned colleague, Mr. Justice JENKINS, and our opinion is that the procedure laid down in Rule 565 and followed in suits Nos. 197 of 1887 and 221 of 1893 should be strictly adhered to. It is necessary that notice should be given within the time required by the Rule, or such further time as the Court may allow, and that such notice should be accompanied with the grounds of exception relied on by the party objecting to the report.

In the absence of any such notice, given in the manner now indicated, the report will be regarded as confirmed by effluxion of time. The Rule should not be applied strictly to exceptions already filed. As regards such exceptions the alternative course may, I think, be permitted, namely, the hearing and disposing of them merely on the requisition of the parties.

* Note by Mr. Belchambers, Registrar of the High Court, Original Side, dated 26th March 1893.

"Rule 565 at page 230 of Belchambers' Rules and Orders was passed with effect from 1st May 1875. The practice previously was that exceptions to a report were filed and were set down for argument on requisition. The course prescribed by Rule 565 is that, instead of filing exceptions, an application to discharge or vary a report should be made by motion upon notice. An application under this rule would require that the grounds should be stated. This may be done in the notice itself or separately.

"Appended is a note of cases from which it will appear that, notwithstanding Rule 565, the practice which previously existed has been followed in some cases, and that in other cases, in which application has been made under Rule 565, the grounds have been stated in the form of exceptions.

Landlord and tenant—Denial of title—Permanent Lease—Forfeiture—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 105, 108, 111.

A lease notwithstanding that it is permanent is liable to forfeiture under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act if the tenant denies the title of the landlord.

Leases which are permanent and which came into existence before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act are governed by the general rule that a tenant who impugns his landlord's title renders his lease liable to forfeiture, which rule is only a particular application of the general principle of law that a man cannot approbate and reprobate.

THE plaintiff, in his own right as heir and as executor and shebait under the will of his ancestor Sumbhoo Chunder Aheeri, sued the defendant for a declaration that he was entitled to possession of the premises No. 173, Aheereetolah Street in Calcutta as against the defendant, for ejectment and for mesne profits. The plaintiff set out his title to the said premises and alleged that when he became entitled thereto the said premises had been for some twenty-five or thirty years and were still let out to the members of the joint family of one Ram Chunder Dey, deceased, who through their kurta or managing member for the time being, regularly paid rent and municipal taxes in respect of the premises to the plaintiff and his predecessors in title down to some time in the month of April 1888. In or about the month of August 1888 the lease of the said premises was amongst other property allotted on partition to the defendant as one of the members of the said joint family, and the defendant became tenant of the said premises under the plaintiff. It was further alleged that the defendant regularly paid the rent and taxes in respect of the premises down to May or June 1889, but that thereafter she failed to pay the said rent and taxes, and a suit was brought for arrears on the 31st of March 1892 by the plaintiff and his mother, who acted as his guardian during his minority, in the Presidency Small Cause Court. The defendant appeared in that suit, and for the first time asserted that the premises belonged to her and that the plaintiff had no title thereto, and in consequence of such defence the plaintiff with-[441]drew the said Small Cause Court suit with liberty to institute such further suit as he might be advised. The plaintiff submitted that the lease of the said premises had determined by forfeiture at and from the date of the defendant's denial of the plaintiff's title, and her possession had become adverse, and she ought accordingly to be ejected from the said premises. The plaintiff further prayed for the recovery of the arrears of rent and taxes and for mesne profits from the date of denial until delivery of possession.

The defendant alleged in her written statement that she had never asserted that the plaintiff had no title to the said premises, and that she had done nothing to forfeit the lease, and she offered to pay the arrears of rent and taxes due to the plaintiff. With the leave of the Court she filed a supplemental written statement, in which she raised various pleas, all of which were abandoned at the hearing, except that she had received no notice to quit. At the trial the issues as stated in the judgment were raised.

The records in the Small Cause Court suit and the defendants' evidence taken on commission therein were put in on behalf of the plaintiff. On behalf of the defendant the pleadings and decree in suit No. 410 of 1869, brought by the plaintiff's predecessor in title against the defendant's predecessor, for arrears of rent alleging a monthly tenancy, in which the then defendant had asserted a mourasi mokurari lease, were put in.

Mr. Garth and Mr. Chaudhuri for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Evans Pugh for the Defendant.

Mr. Garth.—The defendant having denied the landlord's title, whatever the character of the lease, has forfeited it and ought to be ejected.

Mr. Pugh for the Defendant.—The plaintiff has not proved satisfactorily that the defendant knew or understood the meaning of the plea put forward on her behalf in the Small Cause Court. It must be strictly proved that a Hindu lady knew and understood the nature and meaning of a document executed by her—Sudisht Lal v. Sheobarat Koer (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 245; L. R., 8 I. A., 39) and Ramratan Sukal v. Nandu (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 249; L. R., 19 I. A., 1.)

The plaintiff has not done anything showing his intention to [442] determine the lease. The lease being a permanent one is not liable to forfeiture. In suit No. 410 of 1869 the defendant's predecessor in title asserted a mourasi mokurari lease. The plaintiff cannot now say that there was not any such lease. The defendant has acquired the right of a mourasi mokuraridar adversely to the plaintiff. The defendant holds under a permanent lease, but, if she is unable to show that, she has, by declaring that it was permanent in 1869, converted it into a permanent lease by adverse possession under the operation of the Statute of Limitation. The doctrine of forfeiture is not applicable to a case of this kind. The lease having come into existence before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act the provisions of that Act do not apply—see section 2 of the Act. Even under that Act a permanent lease is not liable to forfeiture. Sections 105 and 111 of the Act do not apply to permanent leases.

Mr. Garth in reply.—We have shown that the defendant instructed her am-mukhtear as to what her plea should be, and the am-mukhtear instructed her pleader; over and above that she gave her evidence, and she asserted on oath that she had no landlord and paid rent to no one. There was a clear denial of the plaintiff's title.

The provisions of the Transfer of Property Act as to forfeiture do apply to permanent leases. The case of Kali Krishna Tagore v. Golam Ally (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 248) supports my contention. In that case the tenant questioned the landlord's right to enhance, which was held to be not such a disclaimer as resulted in forfeiture. The [443] tenant did not in any sense repudiate the landlord's title. It has not been suggested that before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act a lease of this character was exempt from forfeiture for renunciation. The general rule that a tenant who impugns his landlord's title renders his lease liable to forfeiture has always obtained in this country.

Jenkins, J.—This is a suit for the recovery of certain premises in Calcutta known as 173, Aheereetolah Street, and to enforce payment of certain arrears of rent and mesne profits. The plaintiff was at the date of the Small Cause Court suit, to which I will later refer, the owner of these premises, subject to a subordinate tenure vested in the defendant at a monthly rent of Rs. 15-8. The rent having fallen into arrear the plaintiff, in conjunction with his mother, sued the defendant for these arrears in the Small Cause Court, and by way of defence the following pleas were raised :—

"Denies tenancy under the plaintiff or any one else, and admits occupation as owner of the land. Denies payment of any rent to the plaintiffs. Never indebted. Misjoinder of parties. Denies jurisdiction."

The oral evidence is to the effect that the denial of tenancy, and the claim of occupation as owner, were set up at the first hearing on the 28th April 1892, and there can be no doubt that at any rate they were in existence on the 10th of August 1892. On the 21st August 1892 the defendant was examined on commission, and in the course of her evidence she stated as follows: "I do not pay any rent for the premises No. 173, Ahereetolah Street, to anybody; never paid any rent for it to Katyani Dassi or her ancestors or predecessors; nor did I promise to pay rent to Katyani Dassi or her ancestors or predecessors. I never paid rent through Upendronath Dey or Sarodaproshad Dey to Katyani Dassi or her receiver. This land is rent free. I am the owner of this land, and I have to pay rent to no one." After numerous adjournments the case came before Mr. MacEwen, one of the Judges of the Small Cause Court on the 8th of March 1893, when the suit was withdrawn with leave to sue again.

The judgment delivered on that occasion has been tendered by Mr. Pugh, and on Mr. Garth waiving all objections I have admitted it in evidence. From that judgment it appears that [444] a bonâ fide question of title was still raised in that suit; that the defendant denied the tenancy under the plaintiffs and claimed the land as her own property. Nothing more was apparently done on either side until the 13th April 1894, when the present plaint was filed asking for possession on the ground that the defendant had by claiming a title in herself forfeited her lease. A written statement was filed on the 2nd of August 1894, and the case came on for hearing before the Christmas vacation, but Counsel who then appeared for the defendant applied for an adjournment, on the ground that the case would be settled subject to the defendant's approval, and I accordingly allowed the adjournment, as Counsel for the plaintiff did not oppose.

It seems, however, that the result of the adjournment was not a settlement, but an application for leave to file a supplemental written statement, which was subsequently put in.

On the trial before me the following issues were raised:—

1. Whether the defendant did by her pleading of the 28th of April 1892, or the 10th August 1892, deny the plaintiff's title?

2. If so, whether the forfeiture (if any) thereby caused has been waived by subsequent proceedings in the Small Cause Court action?

3. Whether the defendant did by her evidence given on the 21st August 1892 deny the title?

4. If so, whether the forfeiture (if any) thereby caused had been waived by subsequent proceedings in the Small Cause Court action?

5. Whether the plaintiff has done any act showing his intention to determine the lease.

6. Whether the lease is not forfeitable by reason of its being a permanent lease?

And there were three further issues which have since been dropped, and with which it is unnecessary for me to deal.

I will take these issues in order. Now, there can be no question that in the defence in the Small Cause Court suit there is a clear denial of the plaintiff's title, and the only question is whether it can be treated as a denial by the defendant, and [446] for that proposition it becomes necessary to see what the facts are as to the introduction of these pleas. I am satisfied on the evidence that they were formulated by the defendant's pleaders on instructions received from Meghnad Srimani, the defendant's brother, and her am-mukhtear, and that these pleaders were appointed by the defendant under a document which was explained to her.

A defence primâ fâcie at any rate may be taken to express the contentions of the person on whose behalf it is framed; though it may be open to that person, especially if a purdanashin lady, to repudiate that defence. In the present case, however, I find that the plea raised by the defence was never repudiated, but on the contrary was sought to be established by the lady's own evidence, was persisted in to the last, and is corroborated by her failure to pay the rent due in respect of her tenure. The defendant is not called to say that she did not know of this plea, and not a word of cross-examination on this point is put to her am-mukhtear or her pleader, though they have both been called by the plaintiff. Indeed when a question was put to the defendant's pleader involving the disclosure of communications protected under section 126 of the Evidence Act, Mr. Pugh in exercise of his undoubted right refused to give the requisite consent mentioned in that section.

Under the circumstances I hold that the denial in the defence was made by the defendant, and on the second issue, that the forfeiture (if any) thereby caused has not been waived by any subsequent proceedings in the Small Cause Court action. I will next deal with the third issue on the supposition that the first and second issues should have been otherwise decided.

If words are to have their natural meaning, then it seems to me impossible to say that the defendant did not in her evidence deny the plaintiff's title. It seems that immediately before she gave her evidence, she had an interview through the medium of her am-mukhtear with her pleader, who says that he was taken to the defendant to receive her instructions and that he did get instructions from her. The pleader was then asked by Mr. Garth what those instructions were, but as Mr. Pugh would not waive his privilege the question could not be answered. After her [446] evidence was taken down it was explained to her both by the Commissioner and her pleader, and she then affixed her seal to the document. I, therefore, hold that the defendant did by her evidence given on the 21st of August 1892 deny the plaintiff's title, and my opinion on the 4th issue is that there has been no such waiver as is thereby suggested. The 5th issue is intended to raise the question whether the terms of section 111 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act have been complied with. I have not the slightest doubt that by bringing this action and proceeding with it against the defendant the plaintiff has shown his intention to determine the lease.

The last issue with which I need deal is whether the lease is not forfeitable by reason of its being a permanent lease. This issue inferentially raises the issue whether the defendant holds under a permanent lease, and the burden of establishing the affirmative of this would lie on the defendant.

The lease itself is not produced, and the ordinary inference as to a lease of buildings in Calcutta at a monthly rent would appear to be that the tenancy is from month to month (see Transfer of Property Act, section 106, and Nocoordass Mullick v. Jewraj (12 B. L. R,, 263). Mr. Pugh, however, relies on an allegation in a written statement filed by his predecessor in title, that the plaintiff's predecessor had granted a maurasi mokurari pottah as amounting to a claim by him, which afterwards by the lapse of time ripened into a right, and in confirmation of this he points to the fact that the present plaintiff did in the Small Cause Court describe the defendant as holding under a permanent lease. But the plaintiff, while disputing the defendant's conclusion as to the character of her tenure, contends that even if she be correct, still the lease would be none the less forfeitable, and I will accordingly deal with that point.

In the first place, I must point out that to draw any analogy from the English law of real property is wholly misleading. It has been said that the effect of a grant by a maurasi mokurari lease is similar to a conveyance in fee simple, but though there may be some correspondence in the practical results, it appears to me that any argument as to the legal effect based on this resemblance is wholly fallacious.

[447] Because at the present day a conveyance in fee simple leaves nothing in the grantor, it does not follow that a lease in perpetuity here has any such result. As a matter of fact this effect of an English grant dates from the Statute of Westminster III known as Quia Emptores (Statute 18 Edw. I., Cap. 1), which for reasons stated in its preamble forbade the system of subinfeudation that up to that time had prevailed; for at common law a feoffment made by A to B of a portion of his lands would create the relation of lord and tenant with all the incidents attaching to that relation including the right of forfeiture.

Now, the law of this country does undoubtedly allow of a lease in perpetuity, and we learn from section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act that it is the transfer of a right to enjoy property in perpetuity, and at the same time it is provided by section 111 of the same Act that a lease determines by forfeiture.

It is urged, however, by the defendant, that though the words of the provision are wide enough to authorize the forfeiture of a lease in perpetuity, still in fact that result is impossible, and next that in any case it would not apply to a lease such as this which came into existence before the passing of the Act. I will deal with these points in order.

The impossibility on which the defendant relies is based upon the assumption that a lessor has no reversion. There seems to me to lurk in this assumption a fallacy based on the theories of English real property law.

A man who being owner of land grants a lease in perpetuity carves a subordinate interest out of his own and does not annihilate his own interest This result is to be inferred by the use of the word "lease," which implies an interest still remaining in the lessor. Before the lease the owner had the right to enjoy the possession of the land, and by the lease he excludes himself during its currency from that right, but the determination of the lease is a removal of that barrier, and there is nothing to prevent the enjoyment from which he had been excluded by the lease. Logically the case of Kali Krishna Tagore v. Goolam Ally (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 248) to which I was referred by Mr. Pugh, appears to demand the same conclusion, for it proceeds on [448] the ground that one who sets up a permanent tenancy does not repudiate any title or interest which would have been in his landlord had the tenancy not been permanent.

I may further point out that section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that a lease should either be for a certain time or in perpetuity, while section 108 (i) contemplates the determination of a lease of uncertain duration by the fault of the lessee, and though too great stress should not be laid on this, still it is at least consistent with the view that a lease in perpetuity is forfeitable.

Mr. Pugh himself admitted that a perpetual lease would be forfeitable, if there were a right of re-entry, and then if that view is correct, it implies that the lessor has still a superior estate in the land, for I imagine that an unlimited right of entry not incident to an estate but simply creative of a fresh estate would be an infringement of the rule against perpetuity.

I, therefore, come to the conclusion that if the lease set up by the defendant be one to which the Transfer of Property Act is applicable, it is forfeitable, notwithstanding that it is permanent.

But there still remains the question whether having regard to section 2 (b) and (c) of the Act this alleged lease is forfeitable. Now, it has not been suggested that there is any authority which exempts a lease of this character from forfeiture for renunciation, or which establishes that the lessee is entitled to be relieved from forfeiture, nor has any alleged principle been urged which I have not already disposed of. If the relationship be one of landlord and tenant, then there is the general rule which obtained in this country before the Transfer of Property Act that a tenant who impugns his landlord's title renders his lease liable to forfeiture, and this rule is only a particular application of the general principle of law that a man cannot approbate and reprobate, or, as it is more familiarly expressed, he cannot blow hot and cold.

I therefore hold that the lease has been determined, and that its determination dates as from the date of the pleas in the Small Cause Court. There is the possibility of a doubt whether those pleas were framed on the 28th of April, or the 10th of August, and giving the defendant the benefit of that doubt, I hold that the lease was determined as from the later date.

[449] It is admitted that rent is in arrear, and the only question is how far back, having regard to the statute of limitation, the plaintiff can claim. The point has not been argued before me, but Article 110 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877 imposes a limit of three years. The only question is whether section 14 applies. The plaintiff has made no attempt to satisfy me on this point, nor do I know why his suit in the Small Cause Court was withdrawn. I therefore see no reason for allowing him to carry back his claim more than three years from the institution of this suit.

There will also be judgment for mesne profits, the amount of which must be determined by a reference to the Registrar, and the defendant must pay the costs of the action.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th February, 1897.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Shibu Haldar and another............Defendants

versus

Gupi Sundari Dasya............Plaintiff.*

Jurisdiction—Suit for rent of a fishery —Uncertainty as to jurisdiction—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 16A—Immoveable property—Right of fishery.

A suit for rent of a fishery is a suit for immoveable property within the meaning of section 16A of the Code of Civil Procedure. Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 544) referred to.

A suit for rent of a fishery was brought in a certain Court, and there was reasonable ground of uncertainty as to the jurisdiction of that Court to entertain the suit. On an objection that the suit ought to fail for want of jurisdiction :—

Held, that the conditions required by section 16A of the Civil Procedure Code had been satisfied in the case, and that the objection as to jurisdiction ought not to be entertained.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 70 of 1895 against the decree of J. Posford, Esq., District Judge of Faridpur, dated the 28th of August 1894, affirming the decree of Babu Beni Madhub Roy, Munsif of Goalundo, dated the 11th of December 1893.

[450] THESE appeals arose out of suits brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of rent of a fishery. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the fishery was situated in mehal No. 104 on the towzi of the Collectorate of Zillah Pubna in Perganna Islampore appertaining to Zillah Pubna and Faridpur, and that, according to the custom prevailing in respect of the said jalkar, the first season for plying nets was in the months of Baisak, Joisto and Assar, and the second season was in the months of Magh, Falgoon and Chait, and that the defendants who plied nets in these seasons were liable for the rents thereof. These suits were instituted in the Court of the Munsif at Goalundo within whose jurisdiction the plaintiff alleged the jalkar lay. The defendants inter alia pleaded that the jalkar did not lie within the district of Faridpur, therefore the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

The Munsif disallowed the objection, and decreed the suit of the plaintiff. An appeal was preferred, but the District Judge of Faridpur dismissed it, holding that as the plaintiff would be entitled to institute the suit either in the Pubna or in the Goalundo Court, therefore under section 16A of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Munsif had jurisdiction to try the suit.

The material portion of his judgment was as follows:—

"The cause of action was fishing in the Pudma. In what Court's jurisdiction does that river lie from the Chandra to Goalundo? Appellants are dissatisfied because the Munsif did not let them refer to the Calcutta Gazette of September 16th, 1874. I have referred to it, and on page, 417 it says, 'Zillah Faridpur. The north and north-eastern boundary of this Zillah shall be the river Ganges or Pudma.' That river is a strip of water half a mile or more wide, at times miles in width. The notification may, I think, be read as indicating that the river between this district and Pubna is within the jurisdiction of the Courts in Faridpur. Section 16A of the Code would allow of the suit being brought in either a Pubna or a Goalundo Court. It is, moreover, in evidence that fish is landed at Belgachi and consigned to Calcutta. Everybody knows that any amount of fish caught in the river is sent to Calcutta from Goalundo. Thus I think there is no fault to be found with a Goalundo Munsif trying these suits. No notification is known of as laying down the Pubna boundary. If the river is also considered as the boundary of that district, a suit such as those now in hand may be brought either in Pubna or in Goalundo, or else a tract extending over thirty or more square miles is outside the jurisdiction of any Court."

From this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

[451] The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) and Babu Haru Chunder Chuckerbutty for the Appellants.

Mr. Jackson and Babu Jasoda Nundun Pramanick for the Respondents.

The Advocate-General. —The suit should have been brought in the Munsif's Court at Pubna where the defendants reside The jalkar appertains to the zemindary of Islampore, which is also within the jurisdiction of the Pubna Court. Under such circumstances the suit not having been brought in the Munsif's Court at Pubna, it ought to have been dismissed. Section 16A of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply. There is no question of doubt in the present case.

Mr. Jackson for the Respondent.—Section 16A of the Code of Civil Procedure applies, as there is reasonable ground of uncertainty as to which Court has jurisdiction. The boundary is to be ascertained from the circumstances of each case. See Sreemutty Dossee v. Lalunmonee [12 Moo. I. A., 470 (473)].

The Advocate-General in reply.—Section 16A of the Code does not apply, as it refers to cases for recovery of immoveable property, and jalkar is not immoveable property within the meaning of that section. See Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 544).

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C.J.—There are three points raised in this appeal. The first and the principal one is the question whether the Court below had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The appellants contend that the suit ought to have been brought in the Pubna Court, whilst in fact it was brought in the Goalundo Court. The respondents, however, urge that, be that as it may, if there be any reasonable ground for uncertainty as to the Court having jurisdiction with respect to the subject-matter of the suit, then it is open to this Court, under section 16*A* of the Code of Civil Procedure, not to allow that objection to be raised. What we really have to consider then first is, whether there was any reasonable ground for uncertainty as to which Court had jurisdiction. I am by no means satisfied that the District Judge was not right [452] in finding that the Goalundo Court had jurisdiction to try the suit: but, if not, I think upon the facts that there is a reasonable ground for uncertainty as to which Court had jurisdiction, and, if so, I think we ought not to allow the objection to be raised. The mere fact that a serious argument has been addressed to us as to which was the proper Court in which to bring the suit shows per se that there is reasonable ground for uncertainty on the matter. When two Courts have held that they have jurisdiction to try the case, a third Court, as the Advocate-General frankly admitted, is not likely to look with a very favourable eye upon an appeal on that point, and I think the section I have referred to was expressly framed to meet objections of this class, if there be any reasonable ground for uncertainty upon the question of jurisdiction. I think we ought not to allow this question to be now raised. So much then for the first and main ground of appeal.

The second question is as to the amount of the rent which both Judges below had found to be payable. The appellants say that, although the Munsif had arrived at his decision upon evidence, apparently oral evidence, in addition to a particular document which was put in, namely, a decree in another suit, in which one of the co-sharers was the plaintiff, but to which the defendants were not parties, the District Judge relied upon this decree alone as evidence as to the amount of rent. But I think it is clear that the District Judge did not arrive at his conclusion upon the evidence afforded by the decree alone. He apparently considered the other evidence which had been adduced before the Munsif, and he arrived at his conclusion upon a consideration of all the evidence. I think that the appeal on this point also fails.

The only other point urged before us was as to the question of damages. That was not raised in the Court below, and it is not one of the grounds stated in the memorandum of appeal, and under the circumstances I do not think that we ought to give special leave to appeal upon this point. Looking at the amount of damages allowed I do not think the defendants are likely to suffer by our not allowing this point to be now raised. I think, therefore, that on these grounds the appeal fails, and that it ought to be dismissed with costs.

[453] Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add a few words on the question of jurisdiction.

It was contended for the appellants that the Faridpur Court had no jurisdiction to try the case, and that the suit ought to have been brought in the Pubna Court; and the ground of this contention is two-fold.

In the first place, it was argued that the suit being one for rent of a fishery, it ought to have been brought in the Court within whose jurisdiction the defendant was residing, the suit not being one for immoveable property in any sense.

And it was in the second place contended that, even if the suit lay properly in the Court which had jurisdiction over the fishery, still the objection as to jurisdiction should prevail, as a fishery was not immoveable property within the meaning of section 16A of the Code of Civil Procedure, relied upon for the respondent, and as the other requirements of the section had not been satisfied in this case, there being no uncertainty in the matter of jurisdiction.

The suit being one for arrears of rent of a fishery, the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable to suits for the recovery of arrears of rent are made applicable to it by section 193 of that Act; and one of the provisions of the Act applicable to suits for arrears of rent is to be found in section 144, which enacts that "the cause of action in all suits between landlord and tenant as such shall, for the purposes of the Code of Civil Procedure, be deemed to have arisen within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the possession of the tenure or holding in connection with which the suit is brought." That Court, therefore, had jurisdiction to try this suit for arrears of rent, which has jurisdiction to try a suit for possession of the fishery; and if a fishery is immoveable property within the meaning of section 16A, section 16A would be applicable to this case, and would be a complete answer to the appellant's contention, provided the other requirements of the section have been satisfied.

I am of opinion that a fishery comes within the definition of "immoveable property" in the General Clauses Act (I of 1868), section 2, clause 5. That clause says: "Immoveable property [464] shall include land, benefits to arise out of land," etc, etc., and a right of fishery comes within the description, "benefits arising out of land covered with water" The view I take is in accordance with the observations of the majority of the Full Bench in the case of Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 544). Though a majority of the Full Bench were of opinion that a fishery does not come within the meaning of the term "immoveable property" as used in section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, still four of the five learned Judges who composed the Full Bench say that a fishery comes within the definition of "immoveable property" as given in the General Clauses Act. And there is nothing repugnant in the subject or context of section 16A of the Code to make the definition of "immoveable property" in the General Clauses Act inapplicable to the term as used in that section.

It remains then to see whether the other conditions required by section 16A of the Code of Civil Procedure have been satisfied. That section in sub-section (2) provides that where there has been no statement, such as the first sub-section contemplates, recorded in the Court below, a Court of Appeal or Revision shall nevertheless disallow the objection on the ground of want of jurisdiction, if it appears to such Court that there was a reasonable ground for uncertainty as to the Court having jurisdiction with respect to the subject-matter.

In this case it is impossible to say that there was no reasonable ground of uncertainty upon the question. The Appellate Court, in its judgment, observes, after referring to the boundaries, as declared in the Calcutta Gazette, of the District of Faridpur that "no notification is known of as laying down the Pubna boundaries." That, at any rate, creates a reasonable uncertainty in the matter. I think that the conditions required by section 16A have been satisfied in this case, and that the objection as to jurisdiction ought not to be entertained.

Macleau, C. J.—I should like to add that I entirely agree with Mr. Justice BANERJEE that a right of fishery such as this is "immoveable property" within the meaning of section 16A of the Code of Civil Procedure. I do not think there can be any doubt about it.

[455] It is admitted that the appeal numbered 71 will be governed by this decision. That appeal, therefore, will also be dismissed with costs.

S. C. G Appeal dismissed.

ORIGINAL CIVIL

The 4th September, 1896.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

E. D. Sassoon and others............Plaintiffs

versus

Hurry Das Bhukut............Defendants.

Presidency Small Cause Court Act (I of 1895), sections 37 and 38—New trial—Jurisdiction—Powers of Bench sitting on application for new trial—ground for new trial—Question of Evidence.

The Fourth Judge of the Presidency Small Cause Court, in a suit tried by him, delivered judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant applied under section 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (I of 1895) for a new trial, and the Judges (the First and Fourth) on such application set aside the judgment and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs, and on the plaintiff's application the Full Bench of the Small Cause Court refused to interfere.

Held, by the High Court that the Judges exercised the powers of an Appellate Court in setting aside the original decree, and exceeded the jurisdiction vested in them by section 38 of the Act, such jurisdiction being a reversional jurisdiction only.

Held, also that, where the question is one of evidence, the judgment of the Original Court could be reversed, and a new trial directed, only when such judgment is manifestly against the weight of evidence.

Sadasook Gambir Chund v. Kannayya (I. L. R., 19 Mad., 90), followed.

IN this case the defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiffs on the 17th September 1894 for the purchase of certain bales of dhooties to arrive by November and December shipment. The vessel containing the dhooties arrived, and was entered at the Custom House on Saturday, the 22nd December 1894. The plaintiffs, belonging to the Jewish faith, transacted no business on Saturday. The 23rd December being a Sunday the Custom House was closed, and remained so until the 28th of December, upon which date the plaintiffs applied for delivery of the goods. The goods, however, in the meantime became liable to duty; the Indian Tariff Act (III of 1896) having [456] come into operation on the 27th; and the plaintiffs had to pay duty on the goods to the extent of Rs. 154-2-6 before delivery thereof from the vessel could be obtained by them. The defendant took delivery of and paid the contract price of the said goods, but denied their liability to pay the sum of Rs. 154-2-6.

The plaintiffs filed a suit in the Court of Small Causes on the 8th July 1895, praying for the recovery of the said sum and costs, and on the 1st of November 1895 judgment was delivered by the Fourth Judge of the said Court in favour of the plaintiffs The defendant then applied under section 38 of the Act amending the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (Act I of 1895) to have the judgment set aside and for a new trial. This application was heard by the Officiating Chief Judge and the Fourth Judge on the 17th April 1896, and they set aside the judgment and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs. Thereupon the plaintiffs applied under section 38 of the said Act for an order to set aside the decree dismissing the suit. This application was dealt with, and dismissed with costs on the 10th July 1896 by a Full Bench, consisting of the Chief Judge, and the Second and Fourth Judges of the Court. The plaintiff thereupon moved the High Court under section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why the judgment and decree, dated respectively the 17th of April and the 10th of July 1896, should not be set aside.

Mr. Avetoom for the defendant showed cause.—In this case the Bench under section 38, Act I of 1895, had power to hear the application of the defendant, and to reverse the decree against him, and to non-suit the plaintiffs, which was what they had done. See Sadasook Gambir Chund v. Kannayya (I. L. R., 19 Mad., 96). It was there held by BEST, J., that the language of section 37 of Act XV of 1882 (sections 37 and 38 of Act I of 1895) seemed to indicate that, though a party was not entitled to appeal as of right, the Court might, if it thought fit, reconsider any decree or order with all the powers of an ordinary Appellate Court. The High Court of Bombay in Hassanbhoy Visram v. The British India [457] Steam Navigation Company (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 579) refused to interfere upon an application for a rehearing of a suit which had already been decided by a Judge of the Small Cause Court, where the evidence was of a conflicting character and not such as to justify a distinct opinion that the Small Cause Court Judge was wrong in his decision.

Mr. Jackson for the plaintiffs in support of the rule.—The application in this case was made on behalf of the defendant, against whom a decree had been passed. It was made in the form of an appeal against the decision of the fourth Judge and on grounds which related to the question of appreciation of evidence. In their judgment the Full Bench dealt with the case exactly as an Appellate Court might have treated it. This the Full Bench could not do. See Sadasook Gambir Chund v. Kannayya (I. L. R, 19 Mad., 96) The view taken by the majority of the Judges in that case was that the Full Bench of the Presidency Small Cause Court had transgressed the limits of the jurisdiction given by Act XV of 1882, section 37, as the case was one on which different minds might not unreasonably have come to different conclusions An order for a new trial is unnecessary, as upon the admitted facts the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment. Johnson v The Credit Lyonnais (L. R, 3 C. P. D., 32).

Sale, J.—This application raises the question whether a decree by two Judges of the Small Cause Court, dated the 17th of April 1896, was made in excess of the jurisdiction of the Court, and, if so, what other order ought now to be made.

The plaintiffs in this suit are Messrs. Sassoon & Co., and the object of the suit was to recover a sum paid by them as duty on goods sold to the defendant,

The cause of action is thus stated in the plaint: –

(1) That the defendant entered into a contract in Calcutta with plaintiffs on the 17th September 1894 for purchase of certain bales of dhooties.

(2) That the defendant have taken delivery of the goods and paid plaintiffs the contract value of the goods, but have failed to pay the amount of duty on the goods which was legally payable by defendant, and which the plaintiffs are entitled to recover back from defendant having [468] to meet the same to get the dhooties delivered and passed out from the Custom House authorities.

The defence set up was as follows:—

Admit contract, deny that the defendant is liable to pay any duty, if the plaintiffs had exercised ordinary diligence.

The goods arrived before the Indian Tariff Act came into operation.

The payment of the money claimed in the suit seems never to have been disputed, but the defence in substance was that by the exercise of ordinary diligence the payment of the tariff duty might have been avoided, and that therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the same from the defendant. At the first hearing, which took place before the learned Fourth Judge of the Small Cause Court, only one witness was called, and that was by the plaintiffs.

The defendant adduced no evidence in support of their defence, and the Fourth Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the full amount of their claim. The defendant then filed an application for a new trial on the grounds therein set forth relating chiefly to the questions of evidence. On the 17th April 1896 a Bench was formed for the hearing of the new trial, consisting of the learned Officiating Chief Judge and the learned Fourth Judge, who set aside the decree and dismissed the suit. The next proceeding was an application by the plaintiffs for a new trial in respect of the decree made on the 17th April 1896. That application was dismissed.

The main question which has been discussed before me is whether the learned Judges of the Small Cause Court exercised a jurisdiction, which was not vested in them, in reversing the original decree and dismissing the suit; the ground alleged being that in so doing they exercised the powers of an Appellate Court and exceeded the powers given them by section 38 of the Small Cause Court Act.

The facts as set forth in the judgment of the learned Chief Judge delivered on the occasion of the last application for a new trial are as follows: "The plaintiffs entered into a contract for the sale to the defendant of goods to arrive, delivery to be taken within ninety days from the date of arrival, i.e., the [469] date when the vessel is entered at the Custom House. The goods arrived and the vessel was entered at the Custom House on Saturday, 22nd December 1894."

Section 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act provides that "where a suit has been contested the Small Cause Court may, on the application of either party made within eight days from the date of the decree or order in the suit (not being a decree passed under section 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure), order a new trial to be held, or alter, set aside or reverse the decree or order, upon such terms as it thinks reasonable, and may in the meantime stay the proceedings."

It is clear this section must be read with the preceding section 37, which provides that "save as otherwise provided by this chapter or by any other enactment for the time being in force, every decree and order of the Small Cause Court in a suit shall be final and conclusive."

The only reasonable meaning to be deduced from these sections taken together is, that the Legislature did not intend that each and every decree and order of the Small Cause Court should be subject to appeal.

A similar view was taken by the majority of the Bench of the Madras Court in the case of Sadasook Gambir Chund v Kannayya (I. L. R., 19 Mad., 96). And turning to page 113 of MacEwen's Small Cause Court Practice it would appear that it has not been the practice of the Small Cause Court to deal with applications for a new trial except under the powers ordinarily exercised by a Revisional Court. The learned author of the "Small Cause Court Practice" states various grounds upon which the Small Cause Court have granted new trials, all showing that the jurisdiction exercised has been that of a Revisional Court.

Where the question is one of evidence the judgment of the Original Court could be reversed, and a new trial directed only when such judgment is manifestly against the weight of evidence.

Now turning to the facts of the case which are exceedingly simple, there can be no doubt that in setting aside the original decree made in this suit, the learned Judges proceeded on the supposition that the first Court had taken an incorrect view of [460] the evidence or had wrongly construed the contract in suit. It is, I think, obvious that on the evidence as given in the first trial it would be impossible for any Court to disturb the judgment upon any ground which would be open to a Revisional Court, and there can, I think, be no doubt that the learned Judges exercised the functions of an Appeal Court in setting aside the original decree and dismissing the suit. It would therefore follow that in so doing they had exceeded the jurisdiction vested in them by section 38 of the Act.

The next question is as to the proper order which under the circumstances this Court should make.

There is, as I have already pointed out, no dispute as to the facts. The ground upon which the learned Officiating Chief Judge thought that the original decree was wrong is thus stated by him in his judgment in the last application: "But here I think there was a duty cast on the plaintiff under the contract to clear the goods on arrival, for the defendant was entitled to take delivery at any time within ninety days from the date of arrival, and therefore the plaintiff should have had the goods cleared and ready for delivery all that time.

The learned Second Judge also thought that the plaintiffs ought to have cleared the goods on the day when the steamer was entered at the Custom House; but, so far as it appears, he does not regard this as a duty arising on a construction of the contract. At page 6 he says: "If the sellers had cared to do so the goods would have been cleared on the day of their arrival and the payment of duty avoided;" and in a later portion of his judgment there is this passage: "It was obviously the duty of the plaintiffs in the first instance to take charge of the goods and clear them from the Custom House. It was all the more necessary therefore that as ordinary men of business they ought to have cleared the goods on the day of their arrival."

A good deal is said by both the learned Judges with reference to the admission made by the witness called by the plaintiffs that the members of the plaintiffs' firm being of the Jewish faith, their business was closed on a Saturday, there being no evidence that the defendant had any notice of this practice on the part of the plaintiffs.

[461] It appears to me that this is a matter of very small importance; it is only one of the circumstances which had to be taken into consideration in determining the question as to whether the plaintiffs in failing to clear the goods on the first day of their arrival in port had failed to exercise due diligence in discharging their duty under the contract. It seems to me that the learned Judges in dealing with the case overlooked the fact that the plaintiffs would be entitled to a reasonable time for the purpose of clearing the goods from the Custom House.

Nor would there be any duty cast upon the plaintiffs to clear the goods on the first day of their arrival, unless there was an express agreement to that effect, or the evidence showed that in failing to do so, they had been guilty of unreasonable delay.

There was nothing in the evidence upon which there could be any finding that there had been any improper or unreasonable delay in clearing the goods. Nor do I think that the provision that the defendant had ninety days from the arrival to take delivery of the goods necessarily implies that the plaintiffs had undertaken to clear the goods on the first day of their arrival in port. To hold that there is such a duty cast upon importers, apart from an express agreement, would, I think, be doing a serious injustice; and in the absence of any evidence as to what is or is not a reasonable time within which the goods should be cleared from the Custom House, I should have thought in common experience that it would be extremely improbable under any circumstances that the goods could be cleared from the Custom House on the first day of their arrival. On the evidence it seems to me that the original decree was quite correct, and that, having regard to the fact that there is no dispute as to facts, no good purpose would be served by now ordering a new trial. I think the order which I ought to make is that the decree of the learned Officiating Chief Judge and the learned Fourth Judge of the Small Cause Court of the 17th April 1896 be set aside, and that the original decree of the learned Fourth Judge be restored. The costs in the suit, including the present application, will abide the result, and will be dealt with by the lower Court.

Dengu Kazi............Plaintiff

versus

Nobin Kissori Chowdhrani, widow of the late Issur Chundor Roy Chowdhry............Defendant.

Second Appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 105, 106, 108 (3) -Record of rights, Dispute prior to completion of—Dispute about proposed entry or omission in the record.

The respondent, in the course of proceedings for the record of rights in the village of which he was the landlord, applied for the settlement of fair rents The appellant claimed to be a raiyat holding at a fixed rent. The respondent denied the validity of the claim. This dispute gave rise to a case between them which was decided by the Revenue Officer against the appellant, who then appealed to the Special Judge, with the result that the decision on that question was confirmed At the time of the Revenue Officer's decision no record of rights had been completed under section 105 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act On appeal to the High Court the respondent took the preliminary objection that no appeal lay under section 108 (3), as the case was not one under section 106.

Held, that the decision of the Revenue Officer was a decision in a proceeding under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that a second appeal lay from the decision of the Special Judge to the High Court

Gopi Nath Masant v. Adorta Naik (I L R., 21 Cal., 776) and Anand Lal Parua v. Shib Chunder Mukerjee (I L R., 22 Cal., 477), so far as they decide that a second appeal would not lie in such a case, overruled.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by MACPHERSON and HILL, J.J., on the 10th August 1896. The reference was in the following terms —

"This appeal, in which the tenant is appellant and the landlord respondent, arises out of proceedings under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We have not gone into the various questions raised as to the jurisdiction of the Revenue Officer and the [463] legality and regularity of the proceedings, as the respondent takes a preliminary objection that no appeal lies.

"It appears from the judgment of the Special Judge that there were proceedings for the record of rights in the village of which the respondent is the landlord; that the latter in the course of the proceedings applied for the settlement of fair rents; that the appellant claimed to be a raiyat holding at a fixed rent, and that the respondent denied the validity of the claim. This dispute gave rise to a case between them, which is described in the judgment of the Revenue Officer as a case under section 106 of the Tenancy Act. The issue tried was whether the appellant held at a fixed rate of rent or was merely an occupancy raiyat. This was decided against the appellant, who then appealed to the Special Judge, with the result that the decision on that question was confirmed. The tenant now appeals to this Court under section 108 (3) of the Tenancy Act against the decisions of the Special Judge.

"Admittedly at the time of the Revenue Officer's decision no record of rights had been completed or published under section 105 (1) of the Act. It is on that ground contended that no second appeal lies under section 108 (3) as the case was not a case under section 106, and in support of the contention the cases of Gopi Nath Masant v. Adoita Naik (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 776) and Anand Lal Paria v. Shib Chunder Mukerjee (I.L.R., 22 Cal., 477) are cited. If the decision appealed against is not a decision under section 106, there is, by the express words of section 108 (3), no right of second appeal. The question therefore is whether it is a decision under section 106 notwithstanding that the record of rights had not at the time been completed and published under section 105 (1).

"The cases cited seem to us directly in point. It was held in each that the case having been decided by the Revenue Officer before the record of rights was prepared and published there was no dispute, and no decision of a dispute, under section 106, and therefore no second appeal. The reason given was that before the record was framed there could be no dispute, and no decision of a dispute regarding the correctness of any entry in it. The effect of those decisions is to limit the application of section 106 to a dispute arising after the record of rights has been [464] completed and published under section 105 (1) with reference to entries or omission in that record and to exclude from its operation all other cases.

"The question is one of great importance, affecting not merely a right of second appeal, but also the validity of all decisions passed by a Revenue Officer, before the record of rights is prepared and published, on any disputed question other than the amount of rent settled under section 104 (2). The construction put upon the section, if right, deprives all such decisions of any legal validity, and the true ground for holding that there is no right of second appeal is that there is no decree to appeal against. Sections 106 and 107 read together make this clear. Section 106 is the only section in Chapter X relating to the decision of disputes by Revenue Officers acting under that chapter, and section 107 gives to their decisions the force of a decree in all proceedings for the settlement of rent under Chapter X [see section 104 (2)] and in all proceedings under section 106. To decisions not coming under section 106, no validity or force of any kind is given.

"We must respectfully dissent from the construction which has been put upon section 106 in the cases cited. It admits of a construction much wider than the one adopted and more consistent with what we consider to have been the intention of the Legislature.

"Section 105 provides first that when the Revenue Officer has completed a record made under Chapter X, he shall cause a draft of it to be published for the prescribed period (one month) and shall receive and consider any objection which may be made to any entry in it during such period; second, that after the expiration of that period he shall finally frame and publish the record, and the publication is to be conclusive proof that the record was duly made under the chapter.

"Section 106 may be grammatically read thus: 'If at any time before the final publication of the record under section 105 a dispute arises as to the correctness of any entry (not being an entry of a rent settled under Chapter X) or as to the propriety of any omission which the Revenue Officer proposes to make therein or therefrom, he shall hear and decide the dispute. If at

[465] any time before such publication a dispute arises as to the correctness of any entry (not being an entry of a rent settled under Chapter X) or as to the propriety of any omission which the Revenue Officer has made therein or therefrom, he shall hear and decide the dispute.'

"The section therefore provides, first, for the decision of disputes about proposed entries or omissions in the uncompleted record, for the words imply something to be done or omitted, and the time is 'any time before the final publication of the record under section 105.' Those words, although controlled and limited in their scope by subsequent words denoting something which has been done or omitted, cannot be so controlled or limited by words denoting something to be done or omitted. Secondly, for the decisions of disputes about entries or omissions which have been made in the record, and this must necessarily mean the completed record under section 105.

"The question is, what is meant by a dispute about a proposed entry or omission in the record. Obviously some meaning must be given to the words, and the meaning, and the difficulty, whatever it is, of ascertaining it, is the same whether the proposed entry or omission is to be in the completed or the uncompleted record. In either case the Revenue Officer proposes to enter or omit something, and there is a dispute about it.

"Possibly every entry is in the position of a proposed entry until the draft record is published, for obviously the process of preparing the record must be a gradual one, and Rule 33 in Chapter VI of the rules framed by the Bengal Government clearly contemplates, as might be expected, that all known disputes should be decided before the draft record is published. But it does not seem to us necessary that there should be any actual entry. It is enough if the Revenue Officer proposes to make one. When in the course of the proceedings a dispute arises about any matter which must be recorded or about the particulars with reference to which any such matter must be determined, and there is on the one side an assertion and on the other a denial of a right or of a material fact, the Revenue Officer must decide the dispute in order to make the necessary entry, and it must be presumed that he proposes to make the entry which he would be [466] bound to make or to decide the fact as he would be bound to decide it, if the party upon whom the burden of proof rests as regards the particular matter in dispute failed to discharge it. It seems to us quite immaterial under either the Act or the Rules at what particular stage of the proceedings the dispute arises or is decided. Section 107 provides that in proceedings under section 106, the Revenue Officer shall, subject to rules made by the local Government, adopt the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits. This means that the parties are to be arranged as plaintiffs and defendants, and the rules, although not perhaps exhaustive, provide in many cases for the position which they are to occupy.

"We cannot suppose that the Legislature intended that no disputes were to be settled until after the draft record was completed and published, or that it contemplated the preparation of a draft record in which nothing was decided. We consider that we are precluded by the cases cited from holding that an appeal lies in this case, and we must refer the matter to a Full Bench. The question which we refer is, whether, having regard to the cases cited, the decision of the Revenue Officer in this case is a decision in a proceeding under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which has the force of a decree, and does a second appeal from the decision of the Special Judge lie to this Court under section 108 (3). There are four other analogous cases in which precisely the same question arises, but we think it sufficient to refer only this one."

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Babu Srinath Das and Babu Promotho Nath Sen for the Respondent.

Babu Srinath Das.—No second appeal lies to the High Court as the decision appealed from was not under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 108 of the Act deals with appeals from decisions of Revenue Officers. An appeal lies to the Special Judge from every decision of a Revenue Officer. But from decisions of a Special Judge an appeal to the High Court lies only in cases tried under section 106; see section 108 (3). Section 106 provides only for disputes after record. The dispute must be after the draft and before the final record. The dispute must be as to an actual entry in the record, but here there was [467] no record completed under section 105 (1). I rely on the cases of Gopi Nath Masant v. Adoita Naik (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 776) and Anand Lal Paria v. Shib Chunder Mukerjee (I.L.R., 22 Cal., 477).

Babu Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty.—It is not necessary that the objection should be made after the completion of the draft record. If the contention raised by the respondent is correct then the whole proceedings should be set aside as without jurisdiction. There is nothing in section 108 of the Act which limits the jurisdiction of a Special Judge to deal only with matters of objection taken after publication of the record of rights—see Durga Churn Laskar v. Hari Churn Das (I. L. R, 21 Cal., 521). In that case the proceedings were before the completion of the record and yet the appeal was entertained. In the case of Secretary of State for India v. Kajimuddy [I L.R., 23 Cal., 257 (261)] it is pointed out that the words "objection" and "dispute," are not synonymous terms, and that they are not used in the same sense in sections 105 and 106 of the Act. Again, if the proceedings purport to be under section 106, there must be a right of appeal. See also the cases of Norendra Nath Roy Chowdhry v. Srinath Sandel (I. L. R., 19 Cal. 641); and Bidu Mukhi Dabi v. Bhugwan Chunder Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 643).

Babu Srinath Das in reply cited the case of Irshad Ali Chowdhry v. Kanta Pershad Hazaree (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 935).

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., and O'KINEALY, MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, and BANERJEE, JJ.):—

Maclean, C.J. —In this case I think that a second appeal lies to this Court under section 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I arrive at that conclusion upon the grounds stated by Mr. Justice MACPHERSON and Mr. Justice HILL in the reference. I do not propose to go over those grounds, but confine myself to saying that for the reasons they have given I arrive at the conclusion that this appeal lies.

O'Kinealy, J. – I concur in the judgment which has just been delivered. I think looking at the Act and the Rules made by the Bengal Government under the Act that an appeal does lie.

[468] Macpherson, J.—I also concur.

Trevelyan, J.– I concur. I should like to add a few words to the judgments which have been pronounced, as one of the decisions which have given rise to this reference is a decision to which I was a party. In one case at least, if not in more, I decided that no appeal would lie. Having had the advantage of a further consideration, notably having had the advantage of seeing the order of reference in this case, I think that I was wrong in the decision at which I before arrived. In my opinion there is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act which ought to control the wide words of section 106 of the Act. That section begins with the words "If at any time before the final publication of the record," &c. According to the decisions which have been referred to there could be no appeal except in the case of an order made after the draft record had been published in accordance with the terms of section 105 of the Act. It is perfectly true that the position of section 106 might lead to the argument that the words of that section are controlled by the earlier section. The words being so wide, and giving, as they do, an important right, I think it would be wrong, in the absence of anything more express, to attempt to control the right thereby given. I therefore agree with the view taken by the other Judges of this Bench and hold that there is an appeal.

Banerjee, J.—I also am of the same opinion. I think the terms of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are wide enough to include the case in which a dispute arises as to the correctness of any entry which the Revenue Officer proposes to make in the record that he is preparing. And, if that is so, the decision of the Special Judge on appeal from the decision of the Revenue Officer in this case was a decision that came within the scope of sub-section 3 of section 108 of the Act.

An appeal, therefore, in my opinion lies to this Court.

[The appeal was eventually dismissed by the Full Bench.]

[469] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 9th February, 1897.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Saturjit Pertap Bahadoor Sahi............Defendant

Dulhin Gulab Koer............Plaintiff.*

Arbitration—Award—Decree in accordance with award with slight modification—Appeal—Illegal award—Reference applied for by agent without authority—Knowledge and tacit ratification by principal—Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 522.

In a suit which was defended by an agent (am-mukhtar) on behalf of the defendant, the agent applied for a reference to arbitration although he had no power to do so under the am-mukhtarnamah. After the submission of the award, objection was made on behalf of the defendant that the agent had no authority to apply for or consent to the reference. The objection was overruled by the Court, and a decree made in accordance with the award with one slight modification in the defendant's favour.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 191 of 1894 against the decree of Jadoo Nath Doss, Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 30th of March 1894.

Held, (1) in answer to an objection that no appeal lay under section 522* of the Civil Procedure Code, except in so far as the decree was in excess of or not in accordance with the award, that an appeal would lie if the award was shown to be illegal and void ab initio, Nandram Daluram v. Nemchand Jadavchand (I. L. R., 17 Bom., 357) followed.

(2) That although the agent was not authorized to apply for or consent to a reference, the defendant, having been aware of the proceedings and tacitly ratified the action of his agent, could not be allowed to question the legality of the award, and the award was not void ab initio. Unniraman v. Chathan (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 451) referred to.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are material to this report, sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court. The principal question discussed in appeal was whether the decree in this case, which was passed in accordance with the award of arbitrators with a slight modification, was subject to an appeal to the High Court.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Babu Saligram Singh, Babu Raghunandan Prasad, and Mr. H. E. Mendies for the Appellant.

[470] Babu Umakali Mukerjee and Babu Nalini Nath Sen for the Respondent.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee for the respondent took a preliminary objection under section 522 of the Civil Procedure Code, and urged that there was no appeal against this decree except so far as it was in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award.

Babu Saligram Singh for the appellant contended that the objections taken to the award if established would make the award illegal, and an appeal is allowed in a case like this There was no valid reference in this case, as the defendant did not authorize it, and the whole proceeding was unauthorized and illegal. Protap Chunder Roodro v. Huro Monee Dossia (24 W. R., 188), Lala Iswari Prosad v. Bu Bhanjan Tewari (8 B. L. R., 315: 15 W. R., F. B., 9), Junglee Ram v. Ram Heet Sahoy (19 W. R., 47), Nussurwanjee Pestonjee v. Mynoodeen Khan [6 Moo. I.A., 131 (155)], and Nandram Daluram v. Nemchand Jadavchand (I. L. R., 17 Bom., 357). The other question is one of limitation. That is also an error of law, and the award should be remitted under section 520 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee for the respondent.—The objection as to the authority of the agent should not be allowed to be raised in this case. Unniraman v. Chathan (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 451). The objection was not taken in the petition before the Court below. There was ratification of the agent's acts. The decree being in accordance with the award, there is no appeal. As to limitation there is no error patent on the face of the award, and no objection was taken in the written statement on the ground of limitation.

* [Sec. 522:—If the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for reconsideration in manner aforesaid, and if no application has been made to set aside the award, or if the Court has refused such application, Judgment to be according to award.

the Court shall, after the time for making such application has expired, proceed to give judgment according to the award, or, if the award has been submitted to it in the form of a special case, according to its own opinion on such case.

Upon the judgment so given a decree shall follow, and shall be enforced in manner provided in this code for the execution of decrees. No appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award.]

Decree to follow.

The judgment of the High Court (Beverley and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows: —

This appeal is by the defendant in a suit which was brought against him in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpur. The defendant who resides in the district of Gorakhpur, defended the suit by his am mukhtar, one Hurdeo Narain, who [471] appears to have verified and filed the written statement. After pending for over a year in the Subordinate Judge's Court, the case was, at the request of both parties, referred to arbitration, and on the 12th March 1894 the arbitrators submitted their award, holding that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 3,217 odd with proportionate costs from the defendant. On the 19th March the defendant, through the same am-mukhtar, filed an objection, in which he prayed that the award might be set aside on the ground (amongst others) that the arbitrators had allowed certain items which were barred by limitation, and when the matter came on to be argued a further objection was raised orally to the effect that Hurdeo Narain's am-mukhtarnamah did not authorize him to consent to the arbitration. The Subordinate Judge disallowed these objections, and made a decree in accordance with the award with one slight modification in the defendant's favour. A preliminary objection has been taken that under the provisions of section 522 of the Code no appeal lies against this decree, "except so far as it is in excess of or not in accordance with the award," but upon the authorities, the latest cited to us being the case of Nandram Dalaram v. Nemchand Jadavchand (I. L. R., 17 Bom., 357), it is clear that an appeal will lie if the award is shown to be illegal and void ab initio. Now, the defendant himself, that is to say, in his own person, appeals to this Court, and the main ground of his appeal that is pressed upon us is that his am-mukhtar, so far from being authorized to consent to a reference to arbitration, was expressly prohibited by the terms of his mukhtarnamah from so doing. The mukhtarnamah in truth does in our opinion contain such a prohibition. The attorney is authorized to do all acts in Court for his principal and to file petitions of all sorts "save and except petitions for relinquishment or admission of claims and panchnamahs," by which last term we understand petitions for reference to arbitration.

Now, there is no question that the application for the reference to arbitration was presented to the Court on behalf of the defendant by a pleader, whose vakalutnamah was signed by Hurdeo Narain. Hurdeo Narain, having no authority to make such an application himself, had of course no authority to authorise any [472] one else to do so. The application therefore was not in accordance with the requirements of section 506 of the Code. But a further question which we have to consider in this case is, whether the defendant was aware of the reference to arbitration and acquiesced in the proceedings before the arbitrators, and, if so, whether he can now be allowed to raise this objection when the award has been given against him. The proceedings in the case appear to us to show conclusively that the defendant was personally aware of what was being done on his behalf. It was a suit between members of the same family. The plaintiff agreed to be bound by the defendant's sworn testimony in the case, and summons was served upon him to appear personally and give his evidence. An application to allow him to give his evidence on Commission was refused. Thereupon several successive medical certificates were filed on his behalf to the effect that he was too ill to attend in person to give evidence. At this stage of the case the matter was referred to arbitration. The first order of reference was made on 29th November 1893. That reference proved infructuous, and a second order was made on 23rd December 1893. The award was not submitted till 12th March 1894. Before the arbitrators, again, the plaintiff applied to have the defendant examined personally.

The defendant, apparently from fear of having to give his evidence, left his home for Lucknow, and the arbitrators were unable to secure his attendance. Upon these facts it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that he was aware of the reference to arbitration and tacitly ratified the action of his am-mukhtar in applying for such reference. It was only when the award was given against him that it occurred to him to raise the present objection. The case of Unniraman v. Chathan (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 451) is an authority for holding that in a case like this a person who has stood by and assented to the proceedings before the arbitrators cannot afterwards be allowed to turn round and question the legality of the order of reference. We think, therefore, that this ground fails, and that the defendant, having acquiesced in the proceedings, the award was not void ab initio in consequence of the defect in the order of reference.

[473] The second point urged is that the award is illegal, inasmuch as the arbitrators have allowed certain claims which, it is said, are barred by limitation. This objection refers to three sums of money which were borrowed by the defendant more than three years before suit, but which he agreed in writing to repay at a date which was within three years of suit. The arbitrators were of opinion that these writings were not properly stamped, and were therefore inadmissible in evidence. But they found that "apart from the so-called receipts, there is ample evidence on the record on behalf of the plaintiff, documentary and oral, to prove that the defendant did actually borrow money from the plaintiff in the way stated." And they go on to say: "In our opinion no portion of the claim is barred by limitation." It is clear, therefore, that no illegality in this respect is apparent upon the face of the award, such as might have been a ground for remitting the award under the provisions of section 520 of the Code. And it appears to us to be still more clear that the award was not in this respect so illegal or void ab initio, that an appeal against the decree made upon it will lie.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 23rd and 24th November and 10th December, 1896.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, AND MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

Jogemaya Dassi............Plaintiff

Thackomoni Dassi..... ......Defendant.

Limitation—Mortgage decree—Transfer to High Court for execution—Application for execution by sale--Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 227, 230, 244 -Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 67, 99 —Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Articles 122, 179.

On the 29th September 1882 a decree was obtained against the defendant's husband in a suit on a mortgage by the latter, dated the 6th April 1880. On the 27th July 1883 an order was made for transfer of the decree to the High Court for execution. On the 8th April 1886 the mortgagee applied to the High Court for execution by attachment of the mortgaged properties, and in the same year an order for attachment was made. The mortgagee died in April 1892; and on the 20th August 1894 the plaintiff (his widow [474] and administratrix) applied to the High Court for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged properties under section 89† of the Transfer of Property Act. On the 5th January 1895 the application was refused, on the ground that the mortgaged properties were outside the territorial jurisdiction of the High Court. The plaintiff then instituted the present suit in which she sought (inter alia) administration of the estate of the mortgagor (who had died before mortgage suit was filed), and asked for the sale of such properties as might be found subject to such mortgage.

Held (affirming the decision of SALE, J.), that whether the plaintiff sued on the original debt or on the decree of the 29th September 1882, the suit was barred by limitation.

Held, also, that, even apart from any question of limitation, the suit was not maintainable by reason of the provisions of sections 230, 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, the questions arising in the suit being such as could and should have been determined in execution of the decree, and not by a separate suit.

THE facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment appealed from, which was as follows:—

SALE, J.—The plaintiff, who sues as widow and representative of her late husband, Radhajeebun Mustaba, claims administration and other relief in respect of the estate of one Brojo Nauth Dev, deceased.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 13 of 1896, against the decision of Mr. Justice SALE, dated the 16th September 1895, in suit No. 115 of 1895.

† [Sec. 89:—If in any case under section eighty-eight the defendant pays to the plaintiff or into Court on the day fixed as aforesaid the amount due under the mortgage, the costs, if any, awarded to him and such subsequent costs as are mentioned in section ninety-four, the defendant shall (if necessary) be put in possession of the mortgaged property; but if such payment is not so made, the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be, may apply to the Court for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property, and the Court shall then pass an order that such property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned in section eighty-eight; and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished.]

Procedure when defendant pays amount due.

Order absolute for sale.

The defendant Thackomoni Dassi is the widow and representative of Brojo Nauth.

The facts upon which the plaintiff bases her claim for administration are set out in her plaint, and as to those allegations there is in substance now no dispute. By consent the case was heard on settlement of issues, and the question really resolves itself into this: Whether the plaintiff, on the facts she alleges in her plaint, is entitled to a decree for administration of Brojo Nauth's estate.

The material facts relating to that issue are, I think, as follows:—

Brojo Nauth Dey, on the 6th April 1880, executed a mortgage in the Bengalee language and character in favour of Radhajeebun Mustafi, whereby he mortgaged his undivided 2 annas 2 gundahs and 10 cowries shares in three zemindary properties which may be described as lot 1 Bankra Budarpore, lot 2 Sheakhala and lot 3 mouzah Begumpore, to secure payment to Radhajeebun of Rs. 10,000 and interest.

On the 22nd April 1882 Radhajeebun Mustafi instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly against [475] Brojo Nauth Dey for recovery of Rs. 10,000 and interest due under and by virtue of the said mortgage. It appears that at the time the suit was instituted Brojo Nauth Dey was dead, though the fact apparently was unknown to the plaintiff. However, the suit was revived in the name of his widow Thackomoni, and on the 29th September 1882 the plaintiff, Radhajeebun, obtained a decree for Rs. 14,928-10-6 with interest and costs against the defendant, the decree directing that the sum found due should be realised from the property mortgaged and other properties of the defendant.

On the 12th July 1883 an application was made by the plaintiff, Radhajeebun, in the Hooghly Court, for execution. On the 27th July 1883 an order was made directing that the decree, with certificate of non-satisfaction, be transferred to this Court, on the ground that the properties mortgaged were in the possession of the Receiver of the High Court. The records of the suit and the certificate were subsequently transferred to this Court some time in the year 1884.

On the 8th September 1886 the plaintiff, Radhajeebun Mustafi, applied to this Court for execution by attachment of the mortgaged property, i.e., the share of Brojo Nauth, in the three properties which I have mentioned, and after notice, and in the same year, an order was made for attachment of those properties by issue of a notice under section 272 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the Receiver of this Court, in whose possession the properties then were.

Radhajeebun Mustafi died on the 17th April 1892, leaving the plaintiff his sole widow and heiress. The plaintiff obtained letters of administration to the estate and effects of her husband on the 4th July 1892. Thereafter and on the 20th August 1894 she applied to this Court for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged premises under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. Notice was directed to issue to the defendant, and accordingly on the 29th August a summons was obtained, returnable on the 5th September 1894, and was served on the defendant on the 31st August 1894. The application was made on 10th and 13th December 1894, and on the 5th January 1895 the application was refused, on the ground that the Court had no juris-[476]diction to deal with the mortgaged property, inasmuch as it was situate wholly outside the territorial jurisdiction of this Court.

No step, save the application for execution which resulted in the issue of a notice under section 272 of the Code to the Receiver, and the subsequent application for an order absolute for sale under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, has been taken with the object of giving effect to the decree obtained on the 29th September 1882 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly. While these steps were being taken in the mortgage suit, and previous thereto, proceedings were instituted and carried on with the object of obtaining partition of the joint family properties, of which the three zemindaries I have mentioned formed a part. The suit for partition of the joint family properties was instituted in this Court on the 18th February 1880, and is numbered suit No. 119 of 1880. In that suit Monmohinee Dassee is the plaintiff, and Brojo Nauth Dey was one of the defendants. On the 2nd April 1881 a decree was obtained by which Brojo Nath Dey was declared entitled to 901900 of the joint family property, and a partition was directed to be made in the usual terms.

The Receiver of this Court was appointed Receiver of the joint family properties on the 26th May 1881. Subsequently a supplemental suit was filed by some of the members of the joint family against the present defendant as the representative of Brojo Nauth Dey, and by the decree made in that suit it was declared that the share of Brojo Nauth Dey, in the joint family estate, was indebted to the members of the family other than Brojo Nauth Dey in the sum of Rs. 59, 975-11-5. Several separate returns were made by the Commissioners of partition in pursuance of the decree for the partition of the joint family property; and, finally, on the 22nd June 1894 the sole surviving Commissioner made a separate return, whereby he partitioned the zemindary properties, including the properties the subject-matter of the mortgage in favour of Radhajeebun Mustafi.

By that return the entirety of one of the mortgaged properties, lot Bankra Budarpore, was allotted to the present defendant, but the other zemindary properties, which, to the extent of the share of Brojo Nauth Dey, had been mortgaged to Radhajeebun Mustafi, were allotted to other members of the family.

[477] Another suit, based on a mortgage executed by Brojo Nauth Dey in favour of one Lall Behary Dutt, was instituted in the year 1882 in this Court (being suit No. 155 of 1882), and in that suit a mortgage decree, in the usual terms, was made on the 23rd of July 1883. One of the properties covered by the decree made in suit No. 155 of 1882 is the share or interest of Brojo Nauth Dey in the zemindary lot Sheakhala, which is one of the properties included in the mortgage in favour of Radhajeebun Mustafi, and it appears that on the 6th December 1891 an order was obtained in the suit last mentioned, viz., suit No. 155 of 1882, for sale of so much of the immoveable properties allotted to the defendant by the three separate returns, dated 5th May 1888, 16th June 1888, and 22nd June 1894, as would be sufficient for the payment (inter alia) of the amount due to Lall Behary Dutt under his mortgage decree. Having regard to these various circumstances, the plaintiff alleges that she has been unable to obtain payment of the amount due to her under the decree of the 29th September 1882, and she therefore claims to be entitled to administration of the estate of Brojo Nauth Dey, with the object, in the course of that administration, of obtaining payment of the sum so due to her. As part of the relief she seeks in this suit she asks for a declaration of what properties are now subject to Radhajeebun's mortgage, and for an account of what is due to her under the said mortgage and decree, and what is due to the other incumbrancers and creditors of the estate, for the sale of such properties, as may be found subject to such mortgage, declaration of priorities, and so forth.

After the institution of the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, and prior to the decree obtained in that suit, the Transfer of Property Act came into force. Therefore one of the questions which arises is as to whether the decree made on the mortgage executed in favour of Radhajeebun Mustafi is in its terms a decree such as is contemplated by the provisions of section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, or whether, on the other hand, the decree is governed by section 99 of that Act?

Mr. Pugh, who appeared on behalf of the plaintiff, contended that the main question in this suit is whether the plaintiff is, on the facts stated in the plaint, entitled to a decree for the administration of the estate of Brojo Nauth Dey. The other relief sought [478] in this suit involves admittedly serious questions, but it is contended that they would arise only at a subsequent stage of the suit, and do not affect the plaintiff's right to a decree for administration.

On the part of the defendant several objections were relied upon as constituting a bar to the suit. In the first place it is said that the matters in issue or sought to be raised in issue in this suit are the same as those which were in issue in the former suit, and that the plea of res judicata applies under section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. In the next place it is contended that the suit is not maintainable, having regard to section 244, clause (c) of the Civil Procedure Code.

The latter section provides that certain questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree and not by separate suit. Amongst these questions are included, by clause (c), questions relative to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and the contention is that, inasmuch as the object of obtaining administration of Brojo Nauth's estate is to obtain satisfaction of the judgment debt, the right of the judgment-creditor is limited or restricted by this section to proceedings in execution.

I am not prepared to say that either of these objections is well founded, so far as the question of the right to administration is concerned. The issue, or at least the main issue, which is sought to be raised in the present suit, was not as a fact raised in the former suit, and I have not been referred to any authority for the proposition that a creditor who has once obtained judgment upon his debt is thereby debarred from coming to a Court of Equity, and asking to have this debt paid to him in due course of administration. It is true that before a creditor is entitled to administration of his debtor's estate he must show that he has a debt which is unsatisfied, and of which he is unable to obtain payment, and it is also true that the debt which is the foundation of the present action is in reality the debt which was the matter in issue in the former suit. But the present suit does not seek to put in issue the fact of the existence of the debt: on the contrary, the plaintiff relies on the former decree to show that no such issue can arise between the parties in the present suit. Besides, I am unable to see why on principle a creditor who has obtained a judgment on his debt, should be in a worse position, so far as a [479] right to administration is concerned, than a creditor whose debt is unsecured by judgment.

As regards section 244, clause (c) of the Code, I should be inclined to hold that the words "questions relating to the discharge or satisfaction of the decree" must be limited to questions of discharge or satisfaction arising in course of execution, or in connection therewith. I cannot think that a provision appearing in the chapter of the Code, relating to the execution of decrees, was intended to limit or cut down the jurisdiction of this Court in granting administration. A Court of Equity, in executing a decree, does not necessarily proceed upon the same principles as those which it adopts in administering the estate of a deceased debtor. The foundation of the jurisdiction in the latter case, that is, in administering the estate of a deceased debtor, is said to be the principle which is applied in enforcing the execution of trusts, the executor or administrator of the deceased debtor being regarded as a trustee who is bound to apply the debtor's estate in payment of his debts—Story, Eq. Jur., 2nd Edition (English), p. 352.

But a more formidable objection to the present suit remains to be considered, viz., the plea of limitation. A creditor to be entitled to ask for administration of his debtor's estate must show either that he has a debt which is enforceable by suit, or that he has obtained a judgment thereon, which is itself capable of enforcement by execution or by separate suit.

The plaintiff in the present case is a judgment-creditor, her judgment having been obtained on the 29th September 1882, i.e., more than 12 years from the date of institution of the present suit. Moreover, the decree is not a decree of this Court, but it is a decree of a mofussil Court, and no step in execution, strictly speaking, of the decree has been taken since the attachment through this Court under section 272 of the mortgaged properties in the hands of the Receiver.

Having regard to this fact, can the decree be considered as still alive for the purposes of execution? I am of opinion that it cannot. Mr. Pugh has contended that the attachment is still in full force and effect; and that, inasmuch as this suit may be said to be in aid or in continuation of that attachment, limi-[480]tation cannot apply. I cannot adopt this view. The properties attached, being the mortgaged properties, could not be brought to sale under the attachment, and the only way of enforcing the lien on the mortgaged property, or the property which had been substituted for it, was, it seems to me, by a suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. It would, I think, be impossible to say that an attachment made under the circumstances abovementioned, and which attachment must, so far as I can see, remain ineffective and infructuous, is still sufficient to keep the decree alive indefinitely. The recent decision of this Court in the case of Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose (I.L.R., 22 Cal., 813) is an authority for saying that the decree in execution of which the attachment was made is not in the form contemplated by section 67 of the Act, and that the attachment would therefore be governed by section 99 of the Act. Moreover, if the present suit could be said to be a step in aid of that attachment in any sense, then I see no answer to the argument that section 244, clause (c) of the Code constitutes a bar to the plaintiff's present suit. For the reasons I have already indicated, I am not inclined to hold that a suit for administration by a judgment-creditor is a step in execution, or in aid of execution of his decree.

But even if it were, I do not see how this argument would assist the plaintiff, because the effect of the order for execution to issue made by this Court, after notice, was not to revive the original decree, inasmuch as that is not a decree of this Court, and therefore no new period of limitation runs from the date of the attachment. See the case of Tincowrie Dawn v. Debendra Nath Mookerjee (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 491). On the other hand, the effect of section 230 of the Code is, in my opinion, to render this judgment debt a barred debt in every respect, because no step in execution can now be taken, nor can the decree be revived.

The case of Hebblethwaite v. Peever [L. R., (1892), 1 Q. B., 123] seems to show that a judgment debt, which has become barred, cannot be made the foundation of a subsequent proceeding to recover the debt, nor can a creditor, who has allowed his judgment debt to become barred, obtain an adjudication in bankruptcy against his debtor; Ex-parte Tynte (L. R., 15 Ch. D., 125).

[481] It would seem to follow that a judgment debt once barred is barred for all purposes, and cannot therefore be made the foundation of an administration action.

It is said, however, that the plaintiff's mortgage lien is still subsisting, and may be enforced as a collateral security for the judgment debt.

Assuming that to be so, the lien would be enforceable only as against specific properties, and would be available for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiff and not of the general body of creditors. This special and exclusive right, if it exists, would form no ground for the administration of the general estate of the debtor; and further, if the lien is still enforceable by suit, it does not appear that this Court would have jurisdiction to entertain any such suit, inasmuch as the original mortgaged properties, and the property which, under the separate return made in respect of the zemindary properties, was apparently allotted to Brojo Nath's estate in substitution of the undivided shares in the zemindaries mentioned in the mortgage deed, are alike situate outside the ordinary original jurisdiction of this Court.

For these reasons it seems to me that the plaintiff's mortgage debt and the decree which was obtained in respect thereof are alike barred; and, consequently, I must hold that this suit, which is founded on that debt, must be also barred, and cannot therefore be maintained.

The suit must therefore be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Pugh (with him Mr. Evans Pugh) for the appellant.--The plaintiff's right as a mortgagee is still subsisting, and therefore she has undoubtedly a right to maintain a suit under sections 67 and 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. The right to bring such a suit could only be maintained by establishing the fact that her rights under the mortgage are still subsisting. As to her right to claim administration in respect of the mortgage, she would be proceeding, not simply against the property actually included in the mortgage, but also against the general estate or an unascertained part of it. The suit is not for administration only; it is also for enforcement of the mortgage. If the plaintiff were [482] not entitled to administration and to judgment under the administration, then she could ask for a decree in the suit as upon a mortgage. With regard to the jurisdiction, also, the suit is not brought with reference to the mortgaged property only, but also to the rest of the estate, a large portion of which is in Calcutta.

Again, the plaintiff has a right to maintain this suit as a judgment-creditor. The judgment of the 29th September 1882 is still in force, because of the attachment order in 1886. Therefore, limitation would run from 1886, not from 1882. This case is governed, not by section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code or article 179 of schedule II to the Limitation Act, but by article 180, because, when a decree has been transferred to the High Court, it is to be treated in every sense, and for all the purposes of execution, as a decree of the High Court. Besides, under article 147, a mortgagee has sixty years within which to foreclose or sell, and to enforce that right he must bring a suit under sections 67 and 99 of the Transfer of Property Act—Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813).

This is not a "suit upon a judgment"; that being a term well understood of which a suit upon a foreign judgment is an illustration. A suit by a judgment-creditor for administration and for the enforcement of a collateral security has never been considered, and cannot properly be called a suit upon a judgment. All the cases decided upon the article limiting suits upon judgments show that the meaning of the term is the one I have indicated. [The cases of Choudhry Paroosh Ram Das v. Kali Puddo Banerjee (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 53) and Futteh Narain Chowdhry v. Chundrabati Chowdhrain (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 551) were also cited and relied on.]

Mr. Dunne for the respondent.—Whether this suit is brought on the debt or on the judgment, it is barred by limitation. The plaintiff asks for administration; but that is not a cause of action, it is merely a form of the relief she prays for.

Again, the properties, the subject-matter of the suit, are wholly outside the jurisdiction of this Court. The properties in Calcutta allotted to the defendant in Calcutta cannot be treated as security for the mortgage debt; because the most that the plaintiff could [483] claim on his mortgage would be the share of the zemindary properties allotted to the mortgagor; and those are all outside the jurisdiction.

The appellant's decree was a mere money decree. It was not a decree directing any sale; it was certainly not a mortgage decree under the Transfer of Property Act. It cannot be treated as such now; and she has not attempted to treat it as one, because she applied to the Hooghly Court for execution of the decree. If it was a mortgage decree, there was nothing to prevent her from having the undivided share of the mortgagor in the zemindaries sold; she only applied for attachment of the property. There is no application pending for execution; and this distinguishes the case from the case of Chowdhry Paroosh Ram Das v. Kali Puddo Banerjee (I.L.R., 17 Cal., 53).

The argument cannot prevail that section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply, because this is in effect a decree of the High Court in its original jurisdiction, within the meaning of article 180 of the Limitation Act. The decision in Tincowrie Dawn v. Debendra Nath Mookerjee (I.L.R., 17 Cal., 491) is an answer to that contention. The former Code was entirely different from the present one on this subject. The old Code refers to the effect of a decree for the purpose of execution; the present one deals merely with the machinery by which the decree is to be executed, and does not make the decree of the lower Court a decree of the High Court.

If the right to execution is barred, no suit can in any event be brought on the judgment. Fakirapa v. Pandurangapa (I.L.R., 6 Bom., 7). But whether the suit is barred by limitation or not, no such suit as this will lie at all. Mahomed Aga Ali v. Widow of Balmakund (L. R., 3 I. A., 241), Kisan Nandram v. Anandram Bachaji (10 Bom. H. C., 433), Ranganasary v. Shappani Asary (5 Mad., H. C., 375), Nasrudin v. Venkatesh Prabhu (I.L.R., 5 Bom., 382).

Finally, the mortgage lien cannot be subsisting. If the plaintiff has a mortgage decree, the lien is merged; if not, she is [484] in a worse position than if she had. In the former case, the suit is barred under section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code; in the latter, by section 43.

Mr. Pugh in reply.

C. A. V.

The following judgments were delivered:—

Maclean, C.J.—In this case the appellant, who is the plaintiff in the suit as the legal personal representative of her late husband Radhajeebun Mustafi, brings a suit against Thackomoni Dassi, as the heiress and representative of her deceased husband Brojo Nauth Dey, and the object of the suit is to have an account taken of what is due to her under a certain mortgage and decree, to have the estate of Brojo Nauth Dey administered by the Court, for the appointment of a Receiver, and for consequential relief. The facts briefly are as follows:—

On the 6th April 1880 Brojo Nauth Dey mortgaged his shares in three properties, all outside the jurisdiction of this Court, and which I briefly refer to as (1) lot Bankra, (2) lot Sheakhala, (3) lot Begumpore, to the plaintiff's late husband to secure Rs. 10,000 and interest.

On the 22nd April 1882 Mustafi, the mortgagee, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly for the recovery of the debt, and on the 29th September 1882 (the defendant Brojo Nauth Dey having died in the meantime and the present defendants being entered as defendants), the decree set forth in paragraph 4 of the plaint was pronounced. I must refer to this decree. It is at page 15 of the paper book. [After reading the decree his Lordship continued] : In my opinion this was a mortgage decree, though not in the form prescribed by the Transfer of Property Act, which came into force on the 1st July 1882, but in the form in which, as I understand, such decrees had been for many years, and were drawn up in the Mofussil Courts. The decree provides for the payment of the mortgage debt, for the realization of the mortgaged property and payment thereout of the mortgage debt. The claim, in this suit, it may be observed, asks that the claim, i.e., the money claim, should be realized out of the mortgaged property, and failing that from any other property of the defendant. I think the decree of 1882 [485] was a mortgage decree, i.e., a decree made in a suit to enforce the mortgage in which the mortgagee asked, not merely for a personal judgment against his debtor, but for the realization of the mortgaged property to satisfy his claim.

On the 12th July 1883 the mortgagee applied to the Mofussil Court for execution of the decree, and on the 27th July 1883 that Court ordered that the decree should be transferred to the High Court for execution. On the 18th January 1887 an order for attachment was made by Mr. Justice TREVELYAN, and the plaintiff alleges that that order is still in force. From the date of the order in January 1887 the plaintiff did nothing whatever until 29th August 1894, nearly 8 years after, when she took out a summons in her suit for a sale of the mortgaged property under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, and on the 5th January 1895 that application was dismissed with costs. On the 19th March 1895 she instituted this suit. In the meantime proceedings had been taken in this Court for the partition of the entirety of the property, the shares in which of the original defendant Brojo Nauth Dey had been mortgaged by the deed of the 6th April 1880. The facts as to these proceedings may be referred to very briefly. The suit was instituted on the 18th February 1880, and a decree made on the 2nd April 1881, which directed the partition of the estate with a declaration as to what Brojo Nauth Dey's share in the estate was.

On the 26th May 1891 a Receiver was appointed in the last-mentioned suit.

On the 30th June 1885 a decree was pronounced, the effect of which is stated in paragraph 18 of the plaint.

In pursuance of that decree the Commissioners made various returns which were duly confirmed by the Court and by a return, dated the 22nd June 1894, lot Bankra, valued at Rs. 38,393, and other property valued at 10,167, was allotted to the defendant, while lot Sheakhala and lot mouzah Begumpore were allotted to the other members of the family. The only other fact to which I need refer is that by a decree of this Court, dated the 23rd July 1883 in a mortgage suit by one Lal Behary Dutt against the present defendant, the decree mentioned in paragraph 30 of the plaint was made.

[486] This decree shows that if the proper steps were taken by a mortgagee of Brojo Nauth Dey, the Receiver in the partition suit would be ordered to pay the mortgage debt, assuming, of course, he had the funds properly so applicable, and that directions would be given for the realization of the mortgaged property to meet that debt. The only other order to which I need refer is that of the 6th December 1894 set out in paragraph 33 of the plaint. These are, shortly, the facts of the case; and upon them the plaintiff asks for the order I have mentioned. The question is whether she is entitled to it or to any other order. The defence is the Statute of Limitation, and the learned Judge in the Court below upheld that defence. Section 4 of the Limitation Act is as follows:—

"Subject to the provisions contained in sections 5 to 25 (inclusive), every suit instituted, appeal presented, and application made, after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the second schedule hereto annexed, shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence."

The cause of action arose originally when the mortgage debt was created 16 years ago in 1880. If the plaintiff be suing on that debt, her remedy primâ facie is clearly barred.

In 1882, under the decree in that year, the original debt became a judgment debt, and if the plaintiff be suing on that, her remedy is equally barred. The plaintiff cannot obtain a decree for administration, unless she can show she is a creditor in respect of a debt, the remedy for the recovery of which is not barred by the Statute. If the debtor had been living, could the plaintiff have sued him for the debt and its realization out of the mortgage estate? I do not think she could successfully have maintained such an action; the Statute of Limitation would have been a bar, and not improbably the plea of res judicata under section 13 of the Code. But it was not seriously contended that she could have successfully brought such an action.

Mr. Pugh for the plaintiff relies upon the attachment order of 1886, and contends that that order kept alive the decree of 1882, and that the period consequently runs from 1886 and not from 1882.

He relies, as I understood his argument, on article 180 of the [487] second schedule of the Limitation Act. But that article does not apply.

This suit is not an application to enforce a judgment or decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter, i.e., one of the High Courts; it is not suggested that it is an application to enforce the attachment order of 1887, nor can it be regarded as an application for the execution of a decree or order under article 179.

As I do not think article 180 applies, it becomes immaterial to consider whether the attachment order of 1886 revived the decree of 1882, or to consider the various authorities which have been cited upon that point, or the dictum of Chief Justice PEACOCK, reported at page 971, Bengal Law Reports. Full Bench Rulings.

The plaintiff appears to me to be upon the horns of this dilemma. If she be suing as a creditor for administration on the original debt, she is, apart from the effect of the order of 1886, clearly barred by the Statute; and if she rely on the attachment order of 1886 as keeping the original debt alive, she is at once confronted with section 230 of the Code, which makes it obligatory upon her, if she desire to enforce her decree, to apply to the Court which made the decree, and, in face of that provision, she is not entitled, in my opinion, to institute a separate suit.

Apart from this, I think all questions arising between the parties to the original suit, ought, under section 244 of the Code, to have been decided, and could have been decided, by the Court executing the decree. A separate suit ought not to be instituted unless all questions between the parties or their representatives cannot be decided in the original suit. The plaintiff's right is, if she be now not too late, to enforce the decree of 1882, and any questions arising as to that ought to be determined, and can only be determined, by the Court executing that decree. I am prepared to hold that, quite apart from any question as to the Statute of Limitation, the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this suit, having regard to sections 230 and 244 of the Code.

One other point remains. It is said that under article 147 of the schedule to the Act the mortgagee has sixty years within which to foreclose or sell, and that to enforce that claim she must, under the conjoint operation of sections 99 and 67 of the [488] Transfer of Property Act, institute a suit for sale under the latter section. But these sections cannot apply if the mortgagee have already obtained a decree for sale, as in my opinion she has, viz., the decree of 1882.

But be this as it may, the present suit is not such as is contemplated by sections 99 and 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, nor was it intended to be; and if it were, having regard to the locality of the property, and to section 12 of the Letters Patent, this Court could not entertain it.

In this case the plaintiff has for many years slept upon her rights, and if she have lost her remedy against the defendant, it is entirely her own fault. Litigation in this matter has been going on since 1882, and for nearly 8 years the plaintiff did nothing, and has never taken any steps to enforce her attachment order of 1886; and now, some 13 years after the institution of the original suit, she comes and asks that the whole matter may commence de novo, and the flood gates of litigation be re-opened. I think it would be lamentable if such a claim could succeed, if so, the chances of finality in litigation would be very small.

For the reasons I have given, I think the appeal has failed, and must be dismissed with costs.

Macpherson, J.– Whether this suit is to be regarded as based on the original debt, the mortgage, or the judgment or decree of 1882, it is not, I think, maintainable. The debt has passed into a judgment debt; and under article 122* of the Limitation Act no suit could now be brought on the judgment. It is said that this is not a suit on the judgment within the meaning of that article, as it is a suit for the administration of the estate, but if no suit could be brought on the judgment, I do not see how the judgment can be made a ground for relief in this case.

Then it is said that the mortgage lien still subsists, and that under section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act the plaintiff could still bring a suit for the sale of the mortgaged property. Even if this can be regarded as a suit for that purpose, I agree with Mr Justice SALE, for the reasons stated by him, that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. But it seems to me that the decree of 1882 is in substance a decree for the sale of the mortgaged properties. It sets out those properties, and directs [489] that the sum decreed should be realized from them, which can only mean by the sale of them; and that was the relief asked for in the suit. Assuming that sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, which came into force while the suit was pending, applied to the suit, the decree was not, it is true, made in conformity with them as, instead of making a decree nisi, followed by a decree absolute, the Court at once made a decree absolute. But the decree has never been questioned, and is now a final decree as between the parties. The case of Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813) is distinguishable, as the Court there in effect held that there was no decree for sale. No second suit to enforce the lien would therefore lie.

Mr. Pugh further argued that the decree of 1882 being still alive and capable of being executed there is a debt, the remedy for the recovery of which is not barred, and that the plaintiff can on this ground maintain the suit. The decree of 1882 is said to be still alive, because the application which was made in September 1886 for the execution of it is still pending, and because the attachment which followed on that application is still in force, and it would not therefore be necessary for the plaintiff to make any fresh application for execution, to which the 12 years' rule laid down in section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code would apply. Whether there is a pending proceeding, and whether the plaintiff can get anything out of it, are matters to be determined by the Court in which the proceeding is said to be pending, viz., the Court executing the decree. Assuming for argument's sake that there is a pending proceeding, it is only in that proceeding, and by reason of its being a pending proceeding, that the plaintiff could get any relief in the way of execution, as any fresh application for the execution of the decree would be barred by section 230 of the Code. This is not a suit in aid of execution ; it has nothing to do with the execution of the decree ; and if there is an execution proceeding pending in which, and in which alone, the plaintiff could, putting her case at the highest, get some relief, this does not, I conceive, help her in bringing this suit.

Lastly, it is argued that article 180 of the Limitation Act [490] applies as the decree, when sent to this Court for execution, became in effect a decree of this Court. I think it is sufficient to refer to the case of Tincowrie Dawn v. Debendra Nath Mookerjee (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 491) and to the reasons there given for holding that this contention cannot prevail.

In my opinion the appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

Trevelyan, J.—In my opinion the appeal and the suit both fail.

It is, I think, perfectly clear that the plaintiff has not a better right of suit against Brojo Nauth Dey's representative than she would have had against Brojo Nauth Dey himself, if he had been alive. His death cannot have altered her right of suit, although it may have changed the character of the relief.

It is equally clear to my mind that a suit similar to the present suit could not have succeeded against Brojo Nauth Dey, if he had been alive. It is based partly upon the mortgage and partly upon the decree. So far as it is based upon the mortgage, the right was merged in the decree of the 29th of September 1882, which was a mortgage decree drawn in the form prevalent in Mofussil Courts before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, and directed the realization of the amount of the debt from the property mortgaged and other properties of the defendant. There could be no further rights on the mortgage, the right of the creditor having become that of a judgment-creditor. This suit, as based on the judgment debt, is barred by article 122 of the Limitation Act ; but, even apart from that provision, a suit would not lie to enforce a judgment debt, the execution of which is barred by the law of limitation.

It may be that the proceedings which have been commenced under section 272 of the Civil Procedure Code are capable of being carried on to some conclusion, but the mere fact that those proceedings are not extinct would not keep alive the decree so as to render it capable of execution otherwise than by way of continuation of the proceeding so commenced. The terms of section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code would [491] expressly prevent another application for the execution of this decree.

Article 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act is also, in my opinion, applicable; more than three years have elapsed since there has been any step in aid of execution, and therefore an application would now be barred. It has been contended that article 180 applies. In my opinion the law of limitation is not altered by the transfer of the proceedings in execution. The decree does not become a decree of the High Court, although it may have to be enforced in the same manner as decrees of the High Court.

The argument is based upon an obiter dictum of Sir BARNES PEACOCK with reference to the meaning of another Act. The dictum was not approved of by the other four Judges who sat with the Chief Justice. The dictum is not now in point, as we have now to deal with Acts containing a different phraseology. I think it would be impossible to apply that dictum to the present case. The words of article 180 of the Limitation Act are, to my mind, too plain to be capable of the interpretation which Mr. Pugh seeks to put upon them, and there is nothing in the Civil Procedure Code to limit those terms.

Section 227 of the Civil Procedure Code directs this Court to execute the decree sent to it, in the same manner as if it had been made by this Court in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil jurisdiction. The "manner" of execution refers to the procedure under which the execution is to be had, and has no reference to the limitation. It simply applies the High Court machinery to the execution of the decree.

In my opinion the execution of the decree is, except perhaps in continuation of the proceedings already taken (a matter which we have not to deal with here), barred by limitation. That being so, the title of the plaintiff to bring this suit must fail. Moreover, I am inclined to think that the terms of section 244 (c) of the Civil Procedure [Code] would have prevented this suit being brought against the judgment-debtor, and therefore would bar the present suit; although having regard to the view I entertain as to the suit being barred by limitation, it is not actually necessary to decide this point. The only questions which are raised in this suit are [492] "questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives," and they relate to the execution of the decree. The object of this suit is apparently to obtain execution of the decree against some property other than that which was actually mortgaged. I cannot see why this question cannot, as between the parties, be determined by the Court executing the decree, and in the execution proceeding. The case of Prosunno Coomar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683 : L. R., 19 I. A., 166) shows that a narrow construction ought not to be placed upon section 244, but that all questions which can possibly be determined in the execution proceedings should be so determined.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Practice—Sanction to prosecute—Application for sanction—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), sections 337, 339—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 302—Withdrawal of conditional pardon.

An application to the High Court for sanction to prosecute an approver for giving false evidence should be by motion on behalf of the Crown in open Court.

The withdrawal of the conditional pardon should be made, under section 339† of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the authority that granted it and not by the High Court.

THIS case was referred by the Sessions Judge of Nadia, asking the High Court to withdraw the conditional pardon offered by the Jointf Magistrate of Meherpur to an approver, and to sanction his [493] prosecution under section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The reference was as follows :—

"Under section 339 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I have the honour to request the High Court to withdraw the conditional pardon offered under section 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Joint Magistrate of Meherpur to the approver Ram Prosad Bahelia in the case Queen-Empress v. Manick Chandra Sarkar under section 302 of the Penal Code, as he has wilfully concealed in his evidence in the Court of Sessions everything connected with the murder and retracted his previous statement before the Joint Magistrate of Meherpur, a copy of which is hereto annexed. In this Court he stated that the statement was made, because of the beating he received at the hands of the Sub Inspector. The evidence of the Punchayat Chandra Kundu showed that the statement was not extorted from the prisoner by either subjecting him to beating or holding out threats to him. I therefore request that this Court may be pleased to sanction his prosecution under section 193 of the Penal Code and under clause 3 of section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The prisoner Manick Chandra Sarkar was unanimously acquitted by the Jury, mainly because the principal witnesses retracted their statements before the Joint Magistrate, thus causing a grave failure of justice in this case."

We are of opinion that an application for sanction to prosecute an approver for giving false evidence should be made by motion on behalf of the Crown in open Court, and not by a letter of reference, such as has been submitted by the Sessions Judge in the present case.

As to the other recommendation made by the Sessions Judge, we think that it is for the authority, which granted the conditional pardon, to withdraw it, and not for this Court to do so in the first instance under section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 269--Negligent act—Refusal to allow person suffering from infectious disease to be removed to a hospital—Penal Code, sections 268, 270.

Where a mother refused to allow her daughter suffering from small-pox to be removed to a hospital in accordance with an order made by the District Magistrate, unless she accompanied her, and was convicted of an offence under section 269† of the Penal Code by the District Magistrate:—

Held, that no unlawful or negligent act had been committed within the meaning of section 269 of the Penal Code.

THE petitioner, Mrs. Cahoon, resided in a certain house in Howrah with her daughter and another person, Mr. Webber, who lived as a friend of the family without payment, and occupied a room adjoining that occupied by the daughter.

The daughter was attacked with small-pox, and accordingly the Magistrate of the District issued an order for her removal to the hospital. Mrs. Cahoon

* Criminal Revision No. 42 of 1897 made against the order passed by H. F. T. Maguire, District Magistrate of Howrah, dated the 14th of January 1897.

† [Sec. 269:—Whoever unlawfully or negligently does any act which is, and which he knows or has reason to believe to be likely to spread the infection of any disease dangerous to life, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.]

Negligent act likely to spread infection of any disease dangerous to life.

resisted the execution of this order, and stated that, if her daughter was removed to the hospital, she must be removed also. Thereupon the petitioner Mrs. Cahoon was prosecuted summarily under section 269 of the Penal Code and sentenced by the Magistrate to four days' simple imprisonment.

On application to this Court Mrs. Cahoon obtained a rule calling on the Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence under section 269 of the Penal Code should not be set aside.

Mr. Jackson (Dr. Ashutosh Mukerjee, Babu Promothonath Sen and Babu Mahendranath Roy with him) for the petitioner.—Under section 269 of the Penal Code doing an act is not the same as omitting to do an act. Wherever the Penal Code deals with the question of omission, it expressly says so. The petitioner did not try to get small-pox. What offence has she committed? Does any law [495] contemplate that a mother should under circumstances like these be separated from her daughter? The case of Queen-Empress v. Krishnappa (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 276) where a person entered a train suffering from cholera was different. Here it is suggested that the petitioner had a lodger. If she had, there is nothing to prevent him from leaving. But there is no evidence that there was a lodger. He was only a friend, who lives in one of the rooms without payment. Section 269 cannot apply to this case, because the petitioner has done nothing. Section 270 has less bearing still. Also section 268. How is a nuisance public which takes place in a private house? How can the petitioner be guilty of any offence for refusing to allow her daughter to be taken away, unless she (the petitioner) went with her?

No one appeared to show cause.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:—

The facts of this case are very short and simple. The petitioner, Mrs. Cahoon, has been residing in a certain house in Howrah with her daughter; and a certain person (Mr. Webber), who is a friend of the family, lived with them without payment of any hire or anything else, occupying the room next to that occupied by the girl. The latter was attacked with a mild form of small-pox, and the Magistrate of the District issued an order that she should be removed to the Campbell Hospital. When this order was attempted to be carried out, Mrs. Cahoon objected, and said that, if her daughter be removed, "she must also be removed." Thereupon, a prosecution was instituted against her under section 269 of the Penal Code, the result being that she was convicted and sentenced to four days' simple imprisonment.

The case was tried summarily; and the Magistrate, after giving a brief analysis of the evidence, stated as follows:—

"It appears that the accused keeps lodgers in her house and that the witness lives in the next room to the girl who has small-pox, and there is every probability of the small-pox being still further disseminated over the town on account of her action. It seems therefore necessary that she, especially as she has been a nurse, and ought to know better, should be dealt with somewhat [496] severely." And in this view of the matter he convicted the petitioner as already mentioned.

Section 269 of the Penal Code occurs in chapter XLV, which is headed "of offences affecting the public health, safety, convenience, decency, and morals."

The first section, section 268, in that chapter lays down how a person may be guilty of a public nuisance; and the next section 269 provides:

"Whoever unlawfully or negligently does any act which is, and which he knows or has reason to believe to be likely to spread the infection of any disease dangerous to life, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine or with both."

The Magistrate seems to have been of opinion (as we understand him) that because the accused kept lodgers in her house, there was every likelihood of such lodgers catching the disease (small-pox), and that, through them, the contagion might be spread over the town of Howrah. The Magistrate in his explanation, since submitted to this Court, repeats the same view, and states that the act of Mrs. Cahoon was illegal, the word "unlawful" as occurring in section 269 having at least the same import as the word "illegal" as defined in the Penal Code; and that therefore the conduct of Mrs. Cahoon comes under the head of "public nuisance."

Now, it appears to us that the initial mistake which the Magistrate fell into was that he considered that Mrs. Cahoon kept "boarders" or "lodgers" in her house. Of this, there is no evidence; the only person residing with the family at the time being a friend who lived not as a boarder or lodger and who was welcome to go away at any moment he pleased. Mrs. Cahoon was not responsible, if he chose to stay there, and by his own intervention incurred the risk of catching the contagion.

The word "illegal" is defined in the Penal Code, but the word "unlawful" is not: and there are various sections in the Code, where the two words are rather indiscriminately used. An act however may be lawful, though it may be illegal; and an act may be unlawful, though not illegal. But accepting the view of the Magistrate as correct, the question arises whe-[497]ther the act of Mrs. Cahoon amounted to a "public nuisance," and caused danger to "public health." She was living with her daughter in a house of which she was the owner or occupier. it was not a public house, she kept no lodgers or boarders, she kept her daughter in a room, and never took her out of the house, or to any public place. And we fail to see how by keeping the girl in the house, or opposing her removal to a hospital, she caused any "common injury or annoyance to the public or to the people in general, who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity" within the meaning of section 268, which defines what a public nuisance is.

What is really a public nuisance may be gathered from Chapter X of the Code of Criminal Procedure headed "Public Nuisance," and the procedure laid down therein for the abatement of such nuisance.

Turning then to section 269 itself, can it be said that the act of Mrs. Cahoon in keeping her child, though attacked with small-pox, was an unlawful or negligent act, and can it be said that, when she did so, or when she opposed the removal of the girl to a hospital, she knew or had reason to believe that it was likely to spread the infection of small-pox? We are unable to answer these questions in the affirmative. It was no doubt her duty, if she had the means, to isolate her child in such a way as not to spread infection to others; and apparently she did what she was bound to do; and we do not think that she committed any unlawful act by objecting to the removal of the girl to a hospital; and indeed it may well be said, that the carrying of the patient through a public street would be more risky to the public than keeping her in a private house.

We might in this connection refer to some of the observations of Lord BLACKBURN in the case of the Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill [L. R., 6 App. Cas., 193 (205)] where the question to be decided was whether a small-pox hospital was a public nuisance, and where the duty not to spread infectious disease was considered. Lord BLACKBURN in the course of his judgment observed as follows: "Where those who have the custody of the person sick of an infectious disorder have not the means of isolating him from the other inmates which is [498] very commonly the case with the poor, and consequently those other inmates and the neighbours are exposed to the risk of infection, I think that the inability to isolate him would form a sufficient excuse to be a defence to any indictment; and I think also, though I am not aware of any authority on the subject, that the neighbours could not maintain any action for the damage which they would in such a case sustain from the proximity of the infected person, it being a necessary incident to the use of property for habitations in a town that contagious sickness may befall their neighbours. If those who have the charge of the infected person have the means of isolating him on the spot, they certainly do well to use them, and, if it cannot be done on the spot, and they can, either by their own means, or by the aid of charitable persons who have erected an hospital, find a place where he can be isolated so as to avoid the risk of infection, they will do well to use these means. I do not mean to express any opinion as to whether, at common law, they would or would not be responsible for not doing so; but there is no authority, and I think no principle, for saying that they are justified in removing him to a place where the neighbours would be exposed to contagion, though it may be that those neighbours would be fewer in number than the neighbours of the spot where the infection broke out, nor for saying that, if that was done, and the contagion was such as to amount to a real nuisance, those neighbours might not maintain an action and obtain an injunction to protect themselves against the importation of foreign infection. For though, as I have already said, I think it an incident to the use of a habitation in a town that the occupier must bear the necessary risks of the inmates of a neighbouring habitation falling ill of a contagious disease, I do not think it an incident that he is to submit to his neighbours, wilfully though for very laudable motives, and not maliciously, bringing in contagion, where it did not previously exist, if the effect is not merely to alarm him, but to injure him. This, I think, is borne out by the decisions on the subject of inoculation." These observations are instructive in the present case

We are not aware under what authority the Magistrate issued an order for the compulsory removal of the girl from the private residence of her mother. In the city of Bombay, we understand, the authorities have power to remove persons suffering from infec-[499]tious diseases to hospitals, but no such power seems to have been conferred in this Presidency.

Upon the whole, we think, that the conviction in this case cannot be supported, and we accordingly direct that the rule be made absolute.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 23rd February, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE GORDON.

Queen-Empress

Fattah Chand............Petitioner.*

Magistrate, Jurisdiction of—Disqualification of Magistrate to try case—Witness—Omission to record statement of accused under Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), section 364—Order as to disposal of property as to which no offence has been committed—Criminal Procedure Code, section 517—Property found by Police in possession of accused.

Where a Magistrate before whom an accused person is brought omits to record (as provided by section 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code) statements made by the accused, he does not thereby make himself a witness, and so become disqualified from trying the case.

The accused was convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of certain money belonging to the complainant, and on his conviction the Magistrate made an order under section 517 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, directing that an amount equal to the monies embezzled should be repaid to the complainant out of certain sums of money found by the police on the person of the accused.

Held, that the Magistrate had no power to make the order under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there being nothing to show that any offence had been committed with regard to the property, or that it had been used for the commission of any offence.

THE accused, who was a cashier in the employ of the complainant, a dealer in kerosine oil, was convicted by the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, Syud Ameer Hossein, under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code of criminal breach of trust in respect of certain monies belonging to the complainant. Upon the complaint being lodged the Magistrate issued a warrant for the arrest of the accused, who was brought up before the Magistrate under [500] that warrant. The accused thereupon made certain statements, which were not reduced to writing, but which were made before any evidence for the prosecution had been recorded. Subsequently the trial of the accused took place, and he was convicted and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. The Magistrate in the concluding portion of his judgment made the following order:—

"I direct that out of the money and ornaments recovered by the police a sum equal to the amount embezzled by the defendant in this case should be made over to the complainant, and the balance should remain with the police until further orders, pending the disposal of the other case; vide section 517 of the Code of Criminal Procedure."

When the accused was arrested by the police Rs. 6,000 worth of gold ornaments and Rs. 3,500 in notes and silver and hundis were found in his possession.

Mr. P. L. Roy (Babu Atul Krishna Ghose with him) for the Appellant.—The Magistrate ought not to have tried this case, having made himself a witness in the case, by allowing the accused to make this unrecorded statement to him.

* Criminal Appeal No. 918 of 1896, against the order passed by Nawab Amir Hossein, Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 26th of October 1896.

Queen-Empress v. Manikam (I.L.R., 19 Mad., 263), Empress v. Donnelly (I.L.R., 2 Cal., 405). The statement of the accused should have been recorded under section 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As regards the order of the Magistrate making over to the complainant a sum equal to the amount embezzled out of the gold ornaments found in the possession of the accused, I submit it should be set aside by this Court. [GHOSE, J.—We can set aside the order, but we have no jurisdiction over the complainant.] In Empress v. Joggessur Mochi (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 379) it was held that this Court could do so. The Magistrate by doing what he ought not cannot place himself beyond the jurisdiction of this Court. Weir, p. 1120. The case of Basudeb Surma Gossain v. Naziruddin (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 834) is no doubt against me, but I do not know that that is correctly based on the section. If the complainant does not obey the order, he will be punished for contempt of Court. [GHOSE, J. -Then he must be prosecuted as an offender.]

The Advocate-General (Sir C. Paul) (Mr. C. Gregory with him) for the opposite party.—The confession as made to the [501] Magistrate is no doubt bad. It ought to have been recorded. As regards the second objection I rely on the case of Basudeb Surma Gossain v. Naziruddin (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 834). This Court has no power to order restitution, if the property has been handed over. In re Annapurnabai (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 630). The Magistrate went beyond the provisions of section 517 in making the order.

The appellant before us, Fattah Chand, has been convicted by the Officiating Chief Magistrate of Calcutta of the offence under section 408 of the Penal Code, namely, of criminal breach of trust as a clerk or servant of the complainant, in respect of certain monies belonging to him. It appears that upon the complaint being lodged, the Magistrate issued a warrant for the arrest of the accused, and the latter was brought up before the Magistrate under that warrant. He then made certain statements which, however, were not reduced to writing. At the trial which subsequently took place, the Magistrate took evidence upon the charge preferred against the accused; and finding that the offence attributed to him had been proved, convicted him under section 408, and sentenced him to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

The Magistrate in his judgment refers to the statement that the accused made before him when he was brought up before him under the warrant; and says that, as no evidence for the prosecution had, at the time when the statements were made before him, been recorded in the presence of the accused, he did not like to record his confession. Mr. Roy, on behalf of the appellant, has contended that the Magistrate, by reason of his having heard the statements thus made by the accused, made himself a witness in the case, and thereby disqualified himself from trying the case; and, therefore, the whole of the proceedings should be quashed, and a new trial ordered before another Magistrate. We are unable to accept this contention as correct. No doubt, the Magistrate did not carry out the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code in this respect; he was bound to follow the directions of section 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and to have [502] recorded the statement of the accused in the manner therein indicated. And it may well be said, as, indeed, it has been said before us, that the Magistrate ought not to have allowed his mind to be in any way influenced in the consideration of the question before him by the statement made to him by the accused, which was not recorded as the law required. Notwithstanding this, we are not prepared to hold that the Magistrate, by reason of his having heard the statements made before him in open Court, made himself a witness in the cause, and thereby disqualified himself from trying the case. In fact, there is hardly any matter upon which the Magistrate could possibly give his evidence in this case. If there were any, we should have been prepared to set aside the conviction, and send the case back for re-trial. Mr. Roy has quoted before us certain cases, which have held that, when a Magistrate becomes cognizant of facts otherwise than in the course of a judicial investigation of the case, or directs the arrest of the accused, or is otherwise interested in the result of the case, he is disqualified from holding the trial; but that is not the case here.

If, however, we were satisfied that by reason of what took place the accused was in any manner prejudiced, we should have been prepared to order a re-trial. There is plenty of evidence on the record, upon which it is clear that the offence under section 408 was committed by the accused; and we have no doubt that the conviction is right. We accordingly refuse to set aside the conviction and sentence.

The Magistrate, however, in the concluding portion of his judgment, said as follows: —

"I direct that out of the money and ornaments recovered by the police, a sum equal to the amount embezzled by the defendant in this case should be made over to the complainant, and the balance should remain with the police until further orders, pending the disposal of the other case, vide section 517 of the Civil Procedure Code."

It appears that when the prisoner was arrested by the police, Rs. 6,000 worth of gold ornaments, and Rs. 3,500 in notes and silver and hundis, were found in his possession.

The accused made over the same to the police; and the Magistrate upon the conclusion of the trial made the order which we have [503] just noticed, in accordance with, as he says, the provisions of section 517 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Now, that section provides that "when an inquiry or a trial in any Criminal Court is concluded, the Court may make such order as it thinks fit for the disposal of any document or other property produced before it regarding which any offence appears to have been committed, or which has been used for the commission of any offence." The question which naturally presents itself to one's mind, when he is called upon to make an order under section 517 is, whether in regard to the property produced before the Court, any offence was committed, or whether the said property was used for the commission of any offence. Now, there is nothing to show upon the record that any offence was committed in regard to the property which the police found in the possession of the accused, or that it was used for the commission of any offence: and, therefore, the Magistrate had no authority whatsoever to make the order he did make. It is not necessary for us to refer to any authority upon this matter. The language of the law is clear enough, and if the Magistrate had only considered the provisions of section 517, he would not perhaps have made the order in question. We accordingly set aside that order.

We have been informed that the Magistrate has already given effect to his order under section 517, by delivering over the property to the complainant. That matter, however, is not at present before us, and we do not think it necessary to express any opinion upon the question as to how restitution could be made to the accused, now that we have set aside the said order of the Magistrate. We do not understand how, on the face of the third paragraph of section 517, the Magistrate could have passed an order for the delivery of the property to the complainant before the time for preferring an appeal to this Court had expired, or before this Court had disposed of the appeal

The 6th February, 1897

PRESENT

LORDS WATSON, HOBHOUSE AND MORRIS, AND SIR R COUCH

Amriteswari Debi ... Representative of the Original Plaintiff, Fanindra Deb Raikat

versus

The Secretary of State for India in Council ... Defendant

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta]

Forest Act (VIII of 1878), Chapter IX, sections 45 to 56 "of drift and stranded timber"—Right of Government, under section 45, to collect and store, with obligation to notify—Meaning of "julkur"—Test of Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 13

The object of Chapter IX of the Indian Forest Act 1878, is to regulate the rights of owners and not to deprive them of their property in drift and stranded timber and wood. Section 45 of that Act does not divest the owner of or transfer to the Government any right therein. Nor does anything in the Act affect the right of the Government to take possession and dispose of timber and wood whereof they are the undisputed owners. But upon certain conditions only, the Government have a right to the possession of any drift and stranded timber and wood collected by their officers, which however may be claimed by the true owner, who may be a person holding a julkur or water right comprehending those things. The conditions are that the officers of Government shall store the timber in the manner and issue the notification required by the Act. In case of such procedure not being followed and the wood being treated as the property of the Government the latter are, in the event of the wood being found not to belong to them, in no better position than any other trespasser.

The title to collect given to the Government by the Act is coupled with, and dependent upon, the duty of giving notice to the public in order that the true owner, whether he be a person from whom the wood has drifted away, or the owner of a julkur or whoever he may be entitled, may claim the drifted timber in the manner and within the time prescribed by the Act.

There is no presumptive ownership of the Government save where their officers collect and hold, for the true owner in the first instance, subject to the statutory duty of giving notice.

The Government having taken possession of drift timber in the river Teesta as having an absolute right thereto, the zemindar owning land on the bank asserted by this suit his right to it, on the ground of his owning the julkur where the river passed by, and through, his lands. This julkur as he showed had been decreed in 1882 to his predecessor in estate, in a suit against the Government.

[505] Held, that this term, signifying water-right, was aptly used to include the right to drift and stranded timber as well as to fishings, or other interest of a similar kind in the produce of the river; a right decreed in the above suit.

The rule is that where a final decree is couched in general terms, the extent to which it ought to be regarded as res judicata can only be determined by ascertaining what were the real matters of controversy in the cause. That the question of the right to drift and stranded timber was included in the julkur, decreed in 1882, was, in their Lordships' opinion, established by intrinsic evidence in the record of that suit.

They concurred with the High Court that correspondence and orders by officers, of dates subsequent to the former decree, could not be received as aids to its construction. But the record showed that the right was in controversy before the judge and that he meant to include it in the julkur, which he decreed. The zemindar's claim was, therefore, adjudged to be established.

APPEAL from a decree (3rd September 1892) of the High Court, affirming a decree (23rd December 1890) of the Subordinate Judge of Jalpaiguri.

The appellant, the Rani Amriteswari Debi, was the executrix appointed by the will of her deceased husband, Raja Fanindra Deb Raikat of Baikantpur, to manage the estate which he left. This was a very old possession of the former Raikats on the frontier line of the Bhutan and Cooch Behar territories. After the submission of the Deb Raja, and the Raikat about 1772, the latter was placed in the position of an ordinary zemindar, a settlement and assessment to the revenue following. There was some change of taluks after the annexation of the Bhutan Doars. The zemindari was in the Jalpaiguri District, extending along the bank, and in some places on both banks of the river Teesta. The Raja who had instituted this suit died on the 22nd Magh, or 4th February 1896, pending this appeal, and left an only son, Prosunno Deb Raikat, a minor, having, by his will, appointed his widow to be guardian of the minor and manager of the estate.

The object of the present suit was to obtain a declaration against the defendant, that the plaintiff was entitled to all the wood found adrift, sunk, or stranded in that part of the Teesta lying between the Garumara Hills on the north and Mekhligunge on the south, and also to recover the value of the wood [506] appropriated by the Government within those limits during the three years before suit.

The question raised on this appeal was whether the appellant, as representing the proprietor of a zemindari on the bank, had a right to such wood in that part of the river. With this was connected the question whether the title to such wood had been determined in a suit brought by the late Raja's predecessor in estate, in 1882, against the present defendant. In that suit the julkur had been decreed. And now, whether this term comprehended all water-rights, so as to include the right to the wood, or had a more limited meaning, was involved as a question for decision. The suit was commenced on the 7th January 1890, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rungpore at Jalpaiguri, claiming the above right on the ground that it had been exercised from time immemorial by the proprietor of Baikantpur. The plaint referred to the suit of 18th December 1882, in which the Rani Jagadeswari Debi, widow and executrix of a former Raja, Jogendra Nath Raikat, had obtained a decree for the julkur, within the above limits, against the Government; and stated the fact that this decree had been carried into effect, having been recognized by the local officers. Since July 1885, however, the zemindar had been prevented from collecting the drift wood by them. The right claimed was estimated at Rs. 9,000, and the mesne profits at Rs. 1,500 for the three years.

For the defence, the written statement denied that the plaintiff had any proprietary rights exerciseable by him in the river, or on any part of it, of the character claimed. The right of the Government to the drift and stranded timber and wood was based on section 45 of the Indian Forest Act, VII of 1878. Under the provisions of that section and the rules made under section 51, published on the 3rd November 1887, the right to take all kinds of wood found sunk and adrift in the river Teesta or stranded on banks or churs, had been determined to belong to the defendant alone. If the defendant had taken the timber or wood in question he had legally exercised his own right. It was also alleged for the defence that in the suit of 1882 the only right claimed was a right of julkur which did not include the right now claimed.

[507] The issues framed in the suit raised the questions: (1) whether the plaintiff had a title to the timber and wood found adrift, sunk, beached or stranded, in the river between the places above mentioned? (2) Was the title of the plaintiff's predecessor thereto determined in the suit between the latter and the present defendant in the suit of 1882? (3) Has the defendant acquired a title to collect such timber under the Indian Forest Act, 1878, and under the rules, made thereunder, of 3rd November 1879?

On the 3rd November 1879, the Government published a notification under section 51 of the Indian Forest Act, declaring that this and other portions of the Teesta river was an area within which all unmarked timber shall be the property of the Government unless and until some person established his right and title thereto, under the provisions of that Act.

On the 18th March 1882, the plaintiff's predecessor brought the suit, No. 18 of that year, against the Secretary of State for possession of the julkur of the river Teesta over the same part of the river as that over which the right was claimed in this suit, and also for mesne profits.

Part of the judgment, given in 1882, and the decree, were as follows:— The Subordinate Judge found that the julkur in dispute was part of the zemindari rights of which permanent settlement was made with the ancestors of the then plaintiff who were in possession of the same for sixty years before the date of the dispossession alleged. Upon these facts he held that the "onus of proving khas possession is shifted on to the defendant;" vide I. L. R., 7 Cal., p. 591.

After reference to revenue papers, for several years anterior, the Court was of opinion that, as the Government had to show that they had a right to the julkur, and had failed to show it, there might, on the above, be a decree for the plaintiff; but it was added that evidence had been adduced by the plaintiff to show that in fact the julkur in dispute was settled with his ancestor as a part of the Baikantpur zemindari.

The judgment concluded thus:—

"The first two issues being found in his favour the plaintiff is undoubtedly entitled to mesne profits for the three years preceding suit, and from the date of suit to the date of recovery of possession. It appears from the [508] written statement of the defendant and from No. 72, cash book of the Forest Department, and No. 73, abstract account of revenue received on account of drift timber from the Teesta river, that the mesne profits for the three years preceding suit have been Rs. 7,181-13-6, and that the suit has not been laid at a larger value than it should have been laid at.

"A decree is therefore given to the plaintiff against the Secretary of State in Council for India for possession of the disputed julkur, and for Rs. 7,181-13-6 as mesne profits for the three years preceding suit, and for further mesne profits from the date of suit to the date of restoration of possession or until the expiration of three years from the date of this decree (whichever event first occurs), and for costs and interest at the rate of Rs. 6 per cent. per annum. Interest on the mesne profits before suit running from date of suit, and on costs running from this date, and on mesne profits after date of suit from the end of the year for which they become due."

In consequence of this, possession of the julkur mehal in the Teesta, where bordered by the Baikantpur estate, was delivered to the then Raikat on the 9th August 1883, and the timber then in possession of the Forest officer was made over to him. His possession was undisturbed until the month of October 1884, when orders were received from the Government under which, in 1885, the Forest officers again took possession of all the drift timber and wood in that part of the river.

"Julkur" is stated in Wilson's Glossary to mean (p. 227) "water tax, profits, or rents derived from water, lakes, ponds, or the like, upon a tract of country or an estate, with the right of fishing, and of cultivating the beds if dry." At p. 580 it is said to be "largely used for a fishery, or right of fishing."

The record of the suit of 1882 was filed in the present suit in which the Subordinate Judge gave judgment of dismissal, concluding as follows:—

"The judgment and the decree of the former suit are no doubt conclusive evidence of the plaintiff's proprietary interest in the river in dispute, and it has been proved by the oral evidence adduced by the two parties in this case that the plaintiff's predecessors collected all drift wood and timber for about thirty years before the year 1870. But for the provisions of Act VII of 1878 and Government notification of the 3rd November 1879, the plaintiff would, in my opinion, be entitled to all drift wood and timber. Under the provisions of section 45 of that Act and the said notification, however, such wood and timber are to be deemed to be the property of Government unless and until any person establishes his right and title thereto as provided in Chapter IX of that Act; and to declare the plaintiff's title to all such wood [509] and timber in this suit would be to act directly against the provisions of the said Act and notification. This suit must consequently fail, and it is hereby dismissed with costs."

The High Court (NORRIS and MACPHERSON, JJ.) dismissed an appeal by the plaintiff.

After stating the object of the suit, the issues raised, and the decision of the Court below, the judgment continued thus:—

It is now contended for the appellant that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in his construction of the decree of 1882, that the matter is really res judicata, and that Act VII of 1878 is not in the way of the declaration sought. The respondent, while supporting the judgment so far as it is in his favour, contends that the evidence does not establish the existence of the right claimed.

The Notification of the 3rd November 1879, made under section 45 of the Forest Act, declared that this and other portions of the Teesta was an area within which all unmarked timber shall be the property of the Government, unless and until any person establishes his right and title thereto under the provisions of the Act.

The suit of 1882 was brought by the plaintiff's predecessor against the Government for possession of the julkur of the Teesta within the limits stated in the present plaint, and for mesne profits during the period of dispossession. The plaint, the written statement, issues, judgment and decree refer to the julkur only; but the mesne profits decreed included the value of drift timber appropriated by the Government, and the mesne profits afterwards obtained from date of suit to date of delivery of possession also included a sum of Rs. 2,718 on that account. There is also no doubt that the decree was treated, by at least the local officers of Government, as conferring on the plaintiff the right to drift timber within his estate, as on the 9th August 1883 the Deputy Commissioner publicly notified that the julkur mehal, including the right to take drift timber, had been made over to the decree-holder, and the latter continued to appropriate such timber till March 1885, when the Government, repudiating the construction which had been put on the decree, directed its officers to take possession of it. Unless, however, a julkur right includes the right to drift timber, it cannot, we think, be said that the question raised in this suit was raised and decided in the suit of 1882, notwithstanding the circumstances above referred to. The decree for mesne profits is good so far as it goes; but it does not determine prospectively the rights of the parties to every source of income included in them, and the misconstruction of a decree cannot give it a wider scope than it really has.

We know of no authority for the proposition that a julkur right includes the right now claimed, and we know of no instance in which such an extended meaning has been given to the term. The right to drift timber which is [510] carried on to an estate by the action of a river is not, as against the Crown, a right which is appurtenant to the ownership of the estate. A decree for the possession of an estate would not carry with it any such right as that now claimed, and a decree for a julkur right can have no higher effect. We think, therefore, that as the right was not expressly claimed in the previous suit or referred to in the pleadings, issues or judgment, the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that it was not conferred by the decree, which also does not allude to it. The plaintiff has put in copies of the depositions of a number of his witnesses to show that the exercise of the right was prominently brought forward; but this does not carry the case any further. We must hold, also, that the Subordinate Judge was right in deciding that the plaintiff cannot get the relief asked for. It is clear that he cannot recover anything in the shape of compensation for timber taken or appropriated in the face of the stringent provisions of sections 45 to 48 of the Forest Act. There is certainly no evidence that the timber was taken to a notified depot, and there is no evidence that the public notice prescribed by section 46 was given: two of the witnesses, indeed, say that there were no notices. But it is not the plaintiff's case that the provisions of the Act were not complied with by the Government officials, that he was unable consequently to prefer a claim and had no other remedy than that which he has resorted to in the present case; nor is it his case that he has suffered loss or damage from the neglect of the Government officials to comply with the provisions of the Act, which were set up as a bar to the suit. The existence of the Act is wholly ignored by him, and no question as to whether its terms had or had not been complied with was raised or considered in the Court below. It was, we think, for the plaintiff to raise that question if he wished to do so, and it is too late now to say that the case is outside the Act even if he could show it to be so.

As regards the declaration, it is argued that the Act does not interfere with vested rights. It does not do so in express terms; but we think the retention of a right, such as that claimed, is quite inconsistent with its provisions.

Section 45 enacts that, without any exception, all timber found adrift, beached, stranded or sunk, and in certain notified areas (including the area over which the right is claimed in this case) all unmarked wood and timber shall be deemed to be the property of the Government unless and until any person establishes his right and title thereto, as provided in Chapter IX; and Forest and other officers are empowered to collect such timber and to store it at notified depots. The following sections relate to the preferring of claims, the disposal of the same by Forest officers and the institution of a suit by persons whose claims have been rejected for possession of the timber claimed. Section 48 then provides that, subject to the claim or suit (if any), the ownership of the timber shall vest in the Government or in the person to whom it has been delivered under section 47.

The declaration which we are asked to make is, that timber found beached, [511]stranded or sunk in the plaintiff's estate shall be deemed to be the property of the plaintiff and not of the Government. Assuming for the moment that such a declaration could be made, the plaintiff, armed with it, might possibly so far defeat the presumptive title of Government. But the question of title as true owner would in many cases, and certainly in this case, still arise. The Government has an extensive forest on the east bank of the river, and the plaintiff has an extensive forest on the west bank. Under such circumstances, the ownership of the drift timber found in the river which divides the two forests must always be doubtful. If the effect of a declaration in the plaintiff's favour was to put the Government in the position of a claimant, that is to say, to throw upon it the burden of proof, the declaration would be clearly contrary to the spirt and letter of the law, and no such declaration could be made. If it had not that effect, it would be valueless. The Government is empowered to collect and hold the timber as presumptive owner until some person makes good his right to it. Prima facie its title as true owner is as good as that of the plaintiff; the latter would still have to prove his ownership, and the declaration would not help him.

That it was the intention of the Legislature to give to the Government a presumptive title in all cases whether there was a vested interest or not appears further from the provisions as to unmarked timber, all of which it is empowered to collect within the limits over which the plaintiff claims to exercise this right, and to hold as owner until a title to it is established in accordance with the procedure prescribed. The presumptive title so conferred would not, we conceive, be defeated as between the plaintiff and the Government by showing that the timber was found adrift or stranded in the plaintiff's estate. It comes, in short, to this, that a declaration which had not the effect of defeating the obvious object and direction of the law would be valueless, and a declaration intended to produce that effect cannot of course be given. Looking at the provisions of Chapter IX of the Forest Act as a whole, we must hold that no declaration such as that asked for can consistently with the Act be given. There would, moreover, be great difficulty in framing it, as it must be subject to the right of Government, as well as of other persons, as true owner. "It was contended that the Government forests on the east bank of the river were at some distance from the bank. The evidence on the point is not quite consistent; but we must accept in this respect that of the plaintiff's first witness, the Assistant Conservator of Forests, who says that they are just on the bank. It is unnecessary in the view we take to determine the other questions, but we may say that if we had to decide them we should not differ from the lower Court. The appeal is dismissed; but we do not think it is a case in which we ought to allow the successful party his costs."

On an appeal from that judgment,—

Mr. H. H. Asquith, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Appellant, argued that the judgment of the High Court was erroneous, both as to the effect of the proceedings, judgment, and [512] decree of 1882, and as to the powers conferred upon the Government by the Indian Forest Act, VII of 1878. As to the first of these points, it had been decided in the suits of 1882, between the representative of the late Raja's predecessor in estate and the Government, that the julkur rights, identical with those now in dispute, over the water of the Teesta, where it flowed past the Baikantpur estate, were vested in the zemindar. Reference to the proceedings and evidence recorded in that case, when read with the judgment and decree, showed that the decision of the Court in 1882 was meant to include the right to the wood floating, sunk, and stranded in the river over against the land owned by the zemindar of Baikantpur, within the limits specified. The defendant's present objections were barred, as matters already decided, under section 13, Civil Procedure Code. Those objections had been substantially and finally determined in the prior suit, in which the question,—To whom did the julkur belong—was decided, that term being the apt and proper word to express the water profits, which comprehended the right to take such wood. The plaintiff's predecessor had obtained the declaration in 1882, and the object now was to have the title cleared, proof having been given again as to the ownership of the drift and stranded timber. On this redundant evidence there could be no doubt that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration now sought. The claim to the mesne profits should be decreed upon the general right being established, the latter being the principal object. On the second point, the Forest Act of 1878 had not transferred to the Government any right belonging to the zemindar. Its effect and meaning were to impose a duty on the Government to store the drift and stranded timber which their servants were to collect, and to issue a notice of their having done so, in order that the true owner might come forward to claim it. The section 45, on which the defence rely, did not bear out the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondent, argued that the suit of 1882 had not dealt with, nor decided the question now raised in this suit. If the right to drift timber was determined in that suit, it was only the title to such drift timber as was comprised in the mesne profits awarded in that suit, and the term julkur had not the wide application contended for on behalf of the appellant. It was apparent that the floating timber [513] in the river might be the property of any one of a variety of persons, and it was with reference to the rights of those persons that the Forest Act, 1878, was framed. To that Act the present claimant should adhere; for the Government, under that Act, were perfectly right in collecting, and remaining in possession of, that timber until a title to it should be shown. The question now raised was of importance, for it could not be conceded that a riparian proprietor should be considered the owner of all, or any, drift timber that floated past lands from distant places, however far. No julkur would be of this wide significance. The object of the Act was to protect existing rights in the owners of timber; but the claim of the appellant had been made independently of, and consequently in disregard of, the proceedings prescribed by the Forest Act.

It was not disputed that julkur in the former decree included any water-rights that the zemindar could claim under settlement proceedings, concluded between him and the Revenue Department. But he could not make title to drift timber (as to which the work on "Forest Law," by Mr. B. H. Baden-Powell, C.I.E., was referred to) as against the Government in possession, except under the provisions of the Forest Act, 1878.

Counsel for the appellant was not called upon to reply.

Afterwards on February 6th, 1897, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Watson.—Their Lordships think that the various points of controversy which are raised by this appeal will be rendered more intelligible if, before noticing the facts of the case, they refer at once to the provisions of Chapter IX of the Indian Forest Act, No. VII of 1878. The difficulties which have arisen in the disposal of the case appear to them to have been mainly occasioned by a misconception of the true import of these provisions.

Chapter IX of the Act runs upon the same lines as the British Act 9 and 10 Vict. cap. 99, the main object of which was to protect the true owners of ships and goods stranded or cast on shore against depredations by persons having no title, and also against any interference with their rights by landowners having grants from the Crown of wreck of the sea, and of goods jetsam, [514] flotsam lagan or derelict. That object is effected by the appointment of officials whose duty it is to take charge of such wreck or goods, and, after due notice to all who may have an interest, to deliver the same to the true owners, and failing them to the Lord of the Manor who can show a valid title by grant from the Crown.

Chapter IX of the Indian Act, which is entitled "of the Collection of Drift and Stranded Timber" comprises sections 45 to 51, both inclusive. Section 45 provides that (1) all timber found adrift, beached, stranded or sunk, (2) all wood or timber bearing marks which have not been registered under section 41 of the Act, or on which the marks have been obliterated, altered or defaced, and (3) in such areas as the Local Government directs all unmarked wood and timber "shall be deemed to be the property of Government unless and until any person establishes his right and title thereto, as provided in this chapter." The same clause enacts that such timber may be collected by any Forest officer, or other person duly authorised under section 51, and taken by him to such depots as the Forest officer may from time to time notify as depots for the reception of drift timber.

Section 46 makes it the duty of the Forest officer from time to time to give public notice of timber collected under the preceding section, containing a description of the timber, and requiring any person claiming the same to present a written statement of his claim, within not less than two months from the date of notice. Section 47 enacts that when such statement is presented to him the Forest officer may, after making such inquiry as he thinks fit, either reject the claim (in which case he is bound to record his reasons for so doing), or deliver the timber to the claimant. When there are more than one claimant, the Forest officer may either deliver to those of the claimants whom he deems entitled, or may refer them to the Civil Courts, retaining the timber pending the receipt of an order from the Court for its disposal. Any person whose claim has been rejected may, within two months from the date of such rejection, institute a suit to recover possession of the timber claimed by him, but it is expressly provided that no person shall recover any compensation or costs against the Government, or against any Forest officer, "on account of [515] such rejection, or the detention or removal of any timber, or the delivery thereof to any other person under this section." Lastly it is provided by section 46 that no such timber shall be subject to process of any Civil Criminal or Revenue Court, until it has been delivered or a suit brought as therein provided.

Section 18 enacts that if any claimant fails, within due time, to avail himself of the remedies prescribed by section 17, the ownership of the timber shall vest in the Government, or when such timber has been delivered to another person under section 17, in such person, free from all encumbrance. Section 49 enacts that the Government shall not be responsible for any loss or damage which may occur in respect of any timber collected under section 45; and that no Forest officer shall be responsible unless he causes such loss or damage "negligently, maliciously or fraudulently."

In their Lordships' opinion, the Act of 1878 has not the effect of taking away from private owners, and vesting in Government, any rights to drift and stranded timber which they possessed before and at the date of its passing, except in so far as these rights may be affected by their failure to prefer their claims, in the manner and within the time prescribed by the Act. The object of the Act is not confiscation, but regulation; and these rights remain as they were, but subject to the important qualification that they can no longer be exercised by proprietors, at their own hand, and at their own discretion. When the timber is collected by the Government officers, it does not at once become the property of Government, but is held by them for behoof of the person who can show the best title, whether as the true owner who has never abandoned his interest, or as the grantee of a water right to timber which is waste or derelict. Neither of these parties can enforce his claim except against the Government, after it has taken possession through its officers; and if the Government dispute his right, or deliver the timber to an opposing claimant, he can have no redress either against the Government, or against the person to whom delivery have been made, unless he follows the procedure prescribed by the Act. Possession taken by the Government in terms of the Act, and for the purposes of the Act, being lawful and not tortious, can give rise [516] to no claim for mesne profits, even if such a claim were not excluded by section 49.

In March 1882, the legal guardians of Jagadindra Deb Riakat, then owner of pergunnah Baikantpur, and mouzah Kharia, in the collectorate of Julpaiguri, to which the appellant has now succeeded, brought an action against the Secretary of State for India, upon the allegation that the julkur or water-right of the river Teesta within the boundaries of his zemindari belonged to him, and had been possessed by his predecessors from before the time of the Decennial Settlement. The plaint further alleged that his father and predecessor, Jogendra Deb Raikat, had been illegally dispossessed of the said julkur by the Government, and prayed (1) for a decree of his right to the julkur claimed, and (2) for a decree for three years' mesne profits of the same. A written statement was lodged for the defendant, which consisted in a denial of all the material averments of the plaintiff, and made no reference whatever to the Indian Forest Act of 1878. It is clear that at that time the Government, to whom the right would have belonged, in the alleged absence of any title in the plaintiff, was asserting an exclusive claim to the disputed julkur.

Issues were adjusted by the Subordinate Judge of Rungpore, the issues upon the merits of the action being: "Is the julkur in dispute a part of the zemindari of which permanent settlement was made with the ancestors of the plaintiff? And were the ancestors of the plaintiff in adverse possession of the same for sixty years before the date of dispossession? Is the plaintiff entitled to any mesne profits, and to how much?" The learned Judge, after hearing and recording evidence, found for the plaintiff upon all of these issues, and, on the 18th December 1882, gave him a decree for possession of the julkur of the river Teesta within certain specified limits, and also for a sum of mesne profits.

In the foregoing suit, neither the prayer of the plaint nor the final decree of the Subordinate Judge contain any enumeration of the different items which were meant to be comprised in the term julkur. But their Lordships are satisfied that the term is a general one, signifying "water-rights," -a proposition which was not disputed by Counsel for the respondent in this appeal, —and [517] might therefore aptly include the right to drift and stranded timber, as well as the right to fishing, or any other interest of a similar kind in the produce of the river.

In February 1890, the present suit was brought by Fanindra Deb, the proprietor of pergunnah Baikantpur, and mouzah Kharia against the Secretary of State for India in Council, and is now insisted in by his widow and executrix, who is the guardian of his minor son. The plaint narrates the proceedings in the suit of 1882 · and, on the allegation that the local officers of the Government "will not allow the plaintiff to take the drift wood of the said river Teesta, and the wood sunk in the water, and found in the bed of the river, and stranded on the chur," it prays (1) a decree declaring the plaintiff's right to such wood, and (2) a decree for mesne profits. The limits of the julkur right thus claimed are the same with those assigned by the decree of the Subordinate Judge in the previous suit. In his written statement, the defendant averred that, in the said suit, "a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff's predecessor, only for the julkur right (fishery right), i.e., right to fish, with mesne profits. No issue was raised with regard to drift wood, or wood sunk and stranded in the said river, and there was no adjudication of any title to such wood." The defendant also alleged and pleaded that, under section 45, Act VII of 1878, the right to take all kinds of wood found sunk and adrift in the river, or stranded on the bank side, bed or chur, belonged to the defendant alone, and that the defendant had consequently acted in the legal exercise of his own right. Mr. Justice W. MACPHERSON, one of the learned Judges of the High Court, has observed in this case, that "there is certainly no evidence that the timber was taken to a notified depot, and there is no evidence that the public notice prescribed by section 46 was given; two of the witnesses, indeed, say that there were no notices." Their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the observation is well founded. It appears to them the defendant and his officials or advisers laboured under the misapprehension that section 45 transferred to the Government and divested private owners of the right of property in drift and stranded timber, which they previously possessed. The provisions of the Act do not affect the right of the Government to take possession of [518] and dispose of drift or stranded timber of which it is the undisputed owner; but it is clear, beyond a doubt, that under these provisions the Government has no title given it to collect timber which may possibly be claimed either by the true owner, or by a riparian proprietor having a julkur right, except upon the condition of its storing such timber, and of giving the notices required by the Act. In cases where it neglects to follow that procedure, and treats the timber as its own property, the Government, in the event of its being found that the property does not belong to it, is in no better position than any other trespasser.

The pleadings of the parties make it abundantly clear that the only substantial controversy betwixt them, in the present case, related to the legal import of the decree which had been obtained by the appellant's ancestors in the suit of 1882. So far as it goes, that decree, being inter eosdem, is res judicata, and binding upon both parties to this litigation.

The officiating additional Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs. He held that the decree in the previous suit established beyond question the proprietary right of the plaintiff's predecessor in that part of the river Teesta which is referred to in the plaint; but that no question arose in that suit, or was therein decided, as to the title to collect the wood and timber found adrift within its limits. He was of opinion that, but for the provisions of Act VII of 1878, the plaintiff would be entitled to all drift wood and timber; but he held that under the provisions of section 45 such wood and timber are to be deemed the property of Government until any person establishes his right thereto, as provided in Chapter IX: and that to declare the plaintiff's title as prayed would be directly to contravene the provisions of the Act. The learned Judge had obviously failed to apprehend that the Government had not collected the timber under the Act, and had given no notice of its having done so with the view of delivery being made to the true owner; but had taken possession, in the assertion of its own exclusive right, and was impeaching the plaintiff's julkur title, which the learned Judge held, apart from the provisions of the Act, to be unquestionable.

The case was carried to the High Court at Fort William, who [519] dismissed the appeal. The Court, consisting of NORRIS and MACPHERSON, JJ., were of opinion that, inasmuch as the right to drift timber was not expressly claimed in the suit of 1882, or referred to in the pleadings, issues or judgment, the right was not conferred by the decree which does not make express mention of it. Mr. Justice MACPHERSON, who delivered the opinion of the Court, said: "The Government is empowered to collect and hold the timber as presumptive owner until some person makes good his right to it. Primâ facie its title as true owner is as good as that of the plaintiff; the latter would still have to prove his ownership." In one sense these statements may be correct, but they are imperfect. They omit all notice of the fact that the Government's statutory title to collect is coupled with the duty of giving notice of what it has collected to the public, in order that the true owner of the timber, whether he be the person from whom it has escaped, or a riparian proprietor, may have the opportunity of reclaiming his property in the manner prescribed by the Act, and that such title is made dependent upon the performance of that duty. The true owner can have no such opportunity in cases where the Government takes possession of timber, as in its own absolute right, and neither conveys it to a depôt, nor gives notice to the public. Their Lordships are of opinion that, when such a case does occur, there is no provision in the Act of 1878 which can hinder the true owner from having his remedy, by a direct action, against the Government. The so-called presumptive ownership of the Government does not, in their opinion, exist, save in those cases where the Government collects and holds for the true owner in the first instance, and subject to the statutory duty of giving him due notice.

Their Lordships would, if it were necessary, be disposed to hold that the decree pronounced in the suit of 1882 must, primâ facie, and in the absence of anything calculated to limit its effect, be held to include every right and interest, which is in the nature of a water-right. That it was meant to embrace and did embrace the right to drift and stranded timber is, in their opinion, clearly shown by an examination of the record; and they cannot avoid the observation, that, in the Court below, sufficient attention has not been paid to the rule that, in cases where a final decree is couched in general terms, the extent to which it ought to be [520] regarded as res judicata can only be determined by ascertaining what were the real matters of controversy in the cause. All the witnesses for the plaintiff in the suit of 1882 speak to the possession of drift wood by him and his predecessors; and, with two exceptions, all of them were cross-examined on that point by the defendant. Again, in his judgment, the Subordinate Judge, after finding for the plaintiff upon the issue with respect to mesne profits, goes on to say: "It appears from the written statement of the defendant, and from No. 72, cash book of the Forest Department, and No. 73, abstract account of revenue received on account of drift timber from the Teesta river, that the mesne profits for the three years preceding suit have been Rs. 7,181-13-6." Accordingly, for that sum the learned Judge gave a decree against the defendant; and, in the opinion of their Lordships, there could hardly be more satisfactory and intrinsic evidence, that the question of right to drift and stranded timber was a matter in controversy before him, and that he meant to include that right in the julkur which he decreed. Their Lordships agree with the learned Judges of the High Court in thinking that such extrinsic evidence as correspondence and orders by officers of the Government, of dates subsequent to the decree, cannot be received as aids to its construction.

Their Lordships, for these reasons, are of opinion that the appellant is entitled to a decree affirming that the right of the minor to drift and stranded timber is included in the decree obtained by his predecessor, that being the only relief for which her Counsel insisted. An order in these terms will have the effect of ousting the claim of the Government to take possession of such timer, within the limits specified in the decree, upon the footing that it has an absolute right of property therein; and will not hinder the Government from collecting and storing the timber, if it thinks fit, in terms of the Act, for behoof of the appellant, or of any other person who can show a better title.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the judgments appealed from; to find and declare that the right to drift and stranded timber is included in the julkur which was decreed to the predecessor of the minor by the Subordinate Judge of Rungpore, on the 18th December 1882, and to find the appellant [521] entitled to her costs in both Courts below. The respondent must pay to the appellant her costs of this appeal.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 22, clause (1)—Effect of Purchase, by Talukdar, of raiyats' holding.

If a talukdar, at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by him against a raiyat, purchase the raiyat's interest, such purchase does not extinguish the holding, but merely divests it of the right of occupancy (if any) attached to it.

Jawadal Huq v. Ram Das Saha (ante, p 143) followed.

THE owners of a certain putni taluk obtained a decree for rent against a raiyat. In execution of that decree they brought to sale his raiyati holding and purchased it themselves. They then sold it to the plaintiffs, the rent payable being the same as the previous holder had paid. Prior to the sale of the holding the defendant had purchased from the defaulting tenant a portion of his holding; and after the purchase by the plaintiff, he opposed the plaintiff in getting possession of the land.

The plaintiff thereupon instituted a suit for possession. The Munsif held that the kobala under which the plaintiff claimed could be treated at any rate as a lease, and passed a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge this decree was set aside, on the ground that the plaintiff acquired nothing by his purchase from the talukdars, there being nothing to transfer. The plaintiff appealed.

[522] Babu Gobindo Chunder Das, for the appellant, after stating the facts, was stopped by the Court calling upon the respondent's pleader.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 556 of 1894, against the decision of Babu Gopal Chandra Bose, Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 3rd March 1894, reversing a decision of Babu Romesh Chunder Sen, Sudder Munsif of Comillah, dated the 24th February 1893.

Babu Akhoy Coomar Bannerjee for the respondents.—After the purchase by the landlords the right of occupancy ceased to exist. [MACPHERSON, J.—There is nothing to prevent the landlords from buying up the right of occupancy; and, if they do, the holding remains in abeyance. They can sell that if they choose.] It is the vendee who is now suing for ejectment. He must prove such a title as will enable him to eject the defendant. The right intended to be sold was the right of occupancy, which did not exist. It is not as if they had created a new tenancy with the right of occupancy; there was no such intention.

The judgment of the Court (Macpherson and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

The Lower Appellate Court is, in our opinion, wrong in the view which it has taken of the plaintiff's position. The facts are shortly these: There was a certain putni taluk subject to which there was a raiyati holding held by one Sameer. The talukdars obtained a decree against him for arrears of rent, brought the holding to sale, and purchased it themselves. After their purchase they sold it to the plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 230, the rent payable being the rent which had been paid by the previous holder.

The defendants had, prior to the sale in execution of the rent decree, purchased a portion of the holding from the defaulting tenant, and they oppose the plaintiff in getting possession of the land.

The plaintiff asks that possession may be given to him on the strength of his purchase of the raiyati holding.

The Lower Appellate Court holds that what was sold at the execution sale was the occupancy right; that that right and the holding were extinguished when the landlords purchased; that, in point of fact, they purchased nothing, and that consequently the plaintiff took nothing by his purchase from them.

That, we think, is an erroneous view of the position of the parties. Assuming that Sameer had a right of occupancy in the land, there is nothing in the law which prevented the landlords [523] from purchasing an occupancy holding. What the law does say is that if the landlords do, as landlords, purchase such a holding, the right of occupancy shall cease to exist. In the case of Jawadul Huq v. Ram Das Saha (ante, p. 143) decided a few days ago by a Division Bench of this Court under section 15 of the Letters Patent, it was held, with reference to the second clause of section 22, that if one of several co-sharers purchase an occupancy holding, the purchase did not put an end to the holding, but that the holding remained divested of the right of occupancy. In the same way, under clause 1 of section 22, we think that the effect of a purchase of an entire occupancy holding by the landlords is not necessarily to put an end to the holding but to divest it in their hands of the right of occupancy, if any, which is attached to it. The defendants in the present case stand in no higher position than the defaulting tenant: they were bound by the sale, and have no existing right, and it is conceded that they could not resist the landlords in taking possession of the land. It seems to us unnecessary to consider the exact nature of the right which the plaintiff acquired by his purchase. That is a matter to be decided between him and his vendors. If his vendors acquired a right as against the defendants to this holding and to khas possession of it, there is nothing to prevent their giving the holding to the plaintiff and conferring on him the right to hold it as their tenants. We know of no law which prevents landlords from purchasing a holding and disposing of it. It does not seem to make very much difference whether they being the landlords dispose of the old holding under its old name, or whether they dispose of it as a holding newly created. We think the Munsif was right in holding that the effect of the kobala was to create the relationship of landlord and tenant as between the talukdars and the plaintiffs. It gives the plaintiff a right to the possession of the holding as their tenant and fixes the amount of rent payable for it. That being so, the appellant is entitled to eject the defendants, who have no right at all.

In this view of the case, the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the decree of the first Court restored. The appellant will get his costs in both the Courts.

Jurisdiction of Civil Court Right of suit - Suit for declaration of right to carry religious emblems in a procession and for damages.

A suit for declaration of right to carry religious emblems in a procession through the streets of a village, and for damages for preventing the plaintiff from doing so, lies in the Civil Court

In a case in which a Mahomedan of the Shia sect, claiming to be a part-owner of a village, was prevented by a number of the rival sect of Sunnis from introducing the emblems of a standard and flags and a massak pierced by an arrow, in the procession of tazias during the Mohurrum, it was held that a suit of this description would lie, either on the footing that the roads were roads of which the public had the use, or on the footing that the plaintiff had a right as one of the sharers in the village.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court. The plaintiff obtained a decree in the lower Court, declaring his right to carry or cause to be carried the Alam, a standard to which is attached a pharhara, a massak (a leather bag for carrying water) pierced with an arrow, through the lanes and pathways of mouzah Pali, awarding damages, and ordering the defendants not to interfere with the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf, Moulvie Syed Shumsul Huda, Moulvie Mahomed Ishfak, Moulvie Syed Mahomed Tahir, Moulvie Mahomed Mustafa Khan and Moulvie Mahomed Habibullah for the Appellants.

*Appeal from Original Decree No. 362 of 1894, against the decree of Babu Brijmohun Pershad, Subordinate Judge of Gya, dated the 27th of August 1894.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Babu Saligram Singh and Babu Mohabir Sahay for the Respondents.

Although this appeal at first sight appeared somewhat formidable, and we were led to expect that very serious questions, having an important effect upon the religious rights of the Mahomedan community, had to be considered in it, yet soon after the [525] opening of the appeal by the learned Moulvie who appeared for the appellants had commenced, it became abundantly apparent that there was no substance at all in the appeal.

This suit owes its origin to an unfortunate dispute between the Shea and Sunni inhabitants of a village called Pali in the district of Gya, and it is much to be regretted that the good sense of the members of the Mahomedan community in that village did not prevent, not only the expenditure of the money which has been thrown away in this litigation, but also the expression of the high and intemperate feeling which was shewn in this matter. It seems that the plaintiffs and the defendants are sharers in the village. The plaintiff is a Shea, and desired at the Mohurrum to take through the streets or lanes of this village a procession, which, besides including tazias which are admittedly innocuous, was to include a standard and flags and a massak pierced by an arrow. For the first time apparently he contemplated adding these emblems of his own branch of the Mahomedan religion to the procession. This was resented by some of the Sunni inhabitants of the village, and threats were offered of violence in case the plaintiff carried out this contemplated procession. Certain communications were made by the defendants to the officers of the police, and the procession was stopped in that particular year. The plaintiff then, in order to assert his rights, brought this suit in the Civil Court. The defence was shortly that a suit of this kind will not lie, and then by evidence it was sought to make out that emblems of the description that the plaintiff sought to have carried in his procession would cause very great and bitter offence to the Sunni members of the community in that village.

It is quite clear to us that the Subordinate Judge is right in holding that a suit of this description will lie either on the footing that the roads were roads of which the public had the use, or on the footing that the plaintiff had a right as one of the sharers in this village. Every person who uses a highway for a legitimate purpose, that is to say, for the purpose of walking along it alone, or even as a member of a procession which is allowed by law, and which is inoffensive to the community, is entitled to go along that highway without any impediment; and the man who obstructs him in the use which the law gives him [526] of that highway may be liable to have a civil suit brought against him. The cases in which it is laid down that a private right of action does not lie in respect of an offence against the public relating to a highway, unless special damage is proved, can have no application to the present case, for two reasons: in the first place, because here the plaintiff's private right was infringed; and, secondly, because there was actual damage resulting to him from his being prevented from using this highway in the manner permitted him by law. He is not suing here simply as a member of the public which has been aggrieved, but as a private individual who has himself suffered a private and individual wrong. A number of cases have been mentioned by the Subordinate Judge, and he has, we think, come to a right conclusion that the suit will lie.

There is practically little else in the case. The story why these emblems are carried has been related; and, although to some extent, they commemorate events, the memory of which may be calculated to create antagonism between these two sects of the Mahomedan religion, yet, having regard to the evidence in the case, it is quite clear that no reasonable member of the Sunni sect could be offended by emblems of this kind.

The learned Moulvie, who argued the case before us for the appellant, with his usual fairness pointed out evidence which had been given on the Shea side of the controversy, that is, on the plaintiff's side, by an independent Sunni, namely, Mahomed Ehya, whose position is such that the learned Vakil for the appellant, not only did not venture to attack him, but used words expressive of the high position he occupied in the Mahomedan community. This gentleman is a Sunni. He is apparently a gentleman of some position. He is a pleader and an Honorary Magistrate of Patna. He is also a Superintendent of the Jama Masjid in the Madarsa Mahalla of Patna. Therefore, having regard to his position as a lawyer, he is a person on whose evidence we might fairly rely, and having regard to his position as a Superintendent of the Jama Masjid, he is a person who might be expected to be acquainted with the rules and customs, not only of his own co-religionists but also of those belonging to the Shea sect. After referring to the way in which these emblems are carried about he [527] says: "The taking out of the Alam is no contempt of the Sunni religion." There is, we are told, no independent evidence of any Sunni of any position which shows that the Sunni community would be in any way offended by a procession of this kind. That being so it is perfectly clear that a procession of the description contemplated by the plaintiff is inoffensive to the Sunni community, and is one which the plaintiff is entitled to inaugurate in accordance with law. It is very commendable, we may here notice, that, instead of doing as many others might have done under similar circumstances, that is taking the law into his own hands, the plaintiff resorted to a Court of Justice which would be able to determine a matter of this kind free from the heat of any religious feeling. It is not necessary for us to say more on this subject.

It is complained that the plaintiff ought not to have had given to him such a large sum as costs. The plaintiff was compelled to go into Court. The matter of costs is a matter within the discretion of the Court, and we see no reason to interfere with what the lower Court has awarded to the plaintiff.

There are cross-objections by the respondent as regards damages. The Court below has awarded Rs. 50 as nominal damages. The plaintiff complains that he ought to have got more. But having regard to all the circumstances, and to the fact that this was the first occasion that the right was claimed, and that the object of the suit was to enforce that right and clear away any objection which might be raised with regard to a procession of this kind, we think that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in giving nominal damages only.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs, and the cross-objections disallowed.

complainant, and applied for the transfer of the case to the Magistrate of the Northern Division on the ground that the complainant had been informed that the accused was a client of, and personally known to, the Honorary Magistrate.

[529] On the Magistrate declining to accede to this request, the attorney applied for a postponement upon the ground that the attorney who had been instructed in the case could not attend, and that the complainant's witnesses had left the Court. This application was opposed by the Counsel for the accused, and the Magistrate ordered the case to be proceeded with. The attorney appearing for the complainant stated that he was not acquainted with the facts of the case, and no evidence being offered for the prosecution, the summons was dismissed and the accused discharged. Subsequently, on 5th January 1897, the complainant, through another attorney, verbally applied to the Magistrate of the Northern Division on the same facts and materials that were before Mr. Farr, the Honorary Magistrate, for the issue of a fresh summons in the same case, putting in a charge under section 420 of the Penal Code in place of section 417. This application was granted. The accused appeared and contended that the Magistrate had no authority in law to issue fresh process in the case, he having been once discharged by another competent Magistrate. The Magistrate, being of a contrary opinion, on 19th January allowed the matter to stand over to enable the accused to move the High Court against this order. A rule was thereupon issued by the High Court upon the complainant to show cause why the order of the Magistrate granting process against him should not be set aside, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make the order.

Mr. P. L. Roy for the complainant, Dwarka Dass Agurwallah.—The complaint in this case is that the petitioner under a misrepresentation that he was of age induced us to lend him money. He knew he was not, because only a few months before he had had a guardian appointed for him. On 29th August the attorney for the complainant laid a complaint before the Presidency Magistrate of the Northern Division, stating the facts of the case. After several adjournments the case was transferred to the Honorary Magistrate Mr. Farr, who discharged the summons. The complainant then asked the Presidency Magistrate to issue a fresh summons, which, it is submitted, he had power to do. The subsequent proceedings in this case came before the same Magistrate, and on a petition for a transfer the Presidency Magistrate [530] recorded an order that, if Mr. Farr did not object, the case should be retransferred to him. We thus have the order of the Honorary Magistrate dismissing the summons and the order of the Presidency Magistrate granting a fresh summons. It is submitted that the Presidency Magistrate had power to revive the case. Opoorba Kumar Sett v. Probod Kumary Dassi (1 Cal., W. N., 49).

Mr Hyde (Mr. Watkins with him) for the petitioner.—The Magistrate had no power to revive the summons. The case has been disposed of by a competent Magistrate, and there is, therefore no power left for another magistrate to issue a fresh summons. The case of Opoorba Kumar Sett v. Probod Kumary Dassi is no authority. Under section 435 of the Criminal Precedure Code this Court has power to call for the proceedings of any Court. Queen-Empress v. Donnelly (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 405). That case was under the Code of 1892, but the revision powers are the same. Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chundra Bhuttacharjee (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 983). There is no allegation of any fresh materials. What the Magistrate did was merely to issue a fresh summons on the same materials, but under a different section. He had no jurisdiction to do so.

The facts, out of which the questions before us have arisen, are shortly these : –

A complaint was instituted before the Presidency Magistrate of the Northern Division of the Town of Calcutta against the petitioner for cheating under section 417 of the Penal Code. The case was transferred for trial to an Honorary Presidency Magistrate, Mr. Farr. After several postponements, the case was taken up on the 19th December last. The complainant, who was then present in Court, stated that his attorney was not there, and that he was not in a position to proceed with the case, and applied for a postponement. The Magistrate adjourned the case for half an hour to enable the complainant to bring his attorney or instruct somebody else. When the case was afterwards called on, an attorney appeared for the complainant, and applied for the transfer of the case to the Northern [531] Division Magistrate on the ground that the complainant had been informed that the accused was a client of, and personally known to, the Magistrate (Mr. Farr). The Magistrate, for reasons given by him, declined to accede to this request. Thereupon, the attorney again applied for postponement of the case upon the ground that the attorney, who had been duly instructed in the case, could not attend, and that the complainant's witnesses had left Court upon an assurance given by a person, who was managing the case of the accused, that he would agree to the case standing over. This application was opposed by the Counsel for the accused, who represented (and the representation was found to be true) that there were at least two witnesses for the prosecution present in Court. The Magistrate then ordered the case to be proceeded with. The attorney of the complainant stated that he was not acquainted with the facts of the case, and, no evidence being offered for the prosecution, the Magistrate dismissed the summons and discharged the accused.

Subsequently, on the 5th January last, the complainant, through another attorney verbally applied to the Magistrate of the Northern Division, apparently upon the same facts and materials that were before Mr. Farr, for the issue of a fresh summons in the same case, putting in simply what is described as a " charge " under section 420 in place of section 417 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate granted this application. Upon a summons being then served on the accused, he appeared and contended that the Magistrate had no authority in law to issue fresh process in the case, he having been once discharged by another competent Magistrate. The Magistrate, however, on the 19th January last, was of a contrary opinion, but he allowed the matter to stand over for a time to enable the accused to move this Court against his order. The accused accordingly applied to us and obtained a rule upon the complainant to shew cause why the said order of the Magistrate granting process against him should not be set aside, upon the ground that he had no jurisdiction to do so.

The order of discharge made by Mr. Farr does not, certainly, operate as an acquittal, the case being a warrant case. And it may well be gathered from the terms of section 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that it is no bar to the retrial of any person [532] so discharged. But then the question is whether the stipendiary Magistrate of the Northern Division had the authority to sit, as it were, on appeal from the order of the Honorary Magistrate, and direct the issue of a process, notwithstanding that upon consideration of the same materials Mr. Farr, a Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction, held that the summons should be dismissed and the accused discharged.

We cannot discover anything in the Code giving a stipendiary Presidency Magistrate or any other magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction such an authority. Under section 439 (read with section 423), and possibly also under the charter of this Court, it is open to this Court to set aside the order of Mr. Farr and direct a retrial or further inquiry. And that apparently is the only mode indicated in the Code by which in a case like this an order of discharge may be interfered with.

A somewhat similar question arose in a case of dismissal of a complaint under section 203 before another Divisional Bench of this Court in the case of Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chundra Bhuttacharjee (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 983); and it was held, among other matters, that the practice of the Courts has always been to debar such fresh proceedings, and BANERJEE, J., observed "that it would be anomalous if, notwithstanding the dismissal of a complaint, and the discharge of an accused person, after an elaborate inquiry, by one magistrate. another magistrate may, merely upon a fresh complaint being filed, take proceedings against the accused again for the same offence, and on the same evidence, though he has no authority as a Court of Appeal or Revision to examine the correctness of the previous order made in the case." These remarks well fit in here, though the present case is a warrant case, in which the accused was discharged under section 253.

The view that we have just expressed may at first sight seem somewhat opposed to that adopted by the Madras High Court in the case of Virankutti v. Chiyamu (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 557); but upon examination of the facts of that case, and the true ground upon which the judgment proceeded, it will be found that our view does not at all clash with the decision in that case.

[533] As to the case of Opoorba Kumar Sett v. Probod Koomary Dass (1 Cal. W. N., 49), to which our attention has been drawn, it will be observed that the application to revive the proceedings was presented to, and the order for issue of fresh process made by, the same Magistrate who had discharged the accused

We are not called upon here to determine whether the order of discharge made by Mr. Farr was a proper one. All that we are at present concerned with is, whether the Magistrate of the Northern Division was competent to order the revival of proceedings and issue a fresh process against the accused after the order of discharge by another magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction in precisely the same case, as we understand this to be. We are of opinion that he was not so competent.

Upon this ground we set aside the order complained against and direct that the rule be made absolute.

C. E. G. Rule made absolute.

Hundi—Money advanced on fraudulent misrepresentation Suit before due date of hundi.

The defendants obtained advances of money on hundis by making untrue representations, knowing them to be untrue, and knowing that without them they could not have got the money. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to rescind the contract and claim immediate repayment before the due date of the hundis.

There is no reason why the principle that fraud vitiates all agreements should not be applied to debts evidenced by hundis, promissory notes, or other negotiable instruments, if the facts show that the loans were contracted on the faith of fraudulent misrepresentations made by a debtor to a creditor

THE facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Mr. Garth and Mr. Chaudhuri appeared for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Avetoom appeared for the Defendants.

Sale, J.—This is a suit by the plaintiffs who carry on business under the name of Sanker Lall Augurwallah to recover Rs. 5,000 [534] with interest alleged to have been advanced as a loan to the defendants in their firm of Asaram Joy Lall. In respect of this loan two hundis were drawn and accepted by the defendant Joy Lall in the name of his firm Asaram Joy Lall and delivered to the plaintiffs; the hundis, the dates of which are, respectively, 6th and 10th November 1896, were payable after 61 days from their respective dates. The defendants' business was closed on the 17th November and the plaintiffs, alleging that the loans had been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentations, instituted this suit before the due date of the hundis, the plaint being filed on the 27th November 1896.

In the plaint the circumstances are set out under which the advance of the money was made to the defendants; and after stating that in respect of these advances the hundis were drawn and accepted by Joy Lall in favour of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs in the 5th paragraph allege as follows:—

"That under the circumstances the plaintiffs charge the defendants with having fraudulently obtained the said sums from the plaintiffs, intending at the time they received the said sums not to repay the same, and the plaintiffs are advised and submit that the said sum so advanced is at once realisable."

It cannot, I think, be doubted that if the evidence is sufficient to show that the monies in respect of which the hundis were given were obtained by the defendants on representations made by them which were false in fact, but on the faith of which the plaintiffs were induced to advance the monies, it would follow that the plaintiffs would be entitled to rescind the contracts embodied in the two hundis and to claim immediate repayment of the amount of the advances.

The question is whether the evidence is sufficient to establish such a case of fraudulent misrepresentation as would entitle the plaintiffs to rescind the arrangement under which the hundis were executed and to sue to recover the amount of the advances before the due dates of the hundis.

It has been said that fraud vitiates all agreements, and I see no reason why the same principle should not be applied to debts evidenced by hundis, promissory notes, or other negotiable instru-[535]ments, if the facts show that the loans were contracted on the faith of fraudulent misrepresentations made by the debtor to a creditor.

The evidence of Preolall, who is the managing gomasta of the plaintiffs in Calcutta, shows this: There had been previous dealings between the plaintiffs' firm and Asaram Joy Lall in respect of which Preolall came to be acquainted with Joy Lall and Kaliprosad. In November 1896, that is Kartick, Sudi 1953, the defendants' firm of Asaram Joy Lall were indebted to the plaintiffs, and being so indebted, Preolall was requested by both Joy Lall and Kaliprosad to make further advances to them in their firm of Asaram Joy Lall. This, according to the evidence of Preolall, he was indisposed to do, and said to them that they were already indebted and had not observed promptitude in repayment of previous loans.

The defendants, however, pressed Preolall, and represented to him that the business carried on in Calcutta, as also the business carried on in Agra under the name of Asaram Kaliprosad, were both progressing favourably, and assured him that the money would in due course be faithfully paid. Preolall says that relying on this statement as to the satisfactory state of the defendants' businesses, he was induced to make the further advances which are the subject-matter of this suit.

Comment has been made on the circumstance that the representation, so far as the condition of the defendants' business was concerned, was not put forward by the witness, Preolall, until his attention was called to it by a question framed specially for that purpose, and of course that is a circumstance which would have to be taken into account, and would, as a matter of fact, have considerable weight if there was any reliable evidence to contradict it. It is necessary to see who it is that has been called to contradict Preolall. The only witness called for this purpose is the defendant Kaliprosad, and what is his evidence? He says in the first case that he never accompanied his father when these loans were obtained; that he had nothing to do with the firm of Asaram Joy Lall, that his father never spoke to him about the business at all, and that he knew nothing of its prospects or condition, and that the only partners in the firm were his father and uncle, Hidaram.

[536] Neither Joy Lall nor Hidaram have been called, and they are the only persons, according to Kaliprosad's account, who could have told us of the financial state of the firm at that time. So far as the issue as to partnership is concerned it was agreed between the parties that the evidence given in the case of Nirbaina v. Joy Lall should be taken as evidence in this case, and there is no doubt that the alleged partnership is a relevant fact in this case, because if it is the fact that Kaliprosad was a partner with his father Joy Lall then it affords strong corroboration of Preolall's evidence, and Kaliprosad's evidence, on the other hand, must be false in many respects. I have already come to the conclusion that Kaliprosad and Joy Lall were partners in this firm, and I have no hesitation in accepting the evidence of Preolall, in preference to that of Kaliprosad, and in finding that it is true that the defendant Kaliprosad did as a matter of fact on the occasions of the advances made by Preolall accompany his father, and that he did, as Preolall says, join with his father in representing that the firm of Asaram Joy Lall was in a satisfactory condition. Preolall says that but for those representations he would never have made these advances, and I see no reason to doubt that.

The only conclusion I can draw from Joy Lall's absence from the witness-box is that he must have known that at the time he and Kaliprosad made those representations to Preolall their business was in an unsatisfactory condition, and that his object in keeping out of the box was to conceal that fact.

If then the defendants did, as I hold they did, obtain these advances on untrue representations knowing them to be untrue, and knowing that without them they could not have got the money, I think the plaintiffs were entitled, on stoppage of the defendants' business, at once to rescind the contracts evidenced by the hundis and to sue for the amounts advanced to the defendants.

In the result there must be a decree against both the defendants for the full amount claimed with costs on scale 2.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 161, 171- Payment by person interested to prevent sale--Mortgage—Incumbrance.

A mortgage created by the operation of section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of that Act, and is not liable to be annulled as such at the instance of a purchaser of a holding at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent.

THE facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 885 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Rajendra Kumar Bose, Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, dated the 16th of February 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Kanti Chandra Bhaduri, Munsif of Garbetta, dated the 11th of September 1894.

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhry and Babu Bidhu Bhusan Ganguli for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

The question raised by this appeal is whether a mortgage created by the operation of section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is an incumbrance within the meaning of chapter XIV of that Act, and as such liable to be avoided by the purchaser of a holding at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent.

The facts found by the Lower Appellate Court are as follows: Subordinate to a certain putni tenure there were two holdings, one of which was in the occupation of a person named Sumitra, and the other in that of Sundari and Nityamoyi.

On the 11th Pous 1296 the husband of Matungini, the second defendant in the present suit, purchased both these holdings from the tenants.

Afterwads in the year 1891 the putnidars instituted two suits [538] for arrears of rent for the years 1295 to 1298, one against Sumitra and the other against Sundari and Nityamoyi. Matungini intervened in both suits as purchaser, and ultimately a compromise was arrived at between her, the putnidars, and the sons of Sundari and Nityamoyi, under which Matungini confessed judgment for the rent claimed in the suits, and it was agreed that the sons of Sundari and Nityamoyi should hold both the holdings as raiyats under her.

On the 2nd Assin 1299 Matungini granted a dur-mokurari lease of Sumitra's holding to Pasupati, the first defendant in the present suit; and shortly afterwards pending proceedings in execution taken by the putnidars in the suits already mentioned, she sold her mokurari mourasi interest to the third defendant in the present suit, Srimanta Lal Bera, he undertaking to satisfy the decrees out of the purchase money. This, however, was not done, and Pasupati then, in order to save the holdings from sale, paid the amount of both the decrees into Court. In the year 1892 the rent of the holdings being again in arrear the putnidars brought a suit against Srimanta Lal Bera for its recovery. They obtained a decree, in execution of which the holdings were brought to sale and purchased by Kasinath, the fourth defendant in the present suit. In 1893 Pasupati sued Matungini for recovery of the money paid by him into Court as mentioned above. He obtained a decree against her for the amount claimed, together with a declaration that, by virtue of section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he was entitled as mortgagee to bring the holdings to sale. This he proceeded to do; whereupon Kasinath put in a claim to the property, but, having failed in that, he procured the issue of notices under section 167 of the Tenancy Act, and then sold his interest in the holdings to the plaintiff. Under these circumstances the present suit has been brought for avoidance of Pasupati's mortgage and the dur-mokurari lease. The Court of First Instance dismissed the suit, but its decree was reversed in appeal by the Subordinate Judge who held both the mortgage and dur-mokurari to be voidable at the instance of the plaintiff as the successor in interest of Kasinath the purchaser of Srimanta's mokurari.

In appeal before us it was argued that, in so far at least as the mortgage is concerned, the decision of the Subordinate Judge [539] is wrong, inasmuch as a mortgage created by the operation of section 171 of the Tenancy Act cannot be regarded as an incumbrance in the sense in which the term is used in chapter XIV of the Act. We think that this contention is correct. The term "incumbrance" is defined for the purposes of chapter XIV by section 161 of the Act, and means, according to that section, "any lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding or in limitation of his own interest therein and not being a protected interest." In order to satisfy this definition, it is clear that, whatever the nature of the particular incumbrance may be, it must be the creation of the tenant, but in the case now before us the mortgage interest claimed by Pasupati was not created by the tenant, but arose independently of him by the operation of section 171 of the Act. We think, therefore, that it is not an incumbrance within the meaning of Chapter XIV, and consequently that it is not an incumbrance which may be annulled at the instance of a purchaser under the provisions of that chapter.

We think, however—and in this we agree with the Subordinate Judge—that the effect of the payment made by Pasupati must be limited to the holding of Sumitra to which his dur-mokurari interest was subordinate. The sale of the holding of Sundari and Nityamoyi would not have affected his position.

The appeal will accordingly be decreed in part, and the decree of the Lower Appellate Court be modified to this extent, that the suit, in so far as it seeks the avoidance of the mortgage held by Pasupati over the holding of Sumitra, will be dismissed. In other respects the decree will stand. We make no order as to costs.

Misjoinder of Causes of Action—Joinder of several plaintiffs in respect of separate causes of Action—Contribution—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 578—Irregularity affecting merits.

The plaintiffs, who were husband and wife, brought a suit to recover a certain sum of money, part of which was alleged to have been paid by plaintiff No. 1, who was a co-sharer with the defendants in two putnis, to save the putnis from being sold for arrears of rent; and the remainder by plaintiff No. 2, who alleged that she had a subordinate miras taluk under the two putnis granted to her by plaintiff No. 1, and that the sale would have resulted in the cancellation of her miras taluk. In second appeal it was contended by the respondents, in support of the decree made by the Court below dismissing the claim of plaintiff No. 2, that the claim was liable to dismissal by reason of its involving the misjoinder of plaintiffs with different causes of action. This objection had been raised in the written statement, and the Court was asked to raise an issue on the point. In answer to this contention it was urged by the appellants that, as the respondents went to trial upon the merits, it was not open to them to urge any objection like this to the frame of the suit on second appeal. Held, that the suit was bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs as the suit of plaintiff No. 2 ought properly to have been brought against all the holders of the putnis, including plaintiff No. 1, and not merely against the defendants in the suit.

Held, further, that it was open to the respondents to raise the objection as to misjoinder in second appeal.

The facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

Babu Srinath Das, Babu Mohini Mohan Roy, Babu Baikant Nath Das, and Babu Grish Chandra Chowdhry, for the respondents.

[541] The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the two plaintiffs (appellants) who are husband and wife, to recover a certain sum of money, part of which is said to have been paid by plaintiff No. 1, who is a co-sharer with the defendants in two putnis, to save the putnis from being sold for arrears of rent, and the remainder is alleged to have been paid by plaintiff No. 2, who says that she has a subordinate miras taluk under the two putnis, granted to her by plaintiff No. 1, and that she paid the sums to prevent the sale of the putnis for arrears of rent, as the sale of the putnis for arrears of rent would have resulted in the cancellation of her miras taluk.

The defence, so far as it is necessary to consider it for the purposes of this appeal, was to this effect, that the frame of the suit is bad for misjoinder of the two plaintiffs, whose causes of action were different; that the miras taluk claimed by plaintiff No. 2 had no real existence; that it was created by the plaintiff No. 1 only with a view to prevent the decree in a partition suit that was then pending from being operative in transferring the possession of certain mouzahs included in the putni from plaintiff No. 1; that plaintiff No. 2 had not paid any money to save the putnis from sale; and that the amounts claimed against certain of the defendants, viz., defendants 1 to 4, were larger than what they were liable for.

The parties went to trial on several issues of which it is important to notice the first, second, and fifth, which run as follows : —

(1) " Is the plaintiff No. 2 entitled to any of the properties in dispute, and can she maintain this suit."

(2) " Is the suit multifarious, and, as such, liable to dismissal."

(5) " Are the plaintiffs entitled to recover contribution. If so, from which of the defendants, and to what extent." * * *

The learned Subordinate Judge decided the first issue against plaintiff No. 2, holding that the miras taluk set up by her had no real existence, and that it had been created merely to prevent the decree in the partition suit that was then pending from being [542] operative against her husband : and he accordingly held that the plaintiff No. 2 had no cause of action.

Upon the second issue he observed that the finding of fact arrived at in the adjudication of the first issue rendered it unnecessary to pronounce any opinion as to the second issue, and that it would have simplified matters if plaintiff No. 1 had not brought this suit jointly with his wife, who, according to his own showing, was a subordinate tenure-holder and not a co-sharer of the putni taluks. On the fifth issue, he apportioned the liability of the several defendants so far as the claim of the first plaintiff was concerned in a certain way. And he then made a decree in favour of the plaintiff No. 1 alone in respect of the greater portion of the amount which he is said to have paid.

Against this decree the present appeal has been preferred by plaintiffs 1 and 2 jointly. There are also objections under section 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure on behalf of defendants 1 to 4.

We shall consider the appeal of the plaintiffs first, and then the objections of the respondents 1 to 4.

In their appeal the plaintiffs urge that the Court below was wrong in dismissing the claim of the plaintiff No. 2 on the ground that the miras taluk set up by her is unreal and invalid; and that the evidence upon the question is altogether one-sided, and goes to show that, at any rate, at the date when the payments alleged in the plaint were made, plaintiff No. 2 had a subsisting right in the miras taluk in question.' It is further contended that upon the finding arrived at by the Court below, that the payment said to have been made by the plaintiff No. 2 had in fact been really made by plaintiff No. 1, it ought to have given plaintiffs a joint decree for the full amount they had asked for. And, lastly, it is contended that the Court below ought to have given effect to the petition of the plaintiff No. 1, dated 18th May 1893, by which he asked the Court to strike out the name of plaintiff No. 2 and to substitute his name in her place on the ground that he had obtained a transfer by gift of the amount claimed in this suit by the plaintiff No. 2. On the other hand, it is contended by the respondents in support of the decree made by the Court below dismissing the claim of the plaintiff No. 2 that that claim was liable to dismissal by reason of its involving the misjoinder of plaintiffs with different causes of action.

[543] In answer to this contention of the respondents it is urged on behalf of the appellants that, as the respondents went to trial upon the merits, it is no longer open to them to urge any objection like this to the frame of the suit.

We are of opinion that, apart from the merits of the case, the frame of the suit was clearly bad, there being a misjoinder of two plaintiffs with two distinct causes of action. The plaintiff No. 1 says that he paid certain sums of money to save the two putnis in which he had a certain share from being sold for arrears of rent, and his suit was, no doubt, rightly brought against his co-sharers in the putnis.

The case of plaintiff No. 2, as stated in the plaint, is that she owns a subordinate tenure under the two putnis: that she paid certain sums on certain dates to save the putnis from sale, as the subordinate tenure which she held stood in danger of being cancelled if the putnis were sold for arrears of rent. Her suit, therefore, ought properly to have been brought against all the holders of the putnis including plaintiff No. 1, and not merely against the defendants in the suit. The two claims were as incapable of being joined together as any two claims by two different persons well can be.

It was argued that plaintiff No. 1 was not a necessary party to any suit that plaintiff No. 2 might bring if she were to bring a separate suit, as nothing was due from plaintiff No. 1. Whether that was so or not we do not know. The fact is not admitted by the defendants, and no finding has been arrived at on the point by the Court below. It was further argued that it might have been in anticipation of the objection of benami that was urged by the defendants that the two plaintiffs joined in one suit, but there is not the faintest trace of there being any such reason to be discovered in the plaint.

The case, therefore, does not come within the scope of section 26 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is the only section authorizing different plaintiffs to join in one suit. And the only other express provision that we find relating to different plaintiffs is that in the second paragraph of section 31 which distinctly provides that nothing in that section shall be deemed to enable plaintiffs to join in respect of distinct causes of action.

[544] Nor can section 578 of the Code be invoked in aid of the appellants. Here no decree has been made in their favour such as might be held to be protected from interference by the Appellate Court by section 578, even if it were granted that an objection, like the one that the defendants raised, involves only a question of irregularity- -a point which is by no means free from doubt, having regard to the observations of the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice in the case of Smurthwaite v. Hannay [L. R. (1894) A. C., 494]. It was urged, as we have noticed above, that the fact found by the Court below that the sums alleged to have been paid by plaintiff No. 2 had in fact been paid by plaintiff No. 1, is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff No. 1 to a decree for the amount in dispute in this appeal.

There are two answers to this contention. In the first place the finding is not very clear and definite that all the sums that have been claimed as having been paid by plaintiff No. 2 had been paid by plaintiff No. 1. All that the lower Court says upon this point is this: "As to the money said to have been paid by Gnanoda Soondry, plaintiff's witness No. 18, Koonja Kishore Biswas says that he got Rs. 265 from Chandra Kishore Chowdhry, naib of Mohim Chandra Roy, that it was debited in the jama-kharach account of Mohim Baboo, and that it was only deposited in the name of Gnanoda. In fact Mohim Chandra Roy is all in all, and the name of his wife is only used as a cloak to disguise his pretension to the villages of which he wants to retain possession in some shape or other."

This is very different from a definite finding that all the sums in question were paid by plaintiff No. 1. But even if there were such a finding, it would be a finding contrary to the allegations of the parties. It is not alleged by the defendants that all the sums said to have been paid by plaintiff No. 2 had been paid by plaintiff No. 1, and it is the very reverse of the allegations of the plaintiffs, not only in their plaint, but also in the arguments before us. That being so, we cannot give any effect to this contention. Nor can we give any effect to the petition of the 18th May 1893, referred to in the course of the argument. The plaintiff No. 1, after the institution of the suit, and after the suit had made some progress, put in that petition stating that he had acquired by gift from plaintiff No. 2 her rights to these sums.

[545] This cannot remove the defect of form in the suit as originally brought, which we have already noticed. The substitution of one plaintiff for another can ordinarily be allowed only in a suit brought in proper form. Certain cases were relied upon as showing that where a party, notwithstanding that there may be objections to the form of the suit, allows the suit to proceed to trial on its merits, it is no longer open to him to ask a Court of appeal to dismiss the suit, or any part of it, on the ground of any defect of form. Of these cases the most important one is Tarinee Churn Ghose v. Hunsman Jha (20 W. R., 240). The facts of that case, however, are quite distinguishable from those of the present. There, not only was the objection in point of form not pressed, but the Court was never asked to frame any issue on the point. Here, on the contrary, we find that the objection as to misjoinder was raised in the written statement. The Court was asked to frame an issue on the point; and, then at a still later stage, when the plaintiff No. 1 asked the Court to substitute his name in the place of plaintiff No. 2, the defendants opposed that application on the ground that they had raised an objection at the first hearing to the frame of the suit, and that that objection should be disposed of in their favour.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to ask us to give them a decree in respect of that portion of the claim which has been dismissed. Here the question arises as to the form of the order that should have been made in the Court below, and as to the form which the order we make in respect of the claim of plaintiff No. 2 ought to take. No doubt, if the claim of plaintiff No. 2 is disallowed as having been improperly joined in this suit, so much of the judgment of the Court below as determines the question whether the plaintiff No. 2 has any real miras right, must be struck out, and the dismissal of the claim of the plaintiff No. 2 must be made to rest purely on the ground that it has been improperly joined in the present suit. We do not think that our making an order to that effect now can prejudicially affect either plaintiff No. 1 or plaintiff No. 2, or any of the defendants in this case. As plaintiff No. 1 has obtained a decree in regard to that part of the claim which relates to monies paid by [546] him, and as the defendants did not take exception to that decree on the ground of the frame of the suit being bad, we may take it that, if the plaintiffs had in the Court below been asked to elect, the election would have been made in a way such as would have enabled the Court to make the decree that it has made. At any rate nothing to the contrary has been urged before us. And then as regards plaintiff No. 2, it is true that if she had been put to her election she might have been in a position to bring a fresh suit earlier; but late as she now is, we may observe that her claim is not likely to be barred by any law of limitation Therefore there is no prejudice to any of the parties resulting from the order that we now make; and that order is that the claim of plaintiff No 2 be disallowed on the ground of its having been improperly joined with that of plaintiff No. 1.

[Their Lordships also held that the cross-appeal ought to be dismissed but on grounds not material to this report.]

The result is that the appeal and the cross-appeal both fail, and the decree of the Court below will be affirmed, subject to the modification indicated above in regard to the dismissal of the claim of the plaintiff No. 2.

F. K. D. Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Pran Nath Roy ....Plaintiff

Mohesh Chandra Moitra and others............Defendants.*

Right of suit—Fraud—Suit to set side ex parte decree and sale in execution thereof, on the ground of fraud- Jurisdiction —Res judicata— Effect of not appealing against an appealable order-- Remand— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 13, 108, 244, 311.

The plaintiff having applied unsuccessfully under sections 108 † and 311 ‡ of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an ex-parte decree against him and the sale of his property in the execution thereof on the ground of fraud, and without preferring an appeal against the order rejecting his said application under section 108 of the Code, instituted this suit praying for the same relief. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as not maintainable.

[547] Held, that such a suit was maintainable, and that sections 13 and 244 of the Civil Procedure Code were no bar thereto. The facts that his application under section 108 was unsuccessful, and that he did not appeal against the order rejecting that application, did not disentitle him from prosecuting his remedy by suit on the ground of fraud.

Held, also, that when there is an appeal against a decision the effect of not appealing is that the decision holds good for what it is worth ; so far as concerns any other modes of relief available, the person not appealing is in no worse position than if he had appealed and failed.

Abdul Mazumdar v. Mohamed Gazi Chowdhry (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 605) approved. Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Modhoo Soodum Mundle (17 W. R., 413) distinguished.

THE facts of the case and the arguments adduced appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babu Saroda Charan Mitter, Babu Mokund Lal Koondu, and Babu Haran Chunder Banerjee for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows :—

This suit has been dismissed without trial on the preliminary issue as to whether it was maintainable having regard to the provisions of sections 13 and

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 354 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Krishna Chandra Das, Subordinate Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated the 4th of September 1895.

Setting aside decree ex-parte against defendant.

† [Sec. 108 : - in any case in which a decree is ex-parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was made for an order to set it aside ; and if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served, or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall pass an order to set aside the decree upon such terms as to costs, payment into Court or otherwise, as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit.]

Application to set aside sale of land on ground of irregularity.

‡ [Sec. 311 :- The decree-holder, or any person whose immoveable property has been sold under this chapter, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting it ;

but no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity.]

244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the fact that the plaintiff's applications for setting aside the decree and the sale under sections 108 and 311 of the Code were rejected.

The object of the suit is to set aside an ex-parte decree for rent obtained by the first and second defendants against Ram Krishna Sarkar, seventh defendant, and the plaintiff, and to recover from the third, fourth and fifth defendants possession of a property of the plaintiff's which was sold in execution of that decree and purchased by them in the name of the sixth defendant. The plaint sets out that the plaintiff had nothing to do with the jote in respect of which the rent was decreed, or with Ram Krishna Sarkar; that the suit was fraudulently brought at the instigation of the third, fourth and fifth defendants in order to get hold of the plaintiff's property at a low price, and that with a view to carry out the fraud no summons was served, and a false return of [548] service was caused to be given: that the defendants did not proceed against the tenure for which the arrears were due or against the property of Ram Krishna, but fraudulently caused a very valuable property of the plaintiff's to be sold without service of any of the process required by law and by getting false returns of service submitted, and themselves purchased it for a price much below its value. In short, the plaintiff's case is that the suit culminating in the sale was from first to last a fraud, in which the defendants, who purchased and got possession of his property, were concerned.

In order to see whether the suit is maintainable, we must assume the facts to be as stated; two more facts, which are not mentioned in the plaint, but about which there is no dispute, must be added: those are that the plaintiff applied under section 108 of the Code to get the ex-parte decree set aside, and also applied under section 311 to get the sale set aside, and that both applications failed.

As we understand the judgment of the Subordinate Judge he would have decided the preliminary issue referred to above in favour of the plaintiff, but for the one circumstance that the plaintiff had applied unsuccessfully to get the ex-parte decree set aside under section 108 of the Code. He says that in applying under that section the plaintiff adopted the proper, but not the only, course open to him; that there was an appeal against the order rejecting his application, of which he did not avail himself; that the effect of the rejection order was to change the ex parte decree into a contested decree which the Court had no jurisdiction to set aside, except by way of appeal; and that without setting aside the decree the plaintiff could not get back the property sold in execution of it.

It is not and could not be now contended that a suit will not lie to set aside a decree obtained by fraud, nor is it contended that a fraudulent decree, which is obtained ex-parte can only be set aside under the provisions of section 108 of the Procedure Code. The case of Abdul Mazumdar v. Mohamed Gazi Chowdhry (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 605) is an authority that a suit will lie to set aside an ex-parte fraudulent decree, although no endeavour has been made to get the decree set aside and suit revived under section 108

[549] The contention is that when a person, against whom an ex-parte decree is passed, does apply under section 108 to have the decree set aside and fails, he cannot afterwards, on the same ground as was put forward in the proceeding under section 108, bring a suit to get the decree set aside, even if fraud is alleged. It is said, as regards the decree, the only fraud here alleged is in the non-service of the summons, and that it was found in the proceedings under section 108 that the summons was served, or, at all events, that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that it was not served. We do not understand the learned pleader for the respondent to argue that the question of the service of the summons is in this case res judicata. His argument, broadly stated, is that when two courses are available, and one is resorted to and fails, recourse cannot be had to the other.

It may be conceded that the plaintiff could not bring a suit to set aside the decree on the bare ground that the summons was not served, or that he was prevented for some good reason from defending the suit, and that would be so whether he had or had not availed himself of the remedy provided by section 108. Nor could he maintain a suit to set aside the decree on the bare ground that he was not liable for the rent decreed, for it was decided in the suit that he was liable. His case is not of that description. It is that the suit in which the decree was obtained was a fraud in its inception and throughout, and he seeks to recover property of which he has been deprived by means of the fraudulent decree, and which has passed into the possession of persons who are said to have been parties to the fraud, but not parties to the suit in which the fraudulent decree was passed. It is not correct to say that the only fraud alleged is in the non-service of the summons. This was a part of the scheme and the means or one of the means by which the fraud was committed. It may be necessary for the plaintiff, in order to get relief, to attack the decree, and he does attack it as fraudulent. If the decree was obtained by fraud, and the plaintiff was in consequence deprived of his property, the Court has full power to set aside the decree and restore his property, unless its jurisdiction in the case of ex-parte decrees is taken away; but there is nothing in sections 108, 214, 311, or in any other provisions of law to which we have been referred which does take it away. Section 13 of the Code clearly offers no bar. The issues which arise are not the same, [550] the parties are not all the same and the Court which decided the ex-parte suit has no jurisdiction to decide this suit. The mere fact that the plaintiff failed to obtain relief on the narrow ground on which he might have obtained it under section 108 cannot prevent him from getting relief on the much wider grounds now put forward.

It is said and correctly that the plaintiff might have appealed against the rejection order under section 108. All that can be said is that if he had appealed and succeeded there might have been no necessity for the present suit. If this is a valid objection it would apply equally to a case in which a plaintiff had made no application under section 108, but had at once brought a suit to set aside the decree. The avoidance of unnecessary litigation may furnish some ground for arguing that before a person brings a suit he ought to exhaust the remedy provided by section 108, but not that if he fails in his application under section 108 he is debarred from bringing a suit. The only case cited as a direct authority for the respondent's contention is that of Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Modhoo Soodun Mundle (17 W. R., 113). There the plaintiff brought a suit to set aside a rent decree obtained under Act X of 1859 on the ground that a confession of judgment, on which the decree proceeded, was not put in by him, but was fraudulently placed on the record by other parties. The plaintiff had applied to the Deputy Collector who passed the decree to revive the suit under section 58 of the Act on this particular ground, but the Deputy Collector rejected the application, holding that the confession of judgment was not fraudulently obtained. The plaintiff did not appeal as he might have done against the rejection order, and a Division Bench of this Court held that the plaintiff, having a remedy by way of appeal which he did not resort to, was precluded from bringing a suit in the Civil Court to set aside the decree. The ground, on which the decision is arrived at, is not clear, and there is no allusion in the judgment to fraud as the foundation of the suit. The case might be an authority for holding that no civil suit would lie until the remedy provided by section 58 of Act X of 1859, which is, generally speaking, analogous to the provisions of section 108 as regards civil suits, was exhausted, in which [551] event it would apparently conflict with the case of Abdul Mazumdar v. Mohamed Gazi Chowdhry (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 605), but it is no authority for the proposition that a person failing to obtain relief under section 108 is debarred from bringing a suit to get the decree set aside on the ground of fraud. When there is an appeal against a decision the effect of not appealing is that the decision holds good for what it is worth; so far as concerns any other modes of relief available the person not appealing is in no worse position than if he had appealed and failed.

We must hold that the suit is maintainable, and that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is wrong. The decree is set aside and the case remanded under section 582 of the Civil Procedure Code for trial. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

The appellant will be entitled to a refund of the value of the Court fee stamp.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 24th March, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE GORDON.

Commission in Criminal Case—Commission to examine witness—Purdanashin lady—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), sections 6, 7, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507—Presidency Magistrate, Power of.

It is doubtful, if a Presidency Magistrate in the Town of Calcutta has power to issue a commission under sections 503 to 507 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to examine a witness residing within his own jurisdiction; but there is nothing in the Code to prevent a Presidency Magistrate examining a witness within his jurisdiction at some place other than the Court house.

* Criminal Revision No. 162 of 1897, made against the order passed by T. A. Pearson, Esq., Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 17th of February 1897.

Where a Presidency Magistrate refused, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, to grant a commission for the examination of a purdanashin lady, but offered to take her evidence in his Court when cleared for the purpose, or in his private room in the Court house, and she applied to the High Court for [552] a commission being granted, or for such other order as they might deem proper, the High Court on revision directed that if the lady would take a house or suite of rooms not far from the Magistrate's Court, and pay all the costs which the Magistrate deemed reasonable and proper, he should not enforce her attendance in Court, but examine her in the place so appointed, in the presence of the parties concerned, and in the manner in which purdanashin ladies are ordinarily examined.

ON 17th February 1897 an application was made to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, in the course of a prosecution, by a purdanashin lady residing within the local jurisdiction of his Court, who had been subpœnaed as a witness, to be allowed to be examined on commission. The Chief Presidency Magistrate refused the application for a commission to issue on the ground that section 503 of the Criminal Procedure Code gave him no power to issue a commission to any one for the examination of a person residing within the jurisdiction of his own Court. He stated, however, that he would be prepared to examine her in the presence of the accused, either in Court at a time when it was cleared for the purpose, or, if the witness thought it more convenient, in his private room in the Court house. The witness, being dissatisfied with this order, thereupon obtained from the High Court a rule calling upon the Presidency Magistrate to shew cause, why his order of 17th February should not be set aside, and on 15th March 1897 this rule came on for hearing.

Mr. Dunne shewed cause. - It is entirely a matter of discretion with the Court. The Presidency Magistrate is willing to have the Court room cleared or to hold the examination of the witness in his own room. It may be a real difficulty for her to be examined in this way, but at the same time the Court cannot allow a witness in a criminal case to be examined at any place she may choose to provide. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Barton (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 238) a commission was issued. The section includes commissions in Presidency towns and includes the High Court; although the language of the section is very curious. If the section were intended to apply only to the issuing of commissions to Magistrates outside the jurisdiction, then Queen-Empress v. Barton is wrong. If you cannot issue a commission under this section, then you cannot issue it at all; Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 285). [553] But assuming that a commission could issue, would this Court issue a commission? I submit not. It is a highly unsatisfactory method of taking evidence in a criminal case. [GHOSE, J. -If the lady can make arrangements for giving her evidence somewhere near, we do not see why the Presidency Magistrate should not go there.] That would form a precedent, as in the case of In re Din Tarini Debi (I. L R., 15 Cal., 775). If the difficulty of her not appearing in public is met, what is her objection to coming to the Magistrate's room. The case of In re Farid-un-nissa (I. L. R., 5 All., 92) dissents. In re Hurro Soondery Chowdhrain (I.L.R., 4 Cal., 20). It is not desirable that there should be formed a precedent of this sort in criminal cases.

Mr. Hill (Mr. Farr with him) in support of the rule.—It is necessary to place a reasonable construction on the sections of the Code, if they will admit of it. It has always been held that section 503 is wide enough to enable District Magistrates to issue a commission to a witness resident in his own district. The section does not say that a witness must be outside the jurisdiction. The cases have not hitherto held that the section only relates to witnesses residing outside the jurisdiction of a Magistrate issuing the commission. Section 6 of the Code divides the Courts into five classes. Section 7 says that every Presidency Town shall be deemed a District. The Presidency Magistrate may be treated as a District Magistrate. In re Din Tarini Debi (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 775). In that case the witness was willing to take a house within the jurisdiction. The case of Queen-Empress v. Barton (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 239) was of a different character. There it was argued that no commission could issue because in England in a criminal trial no commission can issue. The reading of the sections relating to this subject has been that a commission may issue to a witness residing within the Town. It is necessary to consider the habits and customs of the people of the country. The two cases in the Allahabad Court were before Mr. Justice STRAIGHT, who knew the rules of the English Courts and was imbued with those ideas more than gentlemen with experience of this country would be. It would in this case be a hardship if the Court disregarded the horror a purdanashin lady has of appearing in Court. In this case the witness is [554] willing to take a house or a suite of rooms not far from the Magistrate's Court for the purpose of being examined.

The petitioner before us, Hem Coomaree Dassee, a purdanashin Hindu lady of rank, residing in the town of Calcutta, was subpœnaed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta to appear in his Court for the purposes of giving evidence in a certain criminal case. Thereupon, she presented a petition to the Magistrate, stating that she had never appeared in any Court or other public place, and asking that a commission might be issued for her examination. The Magistrate, on the 17th February last, rejected her application, upon the ground that, under section 503 of the Code of Criminal Procedure he had no power to issue such a commission, she being a resident within his jurisdiction. He recorded, however, at the same time that he "shall be prepared to examine the lady in the presence of the accused, either in Court at a time when it shall be cleared for the purpose, or, if thought more convenient, in his private room in the Court house."

Dissatisfied with this order of the Presidency Magistrate, the petitioner applied to this Court for a commission being granted, or for such other order as to this Court might seem meet and proper. And a rule was issued calling upon the Magistrate to shew cause why his order of the 17th February last should not be set aside.

Section 503 of the Code is as follows : -

"Whenever, in the course of an enquiry, a trial, or any other proceeding under this Code, it appears to a Presidency Magistrate, or District Magistrate, a Court of Session, or the High Court, that the examination of a witness is necessary for the ends of justice, and that the attendance of such witness cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense, or inconvenience which, under the circumstances of the case, would be unreasonable, such Magistrate or Court may dispense with such attendance, and may issue a commission to any District Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such witness resides to take the evidence of such witness," and so on.

If the lady had been a resident outside the limits of the town, [555] of Calcutta, there could be no doubt that the Presidency Magistrate would have authority under the section to issue a commission for her examination; but it seems to be doubtful, having regard to the collocation of the words in the last portion of the first paragraph of the section, whether he has such authority when the witness is a resident within his jurisdiction. It will be observed that a commission can be issued only to a District Magistrate "or Magistrate of the first class" within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such witness resides. Section 6 of the Code differentiates "Presidency Magistrates" from "Magistrate of the first class," and section 10 defines who the "District Magistrate" is.

Our attention has been called to several cases, but; in none of these cases, except in that of Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (I. L. R, 6 Bom., 285), does the precise question now raised before us seem to have been raised. In some of these cases, the Court to which the application for a commission was made was a Court in the Mofussil, and not in any Presidency town [as, for instance, in the cases of In re Hurro Soondery Chowdhrain (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 20), In re Faridunnissa (I. L. R., 5 All., 92), In re Basant Bibi (I. L. R., 12 All., 69)]. No doubt the case of Din Tarini Debi (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 775) is one which came from the town of Calcutta, but it will be observed from a consideration of the case that the rule that was issued by this Court was simply to show cause, why it should not be ordered that the lady concerned should not be required to appear in Court to give her evidence (as the Presidency Magistrate had ordered), and it does not seem to have been discussed whether the Presidency Magistrate had the power to issue a commission within his jurisdiction, though no doubt in one portion of their judgment the learned Judges said "the question is whether a commission ever issued in regard to purdanashin ladies in his Court (Presidency Magistrate's Court). Of that he makes no mention. He also says that this lady travels from Govindanga to Calcutta, but he does not say that she does so publicly. So far therefore as cause has been shown by the learned Presidency Magistrate, it does not seem that the facts stated by him affects the reasons upon which such commissions have been granted." They then [556] gave certain directions as to how the evidence might be taken without compelling the lady to appear in the Court premises, and, as we understand the order of this Court, the learned Judges contemplated that the Magistrate should himself take the evidence, though no doubt in the last paragraph the word "commission" was used.

In the case of Queen-Empress v. Barton (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 238), an order for the examination of witnesses by commission in the town of Calcutta was issued by this Court to a Presidency Magistrate, and the evidence so taken was admitted in evidence, but there also the question now before us was not raised or discussed.

In the case of Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 285) the question no doubt was raised, but it will be observed that the Court had then to consider the language of section 76 of the High Court Criminal Procedure Act of 1875; and it was held that there was nothing in the language of that section to support the contention that the Court was not authorized to grant a commission to examine a witness, who was within its own jurisdiction. The language of that section is somewhat different from that of section 503 of the Code, with which we are now concerned; and the question is whether the section authorizes the Presidency Magistrate to issue such a commission within his own jurisdiction.

We have considered the provisions of sections 503 to 507, and the cases that have been cited in the course of argument; and it seems to us doubtful, as already observed, whether a Presidency Magistrate has the power that is now claimed for him by the petitioner.

But however that may be, there is nothing to prevent a Presidency Magistrate from examining a witness within his jurisdiction at some other place than the Court house, and it is quite within our province, having regard to the revisional powers conferred by the Charter of this Court, to direct the Magistrate as to the mode in which the evidence of the petitioner may and should be taken.

The Presidency Magistrate has no doubt shown some consideration to the petitioner by offering to examine her in the manner [557] indicated in his order; but having regard to her rank and position in Hindu society, and to the fact that she (as stated) never appeared in any Court or other public place, we think that the offer made by the Magistrate is not, in the circumstances of the case, quite adequate. We think that we might give the same directions which were given by this Court in the case of Din Tarini Debi (I. L R., 15 Cal., 775). If the lady would take a house or a suite of rooms not far from the Magistrate's Court, and if she will pay all the costs which the Magistrate shall deem reasonable and proper, he will not enforce her attendance in Court, but examine her in the place so appointed in the presence of the parties concerned, and in the manner in which purdanashin ladies are ordinarily examined. This will not entail any inconvenience or loss of time upon the Court, but will at the same time remove the hardship which the lady may be subjected to, if the order of the Magistrate as it stands is enforced. If, however, she does not comply with the conditions imposed, the order of the Magistrate will stand.

In these terms the rule will be made absolute.

C. E. G. Rule made absolute.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 10th February, 1897.

PRESENT.

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Kali Krishna Tagore............Plaintiff

Second Appeal—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 586—Suit for compensation for use and occupation of land valued at less than Rs. 500—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), sections 15 and 23, Schedule II, Article 8.

A suit for compensation for money realized by the defendants from the actual occupants of land, who were stated to be the plaintiff's tenants, is a suit of a nature cognizable by the Small Cause Court; therefore, no second appeal lies to the High Court in such a suit valued at less than Rs 500, notwithstanding that the plaint was returned by the Small

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 83 of 1895, against the decree of A E. Staley, Esq., District Judge of Backergunge, dated the 26th of September 1894, reversing the decree of Babu Siti Kantha Mullick, Munsif of Barisal, dated the 26th of April 1894.

[558] Cause Court to be filed in the Civil Court under section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, on the ground that the suit involved a question of title.

Mohesh Mahto v. Piru (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 470), and Muttukaruppan v. Sellan (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 98), referred to.

THIS appeal arose out of an action for compensation for use and occupation of land The plaintiff, who was the proprietor of sixteen annas of pergunnah Edilpore, brought twelve suits for rent for the years 1292 to 1295, B. S., against Kamal Khan and others, in whose names different quantities of land were recorded in the measurement paper prepared at the time of the deara settlement. His allegation was that, within the said pergunnah, there was a howla in the chur contiguous to mouzah Apupur standing in the names of Azgar Khan and others, which was held by the defendants by virtue of auction purchase; that there was a deara settlement with him by the Government in respect of the said chur, but at the time of the said settlement the defendants did not cause their howladari rights to be recorded; that out of these aforesaid twelve rent suits, four were decreed ex parte, but the remaining eight were dismissed, the tenants denying the title of the plaintiff, and alleging that the land in question was held by the defendants in howla right; that since the dismissal of these suits the defendants had realized and received the profits of the said land to a considerable amount, and as at the time of the settlement the defendants did not cause their howladari right to be recorded, they were not legally entitled to enjoy the profits thereof. Hence the present action for compensation was brought. The plaintiff also claimed road cess and public works cess. The suit was first instituted in the Small Cause Court, but as in the written statement the defendants raised various questions of title the plaint was returned to be filed in the Civil Court. The Munsif decreed the suit, but on appeal the learned District Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif, holding that the defendants were in possession of the disputed land as howladars, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any damages.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Amar Nath Bose for the Appellant

Babu Bussunt Kumar Bose for the Respondents.

[559] Babu Bussunt Kumar Bose for the respondents took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that as the suit was one of a nature cognizable by the Small Cause Court, and as it was valued at less than Rs. 500, no second appeal would lie to the High Court under section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Kunjo Behary Singh v. Madhub Chundra Ghose (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 884).

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter for the appellant contended that section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply, as the plaint was returned by the Small Cause Court for presentation to the Civil Court under section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The object and effect of the provision in section 23 is to give jurisdiction to ordinary Civil Court. See Mahamaya Dasya v. Nitya Hari Das Bairagi (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 425). Under section 13, explanation 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the decision on the question of title is final. It is really a suit under article 11, schedule II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, a suit "for the determination or enforcement of any other right to, or interest in, immoveable property." The effect of section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act was to convert this suit, after the plaint was returned, to one for determination or enforcement of any other right to, or interest in, immoveable property. It can also be said that the suit is one for rent, as is contemplated in article 8, schedule II of Act IX of 1887. The plaintiff does not say that the defendant is a trespasser, but she asks for what he realized from the plaintiff's tenants. In this case the plaintiff has asked for cesses also; that being so the case is one not cognizable by the Small Cause Court.

Babu Bussunt Kumar Bose in reply.—The mere fact that in a suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court, a question of title to immoveable property has been raised, does not take the case out of the provisions of section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Mohesh Mahto v. Piru (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 470.). It has been held in the case of Muttukaruppan v. Sellan (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 98) that a suit of a nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court does not cease to be so within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code, section 586, because the Court in which it was instituted as a small cause suit returned the plaint [560] to be filed on the regular side under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, section 23.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C. J., and BANERJEE, J.) :—

Maclean, C.J.—I think that this preliminary objection must prevail. In section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that no second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable in a Court of Small Causes when the amount or value of the subject-matter of the original suit does not exceed Rs. 500. If we turn to the Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) we find this provision in sub-section 2 of section 15 of the Act, "Subject to the exceptions specified in that schedule," that is, the second schedule of the Act, "and to the provisions of any enactment for the time being in force, all suits of a civil nature, of which the value does not exceed Rs. 500, shall be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes." If the matter stood there, there could be no reasonable doubt that this was an action cognizable by the Small Cause Court, and therefore within the meaning of section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and consequently no second appeal would lie.

But it has been ingeniously argued on behalf of the appellant that section 23 of the Act of 1887 makes a difference in the case. That section provides as follows: "Notwithstanding anything in the foregoing portion of this Act, when the right of a plaintiff and the relief claimed by him in a Court of Small Causes depend upon the proof or disproof of a title to immoveable property, or rather title which such a Court cannot finally determine, the Court may at any stage of the proceedings return the plaint to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction to determine the title." That section is an enabling section only; and enables the Court, at any stage of the proceedings, to return the plaint in order that it may be presented to any Court which could determine the title. But, as was pointed out in the course of the argument, the section does not say that such suits shall not be cognizable by the Small Cause Court. It could easily have said so; it could easily have said, if that were the intention of the Legislature, that a suit, where the issue depended upon the proof or disproof of the title, would cease [561] to be cognizable by the Small Cause Court. It appears to me, therefore, that that section only does not make a case such as this, less a case cognizable by the Small Cause Court, as to which, under section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no second appeal lies.

But that does not quite dispose of the matter. One other point was urged before us. It was urged that this particular case came within the exception of article 8 in the second schedule of Act IX of 1887: an exception that takes the case out of the operation of section 15 of the Act. It was stated that this was a suit for the recovery of rent. I think that when one looks at the plaint, and when one applies one's knowledge of what the term "rent" ordinarily means, it is not easy to arrive at the conclusion that this is a suit for the recovery of rent.

It is an action for the recovery of damages. The conclusion at which I arrive appears to me to be consistent with the principle laid down by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Mohesh Mahto v. Piru (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 470), and with the view held by the High Court at Madras in the case of Muttukaruppan v. Sellan (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 98).

For these reasons I think the preliminary objection must prevail, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The preliminary objection being that a second appeal is barred by section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the question for consideration is whether the suit was of the nature cognizable in the Court of Small Causes, the amount being admittedly below Rs. 500. The learned Vakil for the appellant contended that the suit was not of that nature for two reasons—first, because, though the plaint was originally filed in the Court of Small Causes, it was returned by the Judge of the Small Cause Court under section 23 of Act IX of 1887 for presentation to the Court having jurisdiction to determine the question of title that was involved in the case; and, secondly, because, having regard to the nature of the claim, the suit ought to be treated as one for rent, and therefore excepted from the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes under article 8 of the second schedule of Act IX of 1887.

As to the first branch of this argument, I do not think that [562] the effect of the transfer of a suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes is to make it any the less cognizable by such Court. Section 23 of Act IX of 1887 simply enacts that, "notwithstanding anything in the foregoing portion of the Act, when the right of a plaintiff and the relief claimed by him in a Court of Small Causes, depend upon the proof or disproof of a title to immoveable property, or other title which such a Court cannot finally determine, the Court may at any stage of the proceedings return the plaint to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction to determine the title." That does not alter the nature of the suit. The section is evidently intended to enable Courts of Small Causes to save their time by returning plaints in suits which involve indirectly enquiry into questions of title which may take time; and a comparison of sub-section 2 of section 15 of the Small Cause Court Act of 1887, with section 16, will clearly show that a suit which under any of the provisions of that enactment may be tried by an ordinary Civil Court, notwithstanding that it is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, does not cease to be a suit of that description by the mere fact of its being tried by such Court. The effect of the trial of such a suit by the ordinary Civil Court was considered by a Full Bench of this Court in a case tried under the old law, that is, the case of Mohesh Mahto v. Piru (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 470); and it was held that a second appeal would not lie in such a case.

Then, as to the second branch of the argument, I do not think that this suit can be treated as one for rent in any sense of the term. It is clear from the plaint that what is claimed is not any sum payable by the defendant as holding lands under the plaintiff as his tenant. What is claimed is a sum of money which, the plaintiff says, ought to have come to his hands in the first instance, but which the defendant wrongfully realised from the actual occupants of the land who are stated to be the tenants of the plaintiff. It was argued that as part of the claim consisted of road cess and public works cess, and as road cess and public works cess are realisable under the Cess Act as rent, the suit should, so far as the claim for road and public works cesses was concerned, be treated as one for rent. But on looking at the 6th paragraph of the plaint, I find that cesses are introduced, not as [563] independent items of the claim, but as merely furnishing data for the assessment of the damages claimed in the suit. Both branches of the argument, therefore, upon which it is sought to take the case out of the description mentioned in section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure, fail; and the preliminary objection must be allowed, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Claim to attached property--Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 280--Claim by a Mokuraridar--Limitation--Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Article 11.

Upon attachment of immoveable property in execution of decree a claim was made on the ground that the judgment-debtor had granted a mokurari in respect of the property in favour of the claimant. The claim was allowed, and the property was ordered to be sold with a declaration of the mokurari. More than a year after this order, the decree-holder who purchased at an execution sale, brought a suit for a declaration that the mokurari was fraudulent and benami and for possession and mesne profits.

Held, that the order was a judicial determination under section 280† of the Civil Procedure Code (1882), and that, therefore, the suit was barred under article 11‡ of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1657 of 1895, against the decree of F. S. Hamilton, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Sarun, dated the 29th of July 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Krishna Nath Roy, Officiating Additional Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 16th of September 1893.

† [Sec. 280:—If upon the said investigation the Court is satisfied that, for the reason stated in the claim or objection, such property was not, when attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor or of some person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or that, being in the possession of the judgment-debtor at such time, it was so in his possession, not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in trust for some other person, or partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall pass an order for releasing the property, wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit, from attachment.]

Release of property from attachment.

‡ [Art. 11:—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
By a person against whom an order is passed under sections 280, 281, 282 or 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to establish his right to, or to the present possession of, the property comprised in the order.	One year ...	The date of the order.]

A DECREE was passed in favour of the plaintiff upon a petition of compromise and confession of judgment by Bagisdut Misser (defendant No. 2 in this case), whereby he was made liable for Rs. 3,100, and certain properties, including 18 bighas 5 biswas of zerait land, were declared securities for the amount. In execution of that decree claims and objections were made on behalf of different members of the family of the judgment-debtor as well as by defendant No. 1, Raghubansman Tewary. The claims of the members of the judgment-debtor's family were disallowed, and regular suits were brought by them to establish their rights, and [564] their litigation, which terminated in 1890, was in the event unsuccessful. The claim of defendant No. 1 on the ground that he was in possession under a mokurari potta executed by the judgment-debtor on the 5th September 1885 was, however, allowed, and it was ordered that the property would be sold with a declaration of the mokurari. The order was passed on the 12th June 1887, and the sale was held on the following day.

The plaintiff brought the present suit on the 10th November 1891, on the allegations (inter alia) that he had been dispossessed from the zerait lands aforesaid in consequence of an order of the Criminal Court under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code passed on the 11th November 1890, in favour of defendant No. 1 and against the plaintiff; that the defendant No. 1 was merely a disciple and benamidar of the judgment-debtor, defendant No. 2, and that the mokurari, dated 5th September 1885, was fraudulent and inoperative, and did not effect any change in the possession of the lands. The plaintiff prayed for a declaration that the mokurari was fraudulent and inoperative, for possession of the zerait lands and for mesne profits.

The written statement of Raghubansman Tewary raised the plea of limitation on the ground that more than one year had elapsed since his objection was allowed on the 12th June 1886, and also on the ground that the plaintiff's claim for setting aside the mokurari was barred by three years' limitation prescribed by article 91 of the Limitation Act.

The lower Courts did not notice the plea of one year's limitation, but dismissed the suit under article 91 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act. Evidence was not gone into.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Babu Sris Chandra Chaudhuri for the Appellant.

Babu Golap Chandra Sarkar for the Respondents.

Babu Sris Chandra Chaudhuri contended that article 91 did not apply to the present suit, as it was not necessary to set aside the mokurari, which was, on the facts stated, void and never intended to be operative. The latest case on the point is Sham Lall Mitra v. Amarendra Nath Bose [I. L. R., 23 Cal., 460 (469)]. All the High Courts agree in [565] this respect where the deed is inoperative, as would appear from the more recent cases. [TREVELYAN, J.—But in this case there seems to have been a claim which was allowed; how do you get over the limitation under Article 11 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act read with section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code?] The order was not one under section 280. The petition is not before the Court, but it could not possibly be entertained as a "claim" to the property attached, in terms of section 278, for the property attached was not the mokurari interest; nor could it be an "objection to the attachment;" the attachment was of the interest of the judgment-debtor, whatever that was. An objection, moreover, like the present is clearly kept out of view in section 280. A mokuraridar "is a tenant or other person paying rent to the judgment-debtor" in the language of that section, and there can be no judicial order upon objection raised by tenants under section 280. As an order under section 280 it was ultra vires. Then also the property attached was not released from attachment by this order. [TREVELYAN, J.—The order may be to release to such extent as the Court thinks fit.] The expression "to such extent" refers to what precedes: "Partly on his account and partly on account of some other person;" or it may mean the interest of co-owners where the whole property is attached. It cannot be taken to mean all subordinate interests, including the raiyati tenures, much less all interests in general. Section 282 would not be necessary in that case.

Babu Golap Chandra Sarkar for the Respondents was not called upon.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ). was as follows:—

This suit was brought by the plaintiff, who is a judgment-creditor and bought property in execution of his decree against persons who claim to hold under a mokurari executed by the judgment-debtor after the decree and before the attachment. The suit has been held to be barred by both the lower Courts on the ground that it was brought beyond the three years' period of limitation given by Article 91 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act in cases of suits to set aside an instrument.

In our opinion it is not necessary to consider that question, [566] as we think the suit is barred by the one year's limitation provided under Article 11 of the second schedule of the same Act.

The alleged mokuraridar filed a claim. The claim has not been put in, but the order has been put in. The order made recites what was done. It is dated the 12th June 1896. It states that the claimant's witnesses were examined; that the claimant's Vakil declined to call any more witnesses; that the decree-holder's Vakil's arguments were heard; that the mokurari pottah was proved; and that the claim was granted; and that the property would be sold with a declaration of the mokurari.

That is a judicial determination under section 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the claim to possession of the property under this mokurari. The claim was allowed. The section directs that when the Court "is satisfied that for the reasons stated in the claim or objection, such property was not when attached in the possession of the judgment-debtor or some person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or that, being in possession of the judgment-debtor at such time, it was so in his possession not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in trust for some other person or party on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall pass an order for releasing the property wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit from attachment."

The effect of this order was to release the property to the extent of the mokurari interest, and direct that it be sold subject to that mokurari interest. What was to be sold was in reality the right to receive mokurari rent. There is no other construction, so far as we can see, which can be placed upon this order. If that be so, it follows that the judgment-creditor, if he wanted to sell the property clear of the mokurari, was bound to bring the suit within a year. The suit was brought long after a year had elapsed; and is, therefore, barred by the Law of Limitation.

On this ground we think that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed.

[567] TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION.

The 3rd May, 1897.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE.

In the Goods of Ram Chunder Ghose (deceased).

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Schedule I, Art. 11—Probate fee—Doubtful debt.

The uncertainty of recovering a debt due to the estate of a deceased person is not a sufficient ground for a proportionate reduction of the fee payable in respect of probate of a will.

THIS case was referred as follows by Mr. Belchambers, the Taxing Officer, for the decision of the Chief Justice under section 5 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) :—

" The testator in his will, dated 17th January 1895, mentions the following sums as being due to him :—

Rs.	11,000
"	7,700
"	8,300
'	1,400
"	3,100
"	31,600

" In the petition for probate it is stated 'that the amount of the estate and effects of the deceased, so far as your petitioners have been able to ascertain, and which are likely to come into your petitioner's hands after payment of his debts, will not exceed the sum of Rs. 10,830-10.'

" Annexed to the petition is a schedule which contains—

" (1) 'A list of immoveable properties.'

" (2) 'A list of moveable properties realizable,' in which, of the debts due to the estate, only one of Rs. 1,400 is entered.

" (3) 'A list of unrealizable assets,' in which the other debts due to the estate are entered.

" (4) 'A list of debts due by the deceased.'

" Upon the facts so stated the petitioners submit that in calculating the amount of probate duty the debts due by the [568] estate amounting to Rs. 5,800, and such of the debts due to the estate as are mentioned in the 'list of unrealizable assets,' amounting to Rs. 26,753, ought to be excluded.

"It has been held that the duty payable is to be calculated on the amount or value of the property, without deducting the debts due by the deceased—In the Goods of Ram Chandra Das (9 B. L. R., 30). It does not follow that debts admittedly due by an estate will be paid. If and when paid a refund of duty may be obtained. This is provided for by section 19 B of the Court Fees Act, 1870, as amended by Act XIII of 1875.

"The first of the debts mentioned in the 'list of unrealizable assets' is the subject of a claim in an administration suit. It is uncertain what may be realized in respect thereof after payment of preferential claims. It is, therefore, a matter which may be dealt with according to the rule which was applied under similar circumstances in the case of In the Goods of Abdool Aziz (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 577).

"The other debts mentioned in the 'list of unrealizable assets' are judgment-debts not barred by the limitation, but supposed to be unrealizable with reference to the present circumstances of the judgment-debtors. Exemption on similar grounds was disallowed in In the Goods of Beake (13 B. L. R., Ap., 24). It is desired by the petitioners that this question should be reconsidered with reference to the case of Moses v. Crafter (4 C. and P., 524). In that case it was held that desperate and doubtful debts need not be included in the amount on which probate duty is payable. In the present case the debts in question being judgment-debts cannot be treated as doubtful. Whether they may be treated as desperate in the sense of being unrealizable is a question of fact. In In the Goods of Beake (13 B. L. R., Ap., 24), to which I have referred, the uncertainty of recovering a debt was, as a question of general importance, referred to and decided by COUCH, C.J., under section 5 of the Court Fees Act, 1870. That, under the terms of that section, was a final decision on a question of general importance, and is applicable to every similar case. It was not, I think, intended that a question of general importance should, after 'final decision,' be reconsidered except on other grounds. But [569] at the request of the petitioners the case, so far as it relates to the uncertainty of recovering debts due to this estate, is referred to his Lordship the Chief Justice under section 5 of the Court Fees Act, 1870."

Maclean, C.J.—This case to my mind is governed by the decision of Sir RICHARD COUCH in the case of In the Goods of Beake (13 B. L. R., Ap., 24), from which I see no reason to differ.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 11th March 1897.
PRESENT:
SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Srihari Banerjee and another............Plaintiffs
Khitish Chandra Rai Bahadoor............Defendant.*

Res Judicata—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 13—Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Question of title incidentally raised in a previous suit—Subsequent suit for declaration of title to land purchased.

A suit was brought by A against B and others for rent; and the matter directly and substantially in issue was as to what the share was for which A was entitled to rent. The plaintiff obtained a decree for the whole rent. In a subsequent suit by B and others against A for declaration of title to land purchased by them in execution of their mortgage decree, the defence was that the former decree for rent operated as res judicata: Held, that as the issue in the rent suit was for what share the plaintiff was entitled to rent and not to what share of the property was the plaintiff entitled as owner, the question of title could be said to have been in issue in that suit only incidentally and not directly, and it could not have been entertained in the form in which it was now raised; therefore the subsequent suit was not barred as res judicata.

Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 301; L. R., 12 I. A., 23) followed. Radhamadhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerji (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 756; L. R., 15 I. A., 97) distinguished.

THE facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Hara Kumar Mitter for the Appellants.

Dr. Asutosh Mukerjee for the Respondent.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter.—The decision in the rent suit does not operate as res judicata, inasmuch as the question of title, if tried at all, was tried incidentally and not directly. See the observations of the Judicial Committee in the case of Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 301; L. R., 12 I. A., 23).

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee.—The decision of a question of title in a rent suit may operate as res judicata in a title suit, if the self-same right and title is in issue in the two suits. See the cases of Gobind Chunder Koondoo v. Taruck Chunder Bose (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 145), Gopal Das v. Gopi Nath Sircar (12 C. L. R., 38), Radha Madhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerji (I. L. A decision operates as res judicata, if the matter has been decided in substance or even by necessary implication. See Soorjomonee Dayee v. Suddanund Mohapatter (12 B. L. R., 304; L. R., I. * Appeal from Appellate Decree No 288 of 1895, against the decree of Alfred F. Steinberg, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Nuddea, dated the 13th of December 1894, reversing the decree of Babu Debendra Nath Pal, Munsif of Ranaghat, dated the 8th of September 1893.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (Maclean,, C. J., and Banerjee, J.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs, appellants, for a declaration of their right by purchase to a 1 anna 15 gandas 2 karas 2 krantis share in certain land, for a further declaration that the right of the defendant No. 1 by purchase extends only to a 6 annas odd gandas share of the said land, and [571] that the defendant No. 1 is therefore entitled to recover from the plaintiffs as rent for the said land only Rs. 5 odd annas annually, and for refund of a certain sum of money which the defendant No. 1 is said to have unjustly recovered by suit from the plaintiffs. The allegations upon which the plaintiffs base their right to the reliefs claimed are shortly these: That the husband of plaintiff No. 1, while living jointly with plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, obtained mourasi mokurari pattas, or permanent leases at fixed rent, of the land in dispute, which is revenue-free land, from the former proprietors thereof, namely, defendants 2—25; that subsequently some of those proprietors sold their 8 gandas odd karas share in the said land to the husband of plaintiff No. 1 and to the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3; that on the 26th Jaistha 1288 (corresponding to same day in June 1881) one of the former proprietors, namely, defendant No. 21, mortgaged his 1 anna 6 gandas 2 karas 2 krantis share to the husband of plaintiff No. 1, and that share was purchased by the plaintiffs on the 6th August 1888 in the name of the mortgagee at a sale in execution of the decree obtained on the mortgage; that the defendant No. 1, in execution of a certificate against some of the other defendants, purchased their shares in the said land on the 12th October 1882; that thereafter defendant No. 1 sued the plaintiffs for the entire rent of the mourasi mokurari tenure, and notwithstanding the objection of the plaintiffs that defendant No. 1 was not entitled to the entire 16 annas of the rent, the suit for rent was decreed in full and the entire rent has been recovered from the plaintiffs; and that though the plaintiffs' purchase of the 1 anna 6 gandas 2 karas 2 krantis was subsequent to the purchase by defendant No. 1, their purchase should prevail, as being in satisfaction of their prior mortgage.

The defence of defendant No. 1 was that the matter in dispute was res judicata by reason of the decision in the previous rent suit, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the share claimed by them.

The first Court over-ruled the plea of res judicata, and on the merits held that, though the purchase set up by the plaintiffs of the 8 gandas odd share was not made out, they were entitled to a declaration of their right to a 1 anna 6 gandas 2 krantis 6 dantis share as purchasers under their mortgage decree, and a [572] further declaration that the defendant No. 1 was entitled only to Rs. 6 odd annas annually as rent, and to refund of a certain sum.

Against the decree of the first Court, defendant No. 1 preferred an appeal, and the lower Appellate Court, without going into the merits of the case, has dismissed the suit on the ground that it is barred as res judicata by reason of the decision in the previous rent suit.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiffs that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is wrong in law, as the question of title, if tried at all in the rent suit, was tried only incidentally and not directly, and the judgment in the rent suit could not therefore make the matter res judicata. It is conceded now, as it was conceded in the lower Appellate Court, that the decree for refund of money granted by the first Court cannot stand.

The question whether the plea of res judicata is good in any case must depend for its answer upon the circumstances of the case.

The former suit, upon the judgment in which the plea of res judicata is based in this case, was one for arrears of rent for certain years, due in respect of land now in dispute, brought by the present defendant No. 1 against the present plaintiffs. The issue raised upon the question of title was as follows:—

"For what share is plaintiff entitled to rent ?" The decision of the first Court upon that issue was this:—

"The plaintiff purchased under the certificate procedure for arrears of rent due to him. That was in 1882. In 1883 the defendant No. 1's husband sued one of the old proprietors, Dinabundhu Chuckerbutty, on a mortgage bond, but did not make plaintiff a party. He brought the property to sale and purchased himself. But Dinabandhu was a party to the certificate case, and plaintiff had purchased that right.

"The defendants do not show how and when they acquired title to Golap Sundari's share. I find plaintiff entitled to the whole rent."

And the judgment of the District Judge upon this point on appeal was as follows—

[573] "In the next place it does not appear that the twenty-one maliks are registered in Register B under the Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), and under section 78 the defendants are not bound to pay those unregistered, if they subsequently demand rent. Then defendants allege two purchases of two shares of their superior landlords. They only produce one sale certificate, and that is of date subsequent to the plaintiff's purchase, and therefore is of no avail and was rightly rejected by the lower Court. Hence the defendants do not substantiate their plea."

These being the judgments of the Original and Appellate Courts upon the issue as to shares in the former suit for rent, the question is whether they operate as res judicata in the present suit for declaration of the plaintiff's title to the share purchased by them in execution of their mortgage decree. We are of opinion that the question ought to be answered in the negative.

To make the judgment in the former suit conclusive in this, it must be shewn that the matter directly and substantially in issue in the present suit was directly and substantially in issue in the former. Now the matters directly and substantially in issue in this suit (leaving out of consideration points which have been given up and confining our attention to the only points to which the claim is now limited) are—whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the share of defendant No. 21, Dinabandhu, and to what share is defendant No. 1 entitled; while that in the former suit was as to what the share was for which the present defendant No. 1, the plaintiff in that suit, was entitled to rent. And though the share of the rent of a tenure to which a party is entitled depends generally upon the extent of his share in the property in which the tenure is included, or in other words, upon the extent of his title, yet, having regard to the frame of the issue and to the judgments of the Original and Appellate Courts in the former suit, the question of title can be said to have been in issue in that suit only incidentally and not directly, and it could not have been entertained in the form in which it is now raised, nor was the question in that form decided in the former suit.

The issue in the rent suit was "for what share is the plaintiff entitled to rent" and not "to what share of the property is the plaintiff entitled as owner." And the judgment of the Court [574] of Appeal rested upon considerations based on the provisions of the Land Registration Act, and on the fact of the purchase of the present plaintiffs being subsequent to that under which the present defendant No. 1 claimed; considerations which were necessary and sufficient for the determination of the rent suit, but which are not conclusive in a suit like the present, which is for determination of title to land, as distinguished from title to recover rent, and in which the plaintiffs claim a preferential right, notwithstanding that their purchase was subsequent to that of the defendant No. 1, by reason of that purchase being in satisfaction of a decree on a prior mortgage. Section 78 of Bengal Act VII of 1876, and section 60 of Act VIII of 1885, bar inquiry in a rent suit into any question of title independently of the Land Registration record, while clause (a) of section 89 of the former Act reserves the right to obtain a declaration of title independently of such record by a regular suit. And the cases of Nanack Chand v. Teluckdye Koer (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 265), Dirgopal Lal v. Bolakee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 269) show that the right to possession, and therefore the right to recover rent by suit, belongs to the prior purchasor, though the subsequent purchaser in satisfaction of a prior mortgage may raise the question of priority of his title in a suit properly framed for the purpose.

The view we take on the question of res judicata is fully supported by the decision of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 301; L. R., 12 I. A., 23).

It was contended for the respondents that this view is opposed to the decision of the Privy Council in Radhamadhuv Holdar v. Monohur Mukerji (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 756; L. R., 15 I. A., 97). We do not think that this contention is correct. In the case just referred to, the decision in the previous suit, which was no doubt one for rent, did not, and could not, rest upon any consideration based on the Land Registration Act or the Bengal Tenancy Act, because those Acts were passed subsequently; and the precise question of title that was raised in the subsequent suit had been heard and decided in the rent suit. See [576] the case of Rajkishen Mookerjee v. Radhamadhuv Holdar (21 W. R. 349). That case therefore is quite distinguishable from the present.

For the foregoing reasons we think the Court of Appeal below was wrong in holding that the suit was barred as res judicata. The judgment appealed against must therefore be set aside, and the case remanded to the lower Appellate Court to be tried on the merits. Costs will abide the result.

S. C. G. Appeal allowed; case remanded.

FULL BENCH.

The 12th March, 1897.
PRESENT:
SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN, MR. JUSTICE BEVERLEY AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Hemadri Nath Khan, by his Mother and Guardian Jagadiswari Debi, and another............Defendants Nos. 9 and 10
versus

Partition—Right to partition—Partition between zemindar and putnidars—Partition between parties, one of whom owns interest subordinate to the other.

The plaintiff was proprietor of an entire estate paying an annual revenue to Government of Rs. 2,414. In 1854 his father gave a putni lease of an undivided six annas share of the estate to the defendants' predecessors in title. The plaintiffs alleged that the land being held ijmali, although he and the defendants collected separately from the tenants their respective shares of the rent, difficulty and inconvenience had arisen in the management of the property, and he therefore sued to have his ten annas share of the land divided by metes and bounds from the six annas share of the putnidars, the land of the entire estate remaining liable as before for the entire amount of the Government revenue payable in respect of it.

Held, by the Full Bench that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for partition.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by MACPHERSON and JENKINS, JJ., on the 8th September 1896, with the following opinion:—

[576] "The facts of this case are short and simple. The plaintiff is the proprietor of an entire estate paying an annual revenue to Government of Rs. 2,414-2-4. In 1854 his father gave a putni lease of an undivided 6 annas share of the estate to the defendants' predecessors in title. The plaintiff alleges that the land being held ijmali, although he and the defendants collect separately from the tenants their respective shares of the rent, difficulty and inconvenience has arisen in the management of the property, and he brings this suit to have his 10 annas share of the land divided by metes and bounds from the 6 annas of the putnidars, the land of the entire estate remaining liable as before for the entire amount of the Government revenue payable in respect of it.

"Two only of the nine defendants who are the owners of the putni mehal opposed the claim for partition, and the Subordinate Judge has made a decree for the division of the land comprised in the estate into two portions of 10 annas and 6 annas, the former to be allotted to the plaintiff and the latter to the defendants as the land of their putni mehal. Against this decree the ninth defendant, who was one of the objecting defendants in the lower Court, alone appeals, and the sole ground taken, or at least argued, before us is that, as the interests of the parties are not the same, the plaintiff being zemindar and the defendants putnidars, and as such the owners of an interest subordinate to the zemindar, the suit for partition is not maintainable. It is said that the effect of the partition is to alter the condition of the tenants at the instance of the landlord by converting them from tenants of an undivided portion of the entire estate into tenants of specific land in that estate and that this cannot be allowed. This may be the effect of the partition; but the answer is that the defendants' predecessors, by taking a putni lease of an undivided 6 annas share, took it subject to all the incidents attaching to such an interest in property, and that the defendants as their successors are bound by the same incidents, though one of them be the liability to partition.

"The suit cannot be regarded as a suit by a landlord against his tenant to alter in any way the nature of the tenancy. The plaintiff is certainly the landlord of the defendants as regards [577] the 6 annas share held by them in putni right, but he is also the owner in zemindari right and as such in possession of the 10 annas share, and it is in the latter character that he brings this suit. There being no stipulation in the putni lease against partition, and no implied contract not to partition, the putni grant of the undivided 6 annas share did not alter or affect his right or position as proprietor of the remaining 10 annas share. He was left in full and uncontrolled possession of all his rights as such proprietor, and was free to deal with the share in any way he pleased. Supposing he sold it as distinct from the 6 annas share over which the putni right extended, the purchaser would as against him be entitled as of right to a partition of the zemindari interest, and he would have the same right against the purchaser. By the partition the putnidari right would be limited to the land allotted to the 6 annas sharer, and in that way a partition of it would be effected. So also if he gave a putni lease of the remaining 10 annas share, the putnidars holding ijmali with the putnidars of the 6 annas share would, we consider, be entitled to partition. There is nothing to prevent the plaintiff from doing what a person deriving title solely from him could do, and it does not seem to make any difference that he occupies the double character of lessor of the share given in putni and proprietor in zemindari right of the remaining share, or, that he and not the putnidar is the person asking for partition. The case must, we think, be dealt with on the same footing and governed by the same principles as if the grantor of the putni had been a co-sharer of the plaintiff and all necessary parties were joined.

"The parties are in ijmali or joint possession in different shares of the entire property which it is sought to partition, and that property is the whole of the estate of the defendants. The latter circumstance distinguishes the case from the case of Parbati Churn Deb v. Ainuddeen (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 577) and also in one respect from the case of Mokunda Lal Pal Chowdhry v. Lehuraux (I. L. R., 20 Cal, 379), as there is no difference between a lease of a share of a particular piece of land forming part of an entire estate, and a lease of a share of certain mouzahs forming part of an entire estate.

"There is unity of possession but not of interest, and the parties are in fact as regards the 6 annas share and the 10 annas share [578] tenants in common. It is said that there is no real difference in the interest, as, there being no reversion in favour of the zemindar, the putni grant confers an absolute estate terminable only on the sale of the parent estate for arrears of revenue due in respect of it. But, however that may be, there is no doubt that the zemindari interest and the putnidari interest are not the same.

"The only question then is, whether in this country to entitle a person to partition, there must be unity of interest as well as of possession in the property to be partitioned. It was so held in the case of Mokunda Lal Pal Chowdhry v. Lehuraux (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 379) referred to above, and this is the only case in point to which we have been referred. It has been held otherwise in England as the cases there cited show. The facts in Mokunda Lal's case were very complicated, and there were many difficulties in the way of a partition. It was the converse case to this, as the persons claiming partition were the permanent talukdars of a share of a portion of the land comprised in the entire estate, the defendants being the putnidars and zemindars of the estate. The claim might have been and probably was rejected partly on the ground that a partition could not be enforced of a part of the estate held by the defendants as in the case of Parbati Churn Deb v. Ainuddeen (I. L R., 7 Cal., 577), but the substantial ground of the decision undoubtedly was that the interest being different there could be no partition. The learned Judges held that joint possession alone is not a sufficient basis for a claim to partition, and say 'in order that persons may be co-parceners and so have a right to partition, it seems to us that not only must they be in joint possession of the property, but that that joint possession must be founded on the same title,' by which we understand a title of the same description, if not exact unity of interest. They then go on to apply that principle to the facts of the case, and hold that for that and other reasons the suit must fail.

"Were it not for that decision we should have been disposed to dismiss this appeal and allow the decree for partition to stand. We cannot, we consider, do this without acting contrary to it.

"If the putnidars had been the persons asking for partition, we think, on principle, they would have been entitled to it. For [579] the reasons already given we think the case cannot be regarded as a case by a landlord against a tenant or a tenant against a landlord to alter the nature of the tenancy, and the putnidars would certainly have no other means of relief from a state of things which might be most injurious to all parties. If the putnidars are entitled to a partition, the zemindars are, we think, equally so entitled.

"We must therefore refer to a Full Bench the question whether, on the facts as stated, there can be a decree for partition."

Babu Harendra Narain Mitter for the Appellants.

Mr. Woodroffe and Babu Tarak Nath Palit for the Respondents.

The arguments sufficiently appear from the judgment of BANERJEE, J.

R., 11 Bom., 551: L. R., 14 I.A., 89).

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN, BEVERLEY and BANERJEE, JJ.)

Banerjee, J.—The facts of this case, as set out in the referring order, are shortly these:

[580] "The plaintiff is the proprietor of an entire estate paying revenue to Government. In 1854 his father gave a putni lease of an undivided 6 annas share of the estate to the defendants' predecessors in title. The plaintiff alleges that the land being held ijmali, although he and the defendants collect separately from the tenants their respective shares of the rent, difficulty and inconvenience has arisen in the management of the property, and he brings this suit to have his 10 annas share of the land divided by metes and bounds from the 6 annas of the putnidars, the land of the entire estate remaining liable as before for the entire amount of the Government revenue payable in respect of it."

The Court below having made a decree for partition, one of the defendants has appealed against it on the ground that there can be no decree for partition in a suit by a zemindar against his putnidars, and the question we are asked to determine is " whether on the facts stated there can be a decree for partition."

I am of opinion that the question ought to be answered in the affirmative. As a general rule, every joint owner of property should be held entitled to obtain partition, or in other words " to be placed in a position to enjoy his own right separately and without interruption or interference " by his co-sharer—see Shama Sundari Debi v. Jardine, Skinner & Co. (3 B. L. R., Ap. 120 : 12 W. R., 160) and Story's Equity Jurisprudence, section 648. It is against good sense, if not also against good morals, as the Roman law viewed it, to compel joint owners to hold a thing in common, " since it could not fail to occasion strife and disagreement among them." But if partition has the advantage of placing each co-sharer in a position to enjoy his own property without interference by others, it has the disadvantage of subjecting him to expense, and of impairing more or less the value of the joint property by dividing it into comparatively small parts; and where partition is sought by a co-owner whose interest in the property is limited in point of time, the question may arise, whether the temporary advantage to be secured to him is sufficient to outweigh the disadvantage of subjecting the other co-owners to expense and trouble which may in the end lead to no permanent division, the successors of the applicant not being bound by anything done at his instance. The general rule must, [581] therefore, be taken subject to many exceptions and qualifications, depending upon the nature of the thing owned jointly, the nature of the interest of the party claiming partition, the nature of the terms and conditions on which the different joint owners hold their respective interests, and various other matters. But I do not see any good and sufficient reason for thinking that the present case should form any exception to the rule. It is not suggested that the property sought to be divided in this case is either impartible, or is from its nature such that the partition asked for will impair the value of any of the shares into which it is to be divided. Nor is it suggested that the applicant for partition has only a limited interest, and that a partition at his instance will not be of any permanent effect. The only grounds upon which the learned Vakil for the appellants rests his contention that there ought not to be any partition in this case are two, namely, first, that the plaintiff is precluded from demanding any such partition against the defendants by reason of his predecessor in title having granted a putni of an undivided share of 6 annas to the predecessors of the defendants ; and second, that there can be no partition between parties who do not own co-ordinate interests, but one of whom owns an interest subordinate to the other.

In support of the first ground, it is urged that the plaintiff's predecessor in title having granted a putni of an undivided share of 6 annas in the entire zemindari, to allow the plaintiff to enforce partition and limit the putni to a specific portion of the zemindari proportionate to the 6 annas share, would be to allow him to alter the terms of the putni lease, against the will of the lessees. A contention somewhat similar to this was raised in Heaton v. Dearden (16 Beav., 147) on behalf of the defendant whose predecessor in title had agreed to grant a lease of an undivided moiety of certain mines, in a suit for specific performance of the agreement to lease and for partition, and the contention was disallowed. And there is no reason why a different principle should be followed in this case. The putni lease contains no covenant against partition, and even if it did, it is doubtful whether it would have been binding for all time.

The contention on behalf of the appellants proceeds on the [582] assumption that there cannot be any fair and just division of the lands of the zemindari into two portions proportionate to the shares of the parties, and that partition must result in disadvantages to the putnidars; but no reason has been given to justify such an assumption, and the Court cannot accept it as prima facie well founded.

Moreover it was admitted by both sides in the course of the argument that the plaintiff's father, the grantor of the putni, owned only a 6 annas share, and the remaining 10 annas belonged to the plaintiff's grandmother; and that the plaintiff has inherited the 6 annas share from his father, and the 10 annas from his grandmother. That being so, the plaintiff as owner of the 10 annas share is not bound by the terms of the putni lease, and that lease can in no way be a bar to his right to obtain a separation of his 10 annas share.

As to the second ground, the only reason that might be urged in its support is, that if partition can be enforced as between co-owners whose interests are not co-ordinate in degree, parties having permanent interests may be put to frequent and needless expense and trouble by having to watch partition proceedings instituted at the instance of co-owners with temporary interest, such proceedings not leading to any division of the property which can have a lasting effect. But in the present case, no such reason can hold good: in the first place, because the party who is asking for partition is the holder of the higher of the two kinds of interest respectively owned by the parties to the suit, his interest being that of a zemindar, so that there can be no apprehension of the division effected not having an enduring effect; and, in the second place, because the interest owned by the party against whom partition is sought, though subordinate to that of the plaintiff, is certainly not of a temporary and qualified character such as would make it undesirable to have a partition against him and to subject him to the trouble and expense of a partition proceeding. He owns a putni which by the Law (Regulation VIII of 1819, preamble and section 3) is a permanent tenure at a fixed rent, heritable and transferable; and which is one of those interests which, to use the language of PONTIFEX, J., in Kasumunnissa v. Nil Ratan Bose (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 79) "are in fact substantial proprie-[583]torial interests, in the grant of which, as in this case, considerable premiums are paid." Of the Indian cases cited the only one that has any direct bearing upon this point is Mukunda Lal Pal Chowdhry v. Lehuraux (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 379), in which the learned Judges say: "We are not aware of any Indian case in which a person holding a subordinate interest in land has been held to have a right of partition as against the superior holder," and they assign as one of the reasons for holding that the suit for partition had been rightly dismissed, the fact that the interest owned by the plaintiffs was subordinate to that of the defendants. But there were other grounds on which the decision in that case was based; and for the reasons given above I am unable to assent to the view, that as a general proposition of law, there can be no partition as between parties, the interest of one of whom is subordinate to that of the others. I think the Court must in each case determine whether, having regard to the nature of the interests owned by the parties and to all other circumstances necessary to be taken into consideration, the balance of convenience is in favour of allowing partition, and if it determines that question in the affirmative, the mere fact of the parties owning interests which are not co-ordinate in decree, ought not to be a bar to partition. This view is in accordance, not only with English cases cited in the argument, namely Baring v. Nash (1 V. and B., 551) and Heaton v. Dearden (16 Beav., 147), which may be referred to so far as they deal with general principles, but also with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience, which our Courts are directed to follow in cases not provided for by any definite rule of law (see Act XII of 1887, section 37).

For the foregoing reasons, I think that upon the facts stated in the referring order, a decree for partition can properly be made.

Maclean, C. J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of Mr. Justice BANERJEE, and I concur in his conclusion. I desire to add that my decision must be taken to apply only to the particular facts of this particular case.

Macpherson, J.—I agree with Mr. Justice BANERJEE.

Trevelyan, J.—I concur with Mr. Justice BANERJEE.

[584] Beverley, J.—The language used in the case of Mukunda Lal Pal Chowdry v. Lehuraux (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 379) may not be strictly accurate or very precise, but what was intended to be decided in that case was that mere unity of possession, or as I should prefer to term it mere joint possession, is not enough to entitle the persons so in possession to have the land partitioned by metes and bounds. The right to a partition can only, in my opinion, exist as between co-parceners holding similar interests in the property. How "similar interests" should be defined it may not be easy to say. They should probably be permanent transferable interests. A temporary lease-holder of an undivided portion of an estate ought not, in my opinion, to be allowed to put his lessor to the trouble and expense of a partition. But, however that may be, the question does not really arise in this case. Here it is practically the zemindar of a 10 annas share of the estate seeking partition as against himself as the 6 annas zemindar and the putnidars who hold that 6 annas share under him. I can see no objection to a partition in this case, and I would answer the question put to us accordingly.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th April, 1897.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Jogendra Nath Roy Bahadur............Plaintiff

versus

J. C. Price............Defendant.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 424—Suit against public officer in respect of acts done by him in his official capacity—Notice of suit—Suit for damages against a public officer—Trespass—Joinder of causes of action—Amendment of plaint.

The plaintiff sued the defendant, a public officer, to recover damages for two distinct acts (viz., wrongful arrest and trespass) alleged to have been illegally and maliciously done by the defendant on two different occasions, and claimed one lump sum as damages for both the acts; no permission to [585] amend the plaint was asked for in the lower Court. On the 21st of October 1895, the paintiff instituted this suit, having, on the 18th of September 1895, served the defendant with a notice under section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882):

Held,—That the former act (viz., the plaintiff's arrest) was an act done by the defendant in his official capacity and was clearly of the kind contemplated by section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code, under which two months' notice to the defendant would be necessary previous to the institution of the suit; and that the suit was rightly dismissed by the lower Court for want of such notice. Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 499) distinguished.

Quære—Whether the latter act (viz., the trespass into the plaintiff's house) on the allegations in the plaint, was an act done by the Magistrate in his official capacity, and whether a notice under section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code would be necessary previous to suing for damages for such an act.

Held, further, that as the two acts were mixed up together in the plaint, and one lump sum claimed as damages for both, and as no permission to amend the plaint was asked for in the lower Court so as to convert the suit into one for damages with reference to the trespass only, the plaint ought not to be allowed to be amended on appeal to the High Court.

THE plaintiff instituted this suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye for recovery of Rs. 25,000 in one lump sum as damages from the defendant, alleging that the defendant, while District Magistrate of Rajshahye, after holding the usual preliminary inquiry in a criminal case (in which the plaintiff was one of the accused) committed the plaintiff, on the 21st July 1894, to take his trial before the Court of Session, enlarging him on bail, and after that, while the plaintiff was ill and under medical treatment in Calcutta, without giving the plaintiff any previous intimation of the cancellation of the former order for bail, illegally and maliciously caused him to be arrested by the police, on the 23rd of October 1894, under a warrant issued by the defendant, and had him taken to Rajshahye where the plaintiff was again enlarged by the Sessions Judge of that place on furnishing fresh security; and that subsequent to the commitment of the plaintiff to the Sessions and during his absence from home, the defendant, together with others, unlawfully and without any just and reasonable cause trespassed into the plaintiff's house at Nattore without his knowledge and consent and against the protest of his servants; and that by these illegal and malicious acts of the defendant the plaintiff suffered damages.

[586] The suit was instituted on the 21st of October 1895, and although it was set out in the plaint that the aforesaid acts having been done in bad faith and out of malice there was no necessity to serve a notice on the defendant under section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code, a notice under that section had been served on the defendant on the 18th of September 1895.

The defendant contended (inter alia) that the suit having been filed on the 21st of October 1895, i.e., before the expiration of two months from the date of delivery (18th of September 1895) of the notice under section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the acts complained of having been done by the defendant in his official capacity and in good faith, it was not maintainable.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the defendant was entitled, as a 'public officer,' to two months' notice under section 424 of the Civil Procedure Code, previous to the institution of the suit, the acts complained of having been done by the defendant in his official capacity.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sri Nath Das, Babu Pramatha Nath Sen and Babu Hara Prosad Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Babu Hem Chunder Banerjee and Babu Ram Charan Mitter, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows :—

The question raised in this appeal is whether the suit could be instituted without the notice, or rather before the expiry of the period of notice, prescribed by section 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case as set out in the plaint, is that the defendant who was the District Magistrate of Rajshahye committed the plaintiff to the Sessions on charges under sections 386 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the plaintiff was, under an order of the Magistrate, enlarged on bail. The trial at the Sessions Court did not take place on the date fixed, but was postponed on the application of the plaintiff. Subsequent to the postponement, the plaintiff says that, while he was in Calcutta, the defendant caused him to be arrested under a warrant and had him taken to Rajshahye where he was again enlarged on furnishing fresh security. He charges that this act was illegal and malicious [587] Then the plaint proceeds to state that, subsequent to the commitment of the plaintiff, the defendant, together with others, trespassed into the plaintiff's house at Nattore without his knowledge and consent and against the protest of his servants. On account of these two illegal acts, the plaintiff prays that a sum of Rs. 25,000 may be awarded to him as damages. It is set out in the plaint that, although no notice was necessary under section 424, a notice had been given.

The defendant admitted that a notice was given, but contended that the suit was not maintainable, as it had been brought before the expiry of the prescribed period, and there is no doubt that this was so. The subordinate Judge has thrown out the case on that ground, and the plaintiff now appeals, contending that, under the circumstances stated in the plaint, a notice was not necessary, and that even if it was, the Subordinate Judge had no authority to dismiss the suit, section 424 being merely one of procedure. We think there cannot be the slightest doubt that, under the circumstances stated in the plaint, the first act of which the plaintiff complains, viz., his arrest under the warrant, was an act purporting to have been done by the defendant in his official capacity. The defendant was admittedly the Magistrate of the District. In that capacity he had committed the plaintiff to trial, and in that capacity he thought it necessary to have the plaintiff arrested in order that fresh security might be given. We are not concerned with the question whether that was a legal or an illegal act, suffice it to say that it is an act, which, in our opinion, is clearly of the kind contemplated by section 424. The learned pleader for the appellant contends that as the act is said to have been done maliciously, section 424 does not apply, and that that section only applies to acts done inadvertently, and as authority he cites the case of Shahunshah Begum v. Fergusson (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 499). There certainly are some remarks of Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM which would lend support to this contention, but that was a case of a very different description from this, and we think the remarks made must be taken in connection with the facts of that particular case, and not as of general application. There the Official Trustee was sued by the plaintiff who claimed a certain interest [588] in a trust property which she had failed to get, and in the suit brought by the plaintiff against the Official Trustee, it was held that no notice was necessary. This is a case of a wholly different character, and we are not aware of any instance, certainly no such case has been cited to us, in which it has been held that the section does not apply to the case of a public officer charged with a tortious act done by him in his official capacity. The section does not seem to us to warrant the drawing of any distinction between acts of this kind done inadvertently or otherwise.

Then it is said that the Subordinate Judge had no aurhority to dismiss the suit. But if the law says that "no suit shall be instituted," we fail to see how it is to be tried or what other course than dismissing the suit could have been adopted.

Then as regards the second act in respect of which damages are claimed, viz., trespass into the plaintiff's house, it may be a question whether, on the allegations in the plaint, that act was one done by the Magistrate in his official capacity. But we think it is unnecessary to go into that question. Assuming that as regards it, a notice was not necessary, the suit was not one which in respect of the first act charged could be instituted. The two acts are mixed up together in the plaint, and one lump sum is charged as damages for both. It may be that we could allow the plaint to be amended by striking out of it the cause of action and damages claimed in respect of the arrest so as to convert the suit into one for damages with reference to the trespass only. Even in that case the question would have to be tried whether the defendant in committing the act of alleged trespass was or was not acting in his official capacity, and evidence on that point would have to be taken. We do not think that this is a case in which we ought now to allow the plaint to be amended. The plaintiff persisted throughout that the suit, as framed, was maintainable, and permission to amend the plaint was never asked for in the lower Court. We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

B. D. B. Appeal dismissed.

The 9th March, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

Amrito Lall Dutt

Surnomoye Dassee.*

Hindu Law—Adoption—Power to adopt—Validity of power to widow and executors to adopt—Exercise of such power by widow with consent of the surviving executor—Construction of Will—Direction for accumulation with proper limitation—Right of adopted son to the corpus and surplus income during the life-time of the adoptive mother.

The testator by his will authorized and empowered his wife to adopt a son in the following words:—" I hereby authorize and empower my wife and executrix, and my executors and trustees, to whom I give full permission and liberty to adopt after my decease a son, and in case of his death during his minority or on attaining his full age, and without leaving male issue, to adopt a second son, and in case of his death during minority or on attaining such age and without leaving male issue to adopt a third son, and no more, &c

Held,—The power of adoption was valid. The testator associated the other executors with his wife for the purpose of ensuring a wise exercise of her discretion in the selection of a son for adoption, and not with the intention of making it an essential condition of adoption that they should take a part in the ceremony of adoption, from which under the Hindu law they were precluded.

Held, also—The power was given to the executors qua executors, and therefore survived to the holders for the time being of the office of executors; the death of one of them before the power was exercised did not therefore render the power void.

The power was validly exercised by the wife adopting with the consent of the surviving executor. The mere fact of the surviving executor not having actually and physically taken in adoption was not a failure to comply with the terms of the power.

In the ninth clause of the will the testator, after directing certain payments to be made out of the income of the estate, proceeded as follows: " But in no case shall such adopted son have or exercise any control or dominion over my estate and effects until the death of my wife; after which event I direct my said executors and trustees to make over the whole of my estate and effects, both real and personal, moveable or immoveable whatsoever and wheresoever and of what nature or quality soever, to such adopted son who shall survive my wife, if he shall have attained his age of [590] eighteen years during the life-time of my wife, or on his so attaining such age after her decease, to whom and his heirs I give, devise and bequeath the same."

Held,—The second adopted son was not presently entitled to the surplus income or profits of the properties until the death of his adoptive mother, nor to have the corpus (even after provision being made for the payments mentioned in the will) of the estate made over to him. It is not incompetent for a Hindu testator with proper limitation to direct an accumulation of the income of property which under his will vests in his executors or trustees. In the absence of special provision the limit must be that which determines the period during which the course or devolution of property can be directed and controlled by a testator.

THIS was a suit for the construction of the will of one Hari Das Dutt, a Hindu inhabitant of Calcutta. The portions of the will material to this report are given in the judgment.

The will was dated October 30th, 1875, and the testator died the same day. Of the executrix and executors named in the will only the testator's widow, the defendant Surnomoye Dassee and Dwarka Nath Dutt took out probate. The other executor, Madhu Sudan Dutt, did not take out probate and took no part in the administration of the testator's estate or in the adoptions made to the testator, though he did not actually renounce his office. He died on the 1st of April 1877. The widow Surnomoye Dassee adopted a boy as the testator's son on August 9th, 1876, who died on 29th January 1881, ten years old and unmarried. On February 9th, 1881, the widow adopted the plaintiff, who attained his majority in July 1891, and at the time of the suit had one son living. Both the adoptions were intended to be in execution of the power contained in the will, and were made with the consent of the executor, Dwarka Nath Dutt.

The plaintiff instituted this suit claiming as the validly adopted son of the testator to be entitled to the corpus of his estate after providing for the annuities directed to be paid out of the estate, and in any event to be entitled to the surplus income during the widow's life-time. The defendant, Surnomoye Dassee, denied the validity of the plaintiff's adoption and claimed to be entitled to the estate as the heiress of the first adopted son. The other defendants, who were the daughters and their sons, denied the validity of the plaintiff's adoption.

[591] Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Mr. Dunne and Mr. K. S. Bonnerjee for the Plaintiff.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Sir Griffith Evans, Mr. Stephen and Mr. Chakrabarti for the Defendant, Surnomoye Dassee.

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Garth for the other Defendants.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee.—The power to adopt was a valid power. The words in clause 8 must be taken distributively. Dossmoney Dossee v. Prosonomoye Dossee (2 Ind. Jur. N. S., 18) shows that a benignant construction should be put on a power to adopt, and the Court will always try to give reasonable meaning to the language of a will The widow is the only person who can actually adopt, but other persons may be associated with her in selecting a boy to be adopted. The testator must be taken to have known the law, and the language of the will shows clearly that he intended his widow to adopt with the concurrence of his executors. The executors are not mentioned by name anywhere in the will after clause 2, and the widow is only once named after that clause, viz., in clause 8, the adoption clause. This shows clearly that the actual adoption was to be made by the widow, while the executors were to assist her in making a proper selection.

The power was validly exercised. The power was not given to Madhu Sudan Dutt and Dwarka Nath Dutt personally, but to the testator's executors, that is, to those who took out probate of his will and undertook the management of his estate. The will is governed by the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) and no title would accrue to the executors named in the will until they had taken out probate. The fact that Madhu Sudan Dutt never took out probate during his life-time is equivalent to his renouncing his executorship. Therefore the adoption by the widow, with the concurrence of the executor who did take out probate, is a valid exercise of the power.

An adopted son occupies exactly the same position as a natural born son in the adoptor's family, and succeeds not only lineally but collaterally to the family of his adoptive father; Padma Kumri Debi v. Court of Wards [I. L. R., 8 Cal., 302 (311): L. R., 8 I. A., 229 (247)]. The adopted son is heir-at-law of [592] the testator and does not require any gift; he is entitled as heir-at-law to the whole of his adoptive father's estate except so far as that estate has been validly given away; Tagore v Tagore (9 B. L. R., 377: L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47). [JENKINS, J.—Does not the plaintiff at the most take only a partial interest? Suppose he dies in the life-time of the widow without leaving male issue?] Where an estate is vested in a person subject to be divested on the happening of a certain event, the person in whom the estate is vested is entitled to actual possession. The plaintiff takes a vested interest subject only to his estate being divested if he dies in the widow's life-time without leaving male issue. As a validly adopted son he takes as heir-at law and dehors the will. The clause restraining his possession is invalid. At any rate he is entitled to the surplus income after sufficient provision has been made for the payment of the annuities.

By the second adoption the widow divested the estate which she took as the heiress of the first adopted son. See Dhurm Dass Pandey v. Shama Soondery Debia (3 Moo I.A., 229). Where there were two widows and one adopted son that son divested the estate of both widows; Mondakini Dasi v. Adinath Dey (I.L.R., 18 Cal., 69). The dictum of the Privy Council in Bhoobun Moye Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhry (10 Moo. I. A., 279) at page 311 of the report supports my contention. See also Bykant Monee Roy v. Kristo Soonderee Roy (7 W.R., 392). [JENKINS, J.—As a matter of fact this point was not raised there between the widow and the son, but the Privy Council dictum is cited with approval.] Ram Soondur Singh v. Surbanee Dossee (22 W. R., 121) goes to the full length of my contention that the second adoption divested the adoptive mother's estate. [JENKINS, J.—But does not this only show that the second adoption would only entitle the adopted son to succeed after the death of his adoptive mother. It is only a declaration regarding the validity of the adoption, and does not deal with the question in whom the property was after the second adoption, whether in the mother or the son.] The circumstances of that case did not require that the question should be decided, but it is submitted that as far as it goes the judgment in that case fully supports my contention. [593] In the sequel to Bhoobun Moye's case the point did not arise There is another dictum of the Privy Council in my favour, Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (I. L. R., 1 Mad., 174: L. R., 4 I. A., 1). Besides these dicta there are express authorities in my favour in the Bombay and Allahabad Courts—Jamnabai v. Raychand Nahalchand (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 225), Ravji Vinayakrao v. Lakshmibai (I. L. R, 11 Bom, 381) and Lakhmi Chand v. Gottobai (I. L. R., 8 All., 319). There is one case in which the question was left open, but the point did not really arise there—Ramasami Aiyan v. Venkataramiyan (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 91: L. R., 6 I. A., 196).

The Advocate-General.—The will must be looked at as a whole and the good and the bad parts must be considered together. One must find out the real intention of the testator—Tagore v. Tagore (9 B. L. R., 377: L. R., I. A.

Sup. Vol., 47). The executors in this case had not been chosen at random; the testator had appointed his father and his uncle; and, what is more, had appointed them trustees. It shows that they were persons in whom he had great confidence. This was a power deliberately given to three persons to adopt. Clause 8 taken with clause 14 (a) shows that the consent of the executors cannot be imported into the power. The intention was not that if one executor died the widow and the surviving executor could adopt, but that the widow and the two executors must adopt, and on the death of the widow the two executors were to adopt. The words in clause 8 giving the power cannot be read distributively. A man may give a power to adopt subject to a restriction as has been done in this case, where the widow has been given a power to adopt, but that power is restricted by her being bound to adopt in conjunction with two other persons. She does not stand in a superior position. It is the executors who are the important element in the adoption. Under these circumstances the power is bad in law and cannot be executed. See Golap Chander Sircar's Book on Adoption, pp. 233 and 234. His view seems to be correct. See also Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorgasoondery Dossee (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 513: L. R., 19 I. A., 108). A man who has given such an unusual power to adopt must have had some special reasons for making the appointment in the way [594] he did, and must have had special confidence in the persons he has chosen. The death of the father got rid of the whole power of adoption. This is not a case of consent, but a case of a power, and a power given for a reason. In Beem Churn Sein v. Heera Lall Seal (2 Ind. Jur. N. S., 225) two points were decided, that a deed of adoption must be strictly construed, and that when the assent of an executor is necessary an adoption without such an assent is bad. Powers must be strictly construed; Farwell on Powers, p. 129. A power to adopt is not testamentary in its character, Bhoobun Moye Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhry (10 Moo. I. A., 279), and because it is contained in a will it does not necessarily become testamentary in its character. A will is the "legal declaration of the intentions of the testator with respect to his property which he desires to be carried into effect after his death;" Succession Act (X of 1865), section 3; Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), section 3. If the will contained nothing more than a power to adopt the power would not be testamentary; probate would not be necessary. An executor is "the person to whom the execution of the last will of a deceased person is by the testator's appointment confided;" Succession Act, section 3, Probate and Administration Act, section 3. When he is named in a power to adopt he has nothing to do with the testator's property; it is a personal trust, and he does not execute the power virtute officii. Section 92 of the Probate and Administration Act only refers to powers that can be exercised by executors quâ executors; and if my contention is correct its provisions do not affect a power. In this case the power was not given to the executors quâ executors. The word "executors" in clauses 8 and 14 (a) is merely a word of description. Although the power of adoption is contained in the will and the persons nominated by the will as executors are told to carry it out, this fact does not give them any different powers under the power unless it is shown that it was intended to be exercised by them quâ executors.

The words "widow" and "executrix" in clause 8 show that the power was not given to the executors quâ executors; and moreover after the due administration of the estate they would hold it not as executors but as trustees. By the word "executors" the testator must have meant the persons named in clause 2. The [595] fact of their names not being repeated is of no importance: and clause 9 shows that it was a matter of personal confidence, and that the executors were not meant to act in the adoption quâ executors. The power cannot be taken distributively. The will was drawn by an English solicitor, and if the intention had been that the power should be taken distributively, some words such as "after her death" would have been inserted. The moment their executorial duties were completed the executors held as trustees. The adoption might have been made at the end of fifty years from the testator's death. The clog was put on the widow's power of adoption, because the testator wanted a proper selection. The potential part in the act of adoption is the selection of a child, and it is a most significant fact that the testator has appointed his father to be one of the people to make the selection.

If the first adoption was good, on the death of the boy the widow succeeded to his estate as his heiress. Can an adoption by her to her husband carry with it another person's estate?

In Padma Kumari Debi v. Court of Wards (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 302: L. R., 8 I. A., 229) Chundrabali had made a surrender of her estate to the second adopted son. At the most the second adopted son was only the brother of the first adopted son. If you once concede that the estate the widow took on the death of the first adopted son was that son's estate, it cannot be divested from her by the second adoption. Bhoobun Moye Debia's case does not affect my contention, because the last time the question arose before the Privy Council they treated it as an open one. Bykant Monee Roy v. Kisto Soonderee Roy (7 W. R., 392) is clearly in my favour. The head note is wrong, and all that was really laid down was that the second adopted son could succeed after the widow. Ram Soondur Singh v. Surbanee Dossee (22 W. R, 121) if it has any bearing on this case, is also in my favour, for it goes no further than Bykant Monee Roy v. Kisto Soonderee Roy (7 W. R., 392). Mondakini Dasi v. Adinath Dey (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 69) has no bearing upon the present case, because, although the title of an adopted son is a preferential title to that of a widow to his adoptive father's estate, it is not a preferential title to that of a mother succeeding as heiress to her son's estate. Kally Prosonno Ghose v. Gocool Chunder Mitter (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 295) [596] is in my favour. The High Court of Calcutta has never yet decided that a widow by a second adoption divests the estate she has obtained as the heiress of her first adopted son, and the cases cited, I contend, go to show that in its opinion she does not so divest that estate. The decisions of the Bombay and Allahabad Courts cannot bind the High Court at Calcutta: they are really of little more value than American authorities in the English Courts. And as regards the case of Jamnabai v. Raychand Nahalchand (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 225), the dictum of the Privy Council in Ramasami Aiyan v. Venkataramiyan (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 91: L. R., 6 I. A., 196) was not brought to the notice of the Judges who decided that case, although it was the Privy Council's latest dictum on the question, and they followed the earlier one in Vellanki Venkatakrishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (I. L. R., 1 Mad., 174: L R., 4 I A., 1). This, it is submitted, deprives their decisions of all value as an authority. As regards Raiji Vinayakrao v. Lakshmibai (I. L. R., 11 Bom., 381), FARRAN, J., felt himself bound to follow the decision in Jamnabai v. Raychand Nahalchand (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 225). [JENKINS, J.—But he approved of it.] I frankly confess that I am unable to understand the grounds upon which the decision in Lakshmi Chand v. Gottobai (I. L. R., 8 All., 319) was arrived at. As regards the Privy Council dicta, Bhoobun Moye's case (10 M. I. A., 279) was decided in 1865, Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (I. L. R., 1 Mad., 174: L. R., 4 I. A., 1) in 1876, and Ramasami Aiyan v. Venkataramiyan (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 91: L. R. 6 I. A., 196) in 1879, so the dictum which is in my favour is the latest and the one pronounced after the point had twice before arisen before their Lordships. [Mr. Bonnerjee.—I also rely on Worthington v. Evans

(1 Sim. & St. 165), Green v. Green (2 J. & L. 539), and Dawson v. Massey (L. R., 2 Ch. Div., 758) in support of my contention that the power was validly exercised.] Those cases do not affect the present case. Here there is no question of a legacy with a condition. In addition to this dictum Mayne's opinion is in my favour. [JENKINS, J.—Mr. Mayne does not seem [597] to give any definite opinion; see section 179]. He anyhow treats it as an open question; see section 174. [JENKINS, J.—The surplus income is directed to be accumulated until the death of the widow. Is there anything rendering such a direction invalid?] I know of no authority which shows that such a direction is bad. At any rate if the direction to accumulate is bad there was an intestacy as regards such accumulations, and they were inherited by the first adopted son as heir-at-law, and on his death by the widow as his heiress.

Sir Griffith Evans on the same side.—The doctrine laid down in Dawson v. Massey (L. R., 2 Ch., Div., 758) was brought in for the interpretation of legacies with a condition and cannot be applied to powers. It has no bearing on this case where the power was not intended by the testator to be testamentary and was created solely for the purpose of bringing in a heir. It is a mistake to suppose that a Hindu in giving a power to adopt is actuated solely by religious motives. There are many other reasons, such as the perpetuation of the testator's name. Adopted sons frequently prove to be disobedient and dissipate the estate of their adoptive fathers. It was for this reason that the testator selected his father and his uncle to make the adoption in order that a well-behaved child might be adopted. That the testator was not actuated solely by religious motives is clear from clause 14 of the will. If you read the words in clause 8 distributively, then the words "to whom I give full permission to adopt" have no sense or meaning whatever. Although the condition with regard to the power of adoption renders it bad still you cannot give effect to the power without the condition, but the power must be strictly construed. Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorgasoondery Dossee (I.L.R., 19 Cal., 513: L.R., 19 I.A., 108). [JENKINS, J.--Do you say that from the language of the will the testator did not intend that the adoption should take place according to Hindu law?] It is not necessary for me to say that. What I contend is that the power was given to the widow and the executors jointly. It was not a power given to the widow to adopt simpliciter, but she had to adopt modo et forma: and her adoption of the plaintiff with the consent of Dwarka Nath Dutt only is not a compliance with the terms of the power. [JENKINS, [598] J.—It seems to me that in Monemothanath Dey v. Onothanath Dey (2 Ind. Jur. N. S., 24) Sir BARNES PEACOCK drew a distinction between an adoption and the nomination of a persona designata. and indicated that it was only in the case of a persona designata that a power must be strictly construed. He appears to have particularly distinguished that case from one where an adoption is made under the Hindu law.] The two ideas do not exclude one another. Sir BARNES PEACOCK was only dealing with a testamentary devise, and it was not necessary to consider the effect of a simple permission to adopt. The canon that powers of adoption must be strictly construed was first laid down as far back as 1864 in the case of Mohindro Lall Mookerjee v. Rookiney Dabee (Cor., 42) and has never been departed from since. A man may give his widow permission to adopt, but he may clog that permission with any restriction he pleases, and if he chooses to add such restrictions, the permission cannot be read as a general permission to adopt. It is not possible to alter the power in this case, or to remove any of the restrictions with which it is clogged.

I also contend in the alternative that if the power is construed as a power to the widow to adopt with the concurrence of the executors, still the concurrence of both the executors was necessary in order to make a valid exercise of the power. [JENKINS, J., referred to Eaton v. Smith (2 Beav., 263)].

Mr. Jackson for the other defendants.—The proper place for clause 14 (a) is directly after clause 8, for what was in the testator's mind was that he could confer a power of adoption upon his executors; and such a power is bad. The testator intended to confer the power of adoption on the three persons named in the will, but that he was unable to do by law. The widow is a trustee—see clause 7 of the will,—and in any event the plaintiff is not entitled to either the corpus or the surplus income until the trusts created by the will are fulfilled. The plaintiff's natural father was fully aware of the provisions of the will, for he was the son of the executor, Dwarka Nath Dutt, and has practically managed the whole of the estate since Dwarka Nath Dutt's death. [599] Therefore the plaintiff on his adoption is bound by all the provisions of the will. A child may be taken in adoption, but at the same time the widow can enter into an arrangement with the natural father that the estate which such child would ordinarily take shall be restricted. Chitko Raghunath Rajadiksh v. Janaki (11 Bom., H. C., 199); Ravji Vinayakrao v. Lakshmibai (I. L. R., 11 Bom., 381); Ramasami Aiyan v. Venkataramiyan (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 91: L. R., 6 I. A., 196); Lakshmi v. Subramanya (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 490); Bhaiya Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 556: L. R., 16 I. A., 53). The heirs-at-law are entitled to prevent the corpus of the estate being handed over to the plaintiff; and he is not entitled to the surplus income, for at the time of his adoption his natural father knew of the accumulation of the surplus and by the deed of adoption consented to all the provisions of the will being carried out.

Mr. Bonnerjee in reply.—It is clear from the language of the plaintiff's deed of adoption that it does not make any agreement restraining the adopted child's rights; so the cases cited by Mr. Jackson have no application. The deed of adoption shows clearly that the persons to whom the power was granted took the same view of the manner in which the power was to be exercised, as the one I contend is the right one. The only reasonable construction that clause 8 of the will can bear is that the widow should adopt with the concurrence of the executors. Again, even if the power was a power to all three persons to adopt, which would be illegal, the Court will uphold the power so far as it is good, and reject it so far as it is bad. See Wayte v. Webb (6 Mad, 71), where under the Mortmain Act the Court upheld a legacy so far as it was valid. But I contend that the power is a power to the widow to adopt with the consent of the executors and is a good power. The part the executors had to take in the adoption was virtute officii. This is clear from the language of the will. The widow is expressly named in the power to adopt, while the executors are not. There is also in clause 13 a power to appoint fresh executors who would have exactly the same powers as the original executors. The power [600] was validly exercised, and the concurrence of the surviving executor, the other having died, was all that was necessary. Eaton v. Smith (2 Beav., 236), Dawson v. Massey (L. R., 2 Ch., Div., 761).

That the widow divests the estate that is in her by a second adoption is based on the principle that a widow has the power to surrender her estate so as to accelerate the next reversioner's estate. A widow can always voluntarily surrender her estate to the next reversioner—see Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Harinath Sarma Roy (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 1102). A widow need never adopt, although empowered to do so, and the adoption is purely voluntary on her part. The very act of adoption on her part is a relinquishment and surrender of her estate to the adopted son.

The case of Ramasami Aiyan v. Venkataramiyan (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 91: L.R., 6 I.A., 196) so strongly relied on by the other side is of very little value. The point does not seem to have been raised in either of the Courts below or in the argument before the Privy Council or to have been in any way considered by them; in Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (I. L. R., 1 Mad., 174: L. R., 4 I. A., 1), the point was raised in the Court below, was suggested by Sir JAMES COLVILLE during the argument, was argued upon, and their Lordships must have considered the point carefully before pronouncing their dictum.

The direction to accumulate is bad. See Kumara Assima Krishna Deb v. Kumara Krishna Deb (2 B. L. R., O. C., 11). [JENKINS, J.—That was a direction contravening the rule against perpetuities] The beneficial interest in an estate cannot by Hindu law be held in suspense or remain without an owner. Mayne's Hindu law, section 387; Bramamayi Dasi v. Jages Chandra Dutt (8 B. L. R., 400), Mokoondo Lall Shaw v. Gonesh Chunder Shaw (I.L.R., 1 Cal., 104); Kally Nath Naugh Chowdhry v. Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdhry (I.L.R., 8 Cal., 878.)

Jenkins, J.—As this action was originally framed, it was alleged that various breaches of trust had been committed and consequent relief was claimed. When, however, the matter first [601] came before me as a result of discussion that then took place, the charges of misconduct were withdrawn, and the claim resolved itself into one for construction of the will and administration.

The testator, whose will gives rise to these proceedings, is one Hari Das Dutt, a wealthy Hindu, of the Sudra caste, and a resident of Calcutta, who died in October 1875, leaving a sole widow, the defendant, Sreemutty Surnomoye Dassee, and two married daughters, the defendants, Sreemutty Prommoye Dassee and Sreemutty Ranee Money Dassee. The first named of these daughters at the time of her father's death had three sons, the defendants, Radha Prosad Mullick and Kasi Prosad Mullick, and one since deceased; she also has had two sons born after her father's death, the defendants, Peary Lal Mullick and Behari Lall Mullick. The other daughter, I am told, has had no children.

On the 30th of October 1875, the day of his death, Hari Das Dutt executed his last will, and its contents are set out at length in the second paragraph of the claim. By it he appointed his wife, his father, Babu Madhu Sudan Dutt, and his uncle, Dwarka Nath Dutt, to be his executrix and executors, and of these the testator's wife and uncle alone proved the will. The father apparently never performed any executorial duties or intermeddled in the management of the estate, but at the same time he never expressly renounced probate. On the 9th of August the widow, with the consent of Dwarka Nath Dutt, purported to take a boy of five, named Jatipersaud Mullick, in adoption as the son of the testator in pursuance of a power in the will, to which it will be necessary later to refer at length, but this adopted son died on the 29th of January 1881 when he was only ten years old.

On the 1st of April 1877 the testator's father died, and on the 9th of February 1881 the plaintiff's natural father purported to give and the testator's widow purported to take the plaintiff, then a boy of eight, in adoption as the son of the testator, the executor, Dwarka Nath Dutt, being present on the occasion and consenting. This adoption, like the former, was intended to be in execution of the power contained in the testator's will, and it is admitted that prior to this action the legality of the adoption had never been called in question: on the contrary the plaintiff has throughout been [602] brought up and treated as the duly adopted son of the testator. It will here be convenient to refer to those portions of the will which are especially relevant to the points raised in this case. In clause 2 the testator says :—

"I appoint my wife, Sreemutty Surnomoye Dassee, the executrix, and my father, Babu Madhu Sudan Dutt, of Mullick's street, aforesaid, and my uncle Babu Dwarkanath Dutt of Thuntonneah in Calcutta, aforesaid, the executors and trustees of this my will."

Clause 8 provides as follows : --

"Whereas having no son born to me of my body I am desirous of adopting one in my lifetime, but in case I depart this life before carrying such my desire into effect I hereby authorise and empower my wife and executrix, Sreemutty Surnomoye Dassee, and my executors and trustees to whom I give full permission and liberty to adopt after my decease a son, and in case of his death during his minority or on attaining his full age and without leaving male issue to adopt a second son, and in case of his death during minority or on attaining such age and without leaving male issue to adopt a third son and no more. In any of the above cases of adoption should the adopted son die leaving a son or sons, the power of adoption shall cease or remain in abeyance during the life or livestime of such son or sons of such adopted son, but shall revive on the death of such son or sons during minority."

Clause 9 is as follows : -

"I direct my executors and executrix and trustees to pay out of the income and interest of my estate and effects monthly all necessary household expenses as well as for the worship of our family idol, Sree Sree Radhagovindjee, and to pay my wife monthly during her natural life for her sole and separate use the sum of rupees two hundred, and also the sum of rupees fifty monthly to such adopted son, who shall live and attain his full age of eighteen years, after his so attaining such age of eighteen years during the lifetime of my said wife, provided he remains under her control and bears a good character, and if my said executrix and executors and trustees think fit and are satisfied with his conduct and behaviour, and for the purposes of such monthly expenditure my executrix, executors and trustees shall set apart and retain out of the interest and income of my estate a sum sufficient to meet such expenditure for six months and invest the rest and residue of such income and interest in Government Securities in their joint names, but in no case shall such adopted son have or exercise any control, dominion over my estate and effects until the death of my wife, after which event I direct my said executors and trustees to make over the whole of my estate and effects, both real and personal, or immoveable or moveable whatsoever and wheresoever and of what nature or quality soever to such adopted son who shall survive my wife, if he shall have attained his age of eighteen years during the lifetime of my wife or on [603] his so attaining such age after her decease to whom and his heirs I give devise and bequeath the same. But in case none of such adopted sons survive my said wife or in case of either surviving my said wife and dying under the said age without leaving a son or sons I desire and direct my executors after the death of my said wife or the death of such son after her, but under such age of eighteen years without leaving a son or sons to make over and divide the whole of my estate, both real and personal unto and between my daughters in equal shares to whom and their respective sons I give devise and bequeath the same, but should either of my said daughters die without leaving any male issue surviving but leaving my other daughter her surviving then in such case the surviving daughter and her sons shall be entitled to the share of the deceased daughter. or in case of the death of either daughter leaving sons the share of such daughter is to be paid to such her son or sons share and share alike."

The 13th clause is in the following terms :—

"I authorise and empower my said executrix, executors and trustees and the survivor of them and the trustee for the time being of this my will to appoint any other person or persons to succeed them or him in the execution of the trusts of this my will."

Clause 14*a* appears to have been added as an after-thought, and by it the testator provides as follows :—

"In case of any accident arising to cause my wife to depart her natural life before adoption of a male child my surviving executors are empowered to act with my full consent and direction to adopt a male issue."

It will be seen from these provisions that until the death of the widow the surplus income of the testator's residue, after providing for certain monthly payments, is directed to be accumulated. In this state of things the plaintiff has contended before me that as the adoptive son, and consequently the heir of his father, he has an absolute interest in his estate, subject only to be divested in certain events, and that as a result he is now entitled to have the whole estate transferred from the trustees to him subject only to adequate provision being made for certain periodical payments and expenses authorized by the will; and he next contends that in any case he is entitled to the enjoyment of the surplus income of the estate until the widow's death. This contention is opposed on the part of the defendants, and the grounds of opposition are—first, that there has been no valid adoption of the plaintiff; secondly, that the provision for accumulation is valid; and, thirdly, that even if there is any interest in the estate which has not been disposed of, then in the events which have happened it is on the widow as heiress of the deceased son, and not on the plaintiff that it has devolved.

[604] For the purpose of disposing of these points the following issues have been formulated:—

1st. Whether the power of adoption is valid at all in law?

2nd.—If so, was it validly exercised?

3rd. -If so, is the plaintiff on the true construction of the will and as the adopted son of the testator entitled—

(a) to the surplus income of the property until the death of his adoptive mother?

(b) to the absolute interest in the property subject only to the payments mentioned in the will? And I will deal with these issues in the order in which they have been stated.

I. Whether the power of adoption is valid at all at law?

The clauses of the will particularly bearing on this point are the 8th and the 14th, both of which I have already read, and the argument urged against the validity of the power is shortly this: It is said that though a husband can delegate to his widow a power to adopt, still he can delegate it to no one else; consequently it is argued the present power to adopt is bad, because though it is delegated to the widow, still it is not to her alone, but to her in association with others. Now, it is admitted on the part of the defendants, indeed, it is a part of their argument, that though the widow's discretion under a delegated power is absolute in the sense that she cannot be compelled to act upon it, unless or until she so chooses, still any condition or clog can be imposed upon the exercise by her of this delegated power, and it therefore appears to me that so far as the association of the two executors was a fetter on the absolute discretion and choice which might otherwise have existed it cannot have vitiated the power. It may be that the widow alone is capable of performing the actual ceremony of adoption, that her hand alone can receive the child, but I do not find in the phraseology used by the testator any direction requiring or even justifying the inference that he desired or intended that the executors should take a part in the ceremony, from which they are incapacitated by the rules of Hindu law.

It is clear from the prefatory recital with which the 8th clause of the will commences that the testator did desire the adoption [605] of a son in accordance with the provisions of the Hindu law, and though it may be unprofitable to speculate as to his motive, I think that he had a purpose beyond the mere designation of a beneficiary to take under his will, and I must decline to put on the language of the will a construction that would render its provisions useless. In my opinion the testator associated the other executors with his wife for the purpose of ensuring a wise exercise of her discretion in the selection of a son for adoption and not with the intention of making it an essential condition of the adoption that they should take a part in the ceremony from which they were precluded, and I therefore hold that the power of adoption is valid.

II. The next issue I have to consider is whether the power of adoption was validly exercised.

The contention of the defendants in this connection is two-fold: for, first it is argued that the power could not be exercised, inasmuch as the father, one of the executors named by the will, was then dead, and the power is not one that passed to the survivors; and next it has been argued by Sir Griffith Evans that it is evident from the terms of the deed of adoption, and also from the evidence and admissions in the case, that the surviving executor, Dwarka Nath Dutt, did not take such a part in the adoption as was required of him by the power, so that even if there was a survival of the power still its terms were not observed.

Now, both these points appear to me to be points of construction, so that it is in the first place necessary to determine what the language of the will means, and in that investigation regard must be had to the circumstances of the testator and to every fact, a knowledge of which may conduce to the right application of the words used. Cases are of little use except so far as they express or illustrate a general rule of construction, for the words and circumstances of one will are seldom the same as those of another.

There is, however, a principle to be drawn from decisions which is of importance in relation to the question in hand, and it is this, that where a power is vested in executors (though it may not be one reposed in them by the law), if on the true construction of the will it appears that the power was coupled with the executorial [606] office, it will survive to the holders for the time being of the office, as though it were a power attached to the office by law.

It obviously, therefore, is necessary first to determine whether or not as matter of construction the power of adoption contained in the will was not given to the executors in their official capacity.

In my opinion the power of adoption is connected with the office, and in confirmation of that view I may point to the fact that excepting the wife the executors are not named, but are described by reference to their office; and again, though the wife is named, still she is described as executrix in a manner, which points to the conclusion, that the power even in her case was not dissociated from the idea of the office. That is not necessarily decisive of the question whether the power was one that survived; for such inference to that effect that might be deduced from the association of the power with the office might be rebutted by a sufficient indication that the testator desired the selection implied by the power to be entrusted to the three persons named as his executors and to no less a number. But to effect such a result the indication must be one of reasonable clearness drawn from the testator's own words and not merely based on a speculation as to what a man might be imagined to intend in the testator's circumstances. It is suggested that this indication is to be found in the concluding clause of the will, but after the best consideration that I have been able to give to that clause, together with the rest of the document, I am unable to arrive at that conclusion. That clause appears to me to indicate the testator's strong desire that a son should be adopted; he may be supposed (not merely as a rigid presumption of law but as a matter of notoriety) to have known that a Hindu widow of the Bengal school could, with her husband's assent, adopt; but fearing the contingency of his wife's death he inserted the last clause for what it might be worth.

I should also state that I am not led by this last clause to the conclusion that the testator did not intend that the adoption to be effected under clause 8 should take effect as, and have the results of, an adoption according to Hindu law. In support of the view that the power in question could only be exercised by the three persons appointed as executrix and executors by the will, I have been [607] referred by the learned Advocate-General to two cases. The first is the case of Surendro Keshub Roy v. Durgasoondery Dossee (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 513: L. R., 19 I. A., 108) which no doubt establishes that the authority delegated to the widow must be followed strictly, so that where the power only authorized the simultaneous adoption of two sons, it was impossible to exercise the power otherwise than in strict compliance with its terms, though he result of an attempted adoption in accordance with the power would be in contravention of the Hindu law and so without any effective result. The second was a case of Beem Churn Sein v. Heeralall Seal (2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 225), in which the consent of another was required as a condition of the adoption, and it was held that the absence of that consent, though due to death, was a bar to the adoption.

Now, the argument which would apply these cases to the present is open to the comment that I have held as matter of construction that the power contained in this will did in the circumstances of this case survive to those by whom it was exercised, so that in my view of the case the requirements of the power have been observed.

It may, however, be said that the case of Beem Churn Sein v. Heeralall Seal (2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 225) so clearly resembles this, that I ought in this case to put a corresponding interpretation on this will. In the first place I could not assent to the proposition that there is any real similarity between the two cases, and next I must point out, as I have already done in the course of the argument, that in that case an adoption according to Hindu law could not have been contemplated, the delegation of the particular power then under consideration having been made, not to a widow, but to a son's widow: and on a careful perusal of the judgment it will be seen that Sir BARNES PEACOCK expressly guards himself from expressing an opinion what would have been the result had the adoption intended been one that could have been effective according to Hindu law.

It still remains to notice the argument that the terms of the power have not been complied with, inasmuch as the widow alone, and not in conjunction with the surviving executor, actually took the son in adoption. I have already expressed my view of the meaning of the power, and if that view be right then it follows that this [608] objection cannot prevail; the power does not in so many words say that the ceremony which the law only allows to be performed by the widow must be performed by the others and I, therefore, hold that the mere fact of the surviving executor not having actually and physically taken in adoption is not a failure to comply with the terms of the power, and I accordingly hold that the power was validly exercised.

III. This brings me to the third issue which turns upon the construction to be placed on clause 9 of the will. The testator thereby directs his executors, executrix and trustees to make out of the income of his estate certain payments, including a monthly payment of Rs. 200 to his wife during her life, and a sum of Rs. 50 monthly to such adopted son who should live and attain the age of eighteen years during the life-time of his wife, provided he remained under her control and bore a good character, and then he proceeds as follows: My executrix, executors and trustees shall * * * invest the rest and residue of such income and interest in Government securities in their joint names, but in no case shall such adopted son have or exercise any control, dominion over my estate and effects until the death of my wife."

Now, it will be seen that there is here a direction to accumulate, and the first point to be decided is whether, according to the law applicable to Hindu wills, this direction is in operation or whether effect can be given to it.

Mr. Bonnerjee no doubt treated the point in his opening speech as beyond the realm of argument, but the learned Advocate-General declined to accede to that view, and I consequently must examine the point.

Now, accumulation is, with an exception immaterial for the present purpose, absolutely forbidden by section 104 of the Indian Succession Act, but on turning to section 2 of the Hindu Wills Act it will be found that section 104 is one of the few sections not applicable to Hindu wills such as the one under consideration, and consequently there is no statutory prohibition which forbids accumulation directed in a will made by a Hindu.

It becomes, therefore, necessary to examine whether a direction to accumulate is contrary to the provisions of Hindu Law. Prob-[609]ably it would be wrong to attribute much force to the fact that section 104 is not made applicable to the will of a Hindu, but I certainly cannot accede to the argument that it is a recognition of the fact that accumulation was never allowed in the case of Hindu wills; for a similar train of reasoning would have excluded the application of other clauses of the Succession Act, which do govern Hindu wills. Now, it unquestionably is the case that a direction to accumulate is from time to time to be found in Hindu wills, and the practice of inserting such a direction is of some standing.

In Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundo Mullick [6 Moo. I. A., 526 (536)] the will of a Hindu testator who died in 1841 was under consideration, and the case was argued on demurrer before the Supreme Court of Calcutta, and in the course of their judgment the following remarks appear: -

"It was, we apprehend, competent to this testator, if he had been so minded, expressly to provide for the accumulation of the surplus income of his estate within the limits allowed by law, and to make their accumulations subject to the limitation over in the event of any son dying without leaving issue in the male line; but he does not appear to have done so either expressly or by necessary implication."

Again in Bissonauth Chunder v. Bamasoondery Dossee [12 Moo. I. A., 41 (61)] the following passage is contained in the judgment of the Privy Council: "In the first place it is to be observed that the testator has given no direction to accumulate; it remains, therefore, to be seen whether the Court can find from the words of the will, as was argued, an irresistible inference that such was the intention of the testator. This is the more important because in the case of Sonatun Bysack v. Juggut Soondree Dossee (8 Moo. I. A., 66) which is relied on as governing this case, there is an express direction to accumulate. It was there directed that the surplus was to be added to capital. There is an absence of that in this case. It is admitted that the testator could not dispose of the property of his son, or prevent the heir of the son from inheriting his property; therefore the only question here is whether the testator has directed the [610] accumulations of the property to be added to or made part of his own property, because if he has not, it was the property of the son, and the testator had no power of disposing of it. In this view of the case their Lordships think that this will, on whichever construction it is taken, shows an absence of any direction to accumulate."

It is true these cases do not decide that a direction to accumulate is good, but it is clear from them that the practice of directing accumulation is of long standing, and that at the time it was considered that such a direction would have effective operation. I asked Mr. Bonnerjee, who contends that a direction to accumulate is bad, to refer me to the authorities on which he relied, and I now propose to deal with them The first case is that of Kumara Asima Krishna Deb v Kumara Krishna Deb (2 B. L. R., O. C., 11), the purport of which is set out in the headnote as follows :—

"A Hindu, by will, attempted to create a trust for the accumulation, for ninety-nine years, of the surplus income (after certain yearly payments) of his estate in the purchase of zemindaries, &c., from time to time; and empowered his trustees to continue such trust after the expiration of the ninety-nine years' term." The will contained no disposition of the beneficial interest in the zemindaries so to be purchased. Held, that such trust was void.

Semble.—Perpetuity (save in the case of religious and charitable endowments) is not sanctioned by Hindu law. Goberdhone Bysack v. Shamchand Bysack (Bourke, 282) explained.

The contention in that case was that the trusts of the will were invalid and void, not only on the ground of perpetuity, but because there was no disposition of the beneficial interest in the estate. The case in the first instance came before Mr. Justice NORMAN, who said at page 24 of the report: "I may add that there is not in the will any disposition whatever of the beneficial interest in the bulk of the testator's property * * * Even at the end of ninety-nine years there is no gift of the beneficial interest to any one. The manager for the time being may go on at his own will and pleasure indefinitely accumulating the estate: no right is given to the heirs of the testator or the persons indicated as such in the will to use the property for their own benefit [611] even at that remote time. The case goes a long way beyond that of Mr. Thelluson's will" (9 Ves., 22).

Then later he says, page 29 :—

"In the case now before me the trust for perpetual accumulation would deprive the parties of all enjoyment of the profits of the estate. I think it clear that the trust for accumulation must be treated as a condition repugnant to the natural rights of every owner of property to the use and enjoyment of it, inconsistent with the nature of property itself and therefore void."

From this decision there was an appeal which came before the Chief Justice, Sir BARNES PEACOCK and Mr. Justice MARKBY.

Sir BARNES PEACOCK says (page 32) :—

"There is no doubt that this will, if construed according to English law, would be void under the law relating to perpetuities. The question is, is it valid under Hindu law?"

Further on he proceeds (pages 35, 36) :—

"The will in the present case gives the residue of the property, which is the subject of dispute, to the grandson and his successors, upon trust that the profits of the estate are not to be beneficially used during a period of ninety-nine years, but are to be laid out in the purchase of fresh estates and the formation of a fund for the payment of Government revenue upon it, and this provision is to be extended, as I understand, in perpetuity, if the Hindu law allows. I am not aware of any rule of the Hindu law by which grants inter vivos or gifts by will in perpetuity are expressly prohibited, but it appears to me to be quite contrary to the whole scope and intention of Hindu law."

In the result the decision of Mr. Justice NORMAN was upheld; but it appears to me, looking at the facts of the case and the judgments delivered, that the true ratio decidendi was, that the direction to accumulate was an attempt to create a perpetuity; that thereby it was sought to suspend the enjoyment for a longer period than the absolute vesting could be controlled, and that it consequently was bad. The case did not call for a decision that an accumulation, which did not aim at that which for shortness I may call a perpetuity, is void, and I therefore cannot regard the case as an authority, which even purports to deal with the point before me.

[612] I was next referred to a case of Bramamayi Dasi v. Joges Chandra Dutt (8 B.L.R., 400), but all that case decides, which can be regarded as material to the present point is, that an attempt to defer the period of payment to or enjoyment by a beneficiary of a vested interest is inoperative.

Then reliance was placed on the case of Cally Nath Naugh Chowdhry v. Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdhry (I.L.R., 8 Cal., 378) where the will before the Court contained a present gift of the testator's property to his grandsons followed by provisions postponing payment and directing accumulation, and it was there held, in accordance with principles, which are beyond dispute, that an absolute gift could not be qualified by a direction to postpone payment and accumulate. The legality of a direction to accumulate was not in question in the case.

Mr. Justice PONTIFEX says:—

"But his will containing, as in our opinion it does, sufficiently direct words of present gift, the clauses in it which attempt to postpone the enjoyment of possession and to direct accumulation must be rejected or disregarded as inconsistent or repugnant."

The last case brought to my notice is that of Mokoondo Lall Shaw v. Gonesh Chunder Shaw (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 104), which decided, that where a Hindu testator gave all his immoveable property to his sons but postponed their enjoyment thereof by a clause, that they should not make any division for twenty years, the restriction was void as repugnant to the gift.

Mr. Justice PHEAR, in the course of his judgment, says: "Now, without saying that a Hindu testator might not give the current profits or income of the property to the trustees and direct them to apply this to the payment of debts throughout a specified period, as twenty years, I do not think it is competent to him to give the corpus of the property to an adult person, and at the same time to forbid that person from enjoying the property in the way which the law allows. The prohibition against receiving and enjoying the income for twenty years appears to me simply to be a condition imposed on the property which is repugnant to the gift. [613] It is not merely the giving of one portion of the property to one person or purpose and the remaining portion to another person or purpose, but it is giving the entire property to one person and coupling this gift with a prohibition against his enjoyment." The key to this and the two previous decisions is obvious, and it simply is the repugnancy and consequent invalidity of a condition which attempts to fetter the enjoyment of an absolute gift—a principle which has no application here.

Mr. Bonnerjee very fairly admits that beyond these cases he is unable to refer to any decision, or even dictum, that a direction to accumulate is necessarily and under all circumstances void so as to entitle the heirs to claim the interest commensurate with the period of directed accumulation as though it were undisposed of, and I must therefore see whether there is any general policy or principle of law which calls for such a conclusion.

Is there then any principle of public policy which would discountenance accumulation? I take it that for this purpose regard must be had to Hindu and not to English policy, and so far as I am aware such a direction is in accordance with the modes of Hindu life and thought, and agrees in its aims with what is matter of every-day practice and custom. Indeed, had the life estate been given to the widow, then the accumulation, which is directed, would in its practical result be no greater a restraint on the expenditure of income than would have been almost necessarily incident to that situation. Does it then clash with any principle of law? First, it is necessary to see what the effect of the accumulation in this case is. The direction is during the life of the testator's widow to invest the balance of the income, and after her death the trustees are to hand it over to such adopted son who shall survive the widow and shall answer the description given in the will.

It will, therefore, be noticed that apart from any question of legality the accumulations are disposed of so as to vest beneficially on the widow's death. It is true that the object of the testator's bounty is not ascertained at the testator's death, but that in itself is not a necessary indication of illegal remoteness: it is only giving the accumulation to the person who is to take the fund itself, if it could be foreseen who that person is. That person may be the [614] present plaintiff if he survives the widow, or it may be some one adopted in succession to him, but it is clear in either case that the fund itself will be well given, and why not the accumulation? If the testator be permitted to give the fund itself at a future time, it would seem anomalous that he should not be able to give intermediate rents and profits.

If the individual to take on the widow's death were now ascertained, it surely could not be doubted that his title to the intermediate income would prevail against that of the heir-at-law; and how has the heir a better right by reason of that person being at present unascertained? If it be urged that the effect is to create an absolute interest at a future date without limiting an intermediate beneficial interest corresponding and commensurate with the interval, and that therefore the heir-at-law must take the profits to arise during the interval, then this argument, as it appears to me, is met by Mr. Bonnerjee's own concession that trustees might be directed to accumulate a fund for the payment of debts, and by the further fact that the trustees are in this case directed to hand over the intermediate income to the individual who is to take the fund from which they spring. I may remark incidentally that this is an objection to accumulation which was put forward in the English Courts, but without success, though the principle on which it is based has as much force in English as in Hindu law. It cannot be said that the adopted son to whom the fund is given on the widow's death is incapable of being a recipient of the bequest, for by section 99 of the Indian Succession Act it is provided, that, if property is bequeathed to a person described as standing in a particular degree of kindred to a specified individual, but his possession of it is deferred until a time later than the death of the testator by reason of a prior bequest or otherwise, and if a person answering the description is alive at the death of the testator, or comes into existence between that event and such later time, the property shall at such later time go to that person. Seeing, therefore, the fact that the right to accumulate has been recognized if not actually affirmed both by the Supreme Court and the Privy Council, and that a direction to accumulate is no new expedient, and having regard to the various considerations I have discussed, I hold that it is not incompetent for a Hindu with proper limitations to direct an accumulation of the [615] income of property, which under his will vests in his executors or trustees. That, however, is not necessarily conclusive of the present case; for it still remains to consider, whether the particular direction in this case is bad, as being in excess of what the law permits.

Now it appears to me, on principle, that if accumulations are permissible, then in the absence of special provision the limit must be that which determines the period during which the course or devolution of property can be directed and controlled by a testator, and applying that test to the present case I am of opinion that the accumulation directed in the present case during the widow's lifetime is not in excess of that permitted by law.

In the view therefore that I take of the case, I am of opinion that the plaintiff is not presently entitled to the surplus income or profits of the properties until the death of the testator's widow; and that he is not entitled (even after provisions being made for the payments mentioned in the will) to have the corpus of the estate made over to him. The plaintiff asks for an account, and as the Advocate-General does not oppose I am willing to accede to this, inasmuch as when the case first came before me certain charges of breach of trust were waived on the understanding that the plaintiff should be entitled to take such objection to the trustees' conduct as might be open on the taking of the ordinary accounts; but I will only direct accounts at the plaintiff's risk as to costs, and as it has been suggested that the accounts will probably not be required the decree for accounts will be conditional.

The decree, therefore, will contain a declaration that the plaintiff has been validly adopted, but that on the true construction of the will he is not entitled during the life of the widow to have the property left by the testator handed over to him, or to receive the rest and residue of the income and interest of the testator's estate by the will directed to be invested; then the decree will direct accounts (at the plaintiff's risk as to costs) of the estate and debts of the testator: but it will be provided that no proceedings are to be taken under this direction without the leave of the Judge in Chambers. There will be an inquiry what is proper to be allowed for all necessary household expenses as [616] well as for the worship of the testator's family Thakoor, Sree Sree Radhagovindjee. Further consideration will be adjourned, and there will be liberty to apply. As it is so desired, the costs of all parties up to and including the trial to be taxed on scale 2 as between solicitor and client will come out of the estate.

[I. There were appeals from the judgment in this case, both to the High Court and the Privy Council. The High Court reversed the judgment here on the ground that there was no valid power conferred by the will, at any rate, such as was exercisable after the death of one of the donees of it, (1898) 25 Cal., 662, and that judgment was affirmed by the Privy Council in (1900) 27 Cal., 996.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 13—Proceedings in a prior suit—Fact in issue not heard and "finally decided" therein.

To support the defence of res judicata it is not enough that the parties to the suits are the same and that the same matter is in issue. The matter must have been heard and finally decided: section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code.

In 1885 relations of a deceased proprietor, alleging their right to the inheritance, sued for a declaration that they were his next of kin. The defendant set up a title as direct descendant, claiming to be the son of that proprietor's daughter. The first Court decided that this was his true parentage and dismissed the suit. The High Court maintained the dismissal, not upon the merits, but on the grounds that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that a declaratory decree could not be made. In 1888 the same plaintiffs, having purchased the interest of the parties not joined in the previous suit, brought the present suit, with the same object, against the same defendant, whom the Subordinate Judge (not the same officer that disposed of the former suit), now found not to have been the son of the said daughter. A Bench of the High Court (composed of Judges other than those that heard the former appeal) having examined the record of the former suit, reversed the Subordinate Judge's decision. They declined, however, to decide whether or not the latter suit was barred on the ground of res judicata. But intimating that they would have affirmed the judgment of the lower Court in the former suit had it, on the merits, come before them, they preferred that judgment to the one before them, and gave effect to this opinion by reversing the latter.

Held, that the question of parentage had not been heard and finally decided in the suit of 1885. The appeal in that suit had put an end to any [617] finality in the decision of the first Court, and had not led to a decision on the merits. There was, therefore, no res judicata; but unless treated as such the judgment in the former suit had little or no bearing on the question as afterwards put in issue in this. That issue had been rightly decided by the Subordinate Judge, on the evidence, and his judgment was accordingly maintained.

APPEAL from a decree (27th July 1891) of the High Court reversing a decree (7th February 1890) of the Subordinate Judge of Gya.

The suit was brought on the 17th July 1888 by three sons of Jawahir Singh, who died before 1882, together with an elder brother now deceased, against the defendant, Sitaram Singh, who was, at the time of this appeal, a minor. He was represented by his guardian, Adit Singh, whom he alleged to be his father, the lawful husband of his mother, Anar Koer, deceased in 1884. The object of the suit, valued at Rs. 6,000, was to obtain a declaratory decree confirming the plaintiffs' title to the possession which they held of a moiety of a revenue-paying mouza named Nadaura in Zilla Gya. They claimed to be the nearest collateral relations and heirs, according to the Mitakshara, of Mahipat Singh, brother of their father Jawahir, both having been former owners of Nadaura. Mahipat died on the 28th August 1882, leaving one daughter, Anar Koer, who died on the 29th November 1884, without, as the plaintiffs averred, leaving a son. The defence of Sitaram was that he was her son, born of her marriage with Adit Singh. Thus, claiming Mahipat Singh for his maternal grandfather, his case was that he made a title in priority over the plaintiffs.

Jawahir Singh, the father of the plaintiffs, and Mahipat Singh, the father of Anar Koer, acquired each a half share in mouza Nadaura, Mahipat's half share being the subject of the present suit. On the death of Jawahir Singh in July 1879, the plaintiffs, his sons, succeeded to his moiety. Again, on the death of Mahipat in August 1882, they took possession of his moiety, as against their cousin, Anar Koer, who contested their right. The question was whether her father and Jawahir had been joint under the Mitakshara, or divided in estate. On the 15th March 1883, Jawahir's sons obtained an order in their favour for dakhil kharij of Mahipat's share, and thenceforth retained possession [618] down to this suit. Thereupon, on the 3rd September 1883, Anar Koer sued the present appellants to obtain her father's moiety, which she alleged to have been his separate acquisition. On the 26th January 1884, the Subordinate Judge of Gya decreed in her favour. These appellants appealed to the High Court, and pending that appeal, Anar Koer died on the 28th November 1884. On an application by her opponents for the suit to be treated as abated on her death, the High Court declined to decide on that mere petition whether Anar Koer left a son or not. On the 8th June 1885 these appellants, together with their since deceased brother, Sheobalak, filed their plaint against the present respondent, through his next friend, Adit Singh, asking a declaration that Anar Koer died without issue, male or female. One of the defences to this suit was that two persons alleged to be descended through Anar Koer named Baijnath Singh and Shoosarain should have been made parties. That was the suit referred to in the judgment of the High Court now under appeal, of which suit the record was imported into the present record. On the 30th November 1885 the first Court dismissed that suit, placing the burden of proof on the plaintiffs and finding no proof that Anar Koer died childless. An appeal from this was dismissed by the High Court on the 22nd March 1886 without any decision as to whether or not Sitaram Singh was the son of Anar Koer, on the ground that Baijnath Singh and Sheosarain Singh, who were equally interested in Mahipat's estate (supposing Anar Koer to have left no son) should have been made parties.

On the 31st May 1888 these appellants purchased their interest for Rs. 1,200, and instituted this suit on the 17th July following. Meantime, in a way not explained, Sitaram's name had been placed on the record of the suit decided in favour of Anar Koer on the 26th January 1884, and liberty to him to execute was granted. He, however, did not, and whether or not he had title by being the son of Anar Koer remained in dispute. The Subordinate Judge decided the issue in favour of the plaintiffs on the 7th February 1890. He disbelieved the evidence for the defendants considering it to have been shown that Anar Koer had passed the age of child-bearing at the date of Sitaram's birth.

On appeal a Divisional Bench of the High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and BEVERLEY, J.) were of opinion that the conclusion arrived [619] at by the Subordinate Judge, taking into consideration all the facts and the history of the litigation between the parties, could not be sustained. Consequently, upon the merits of the case and upon the facts, they decreed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

They referred to the former suit between the parties decided on the 22nd March 1886, and the following is that part of the judgment in which their reasons are given :—

"The record and the judgment and the other proceedings were before the Court when it tried this suit; and when the appeal was argued before us the whole of the paper-book in that case was referred to on both sides. We have come to the conclusion that it is necessary, in the interests of justice, that we should see the whole of the paper-book, and as it has been referred to, we see no reason why we should not deal with it as part of the record, and as being before us, inasmuch as it is clear that everything in it could have been made evidence if the necessary proceedings had been taken.

"Then, with reference to the present appeal, we have gone through the judgment, and we have gone through the evidence in this case very carefully, and if the oral evidence taken there had stood alone, it appears to us that it would have been very difficult for us to interfere with the decision, because the reasoning of the Subordinate Judge upon the evidence, as it appeared there, appears to be quite sound, and the reasons given for the conclusion he came to that Anar Koer, at the time when this person Sitaram was said to have been born, was a woman of such an age as to be past the age of child-bearing, appear to be well founded.

"Then comes the question how the proceedings in the former suit for the same relief bear upon this suit. It must be borne in mind that that suit was brought in the middle of the year 1885. The present suit was brought in the middle of the year 1888. Anar Koer died in the year 1884, and the consequence of that is that the first suit was brought almost immediately after the death of the woman, when all the facts connected with her would be much more easy of proof than three years later; and in reading those two records, the thing which strikes one most strongly is, not only that in the second case a totally different set of witnesses is called to support the plaintiffs' case from what was called to support it in the first case, but the case is rested on a totally different ground. In the first case, which was brought a year after the death of Anar Koer, a number of witnesses were called who state that this person was not the son of Anar Koer; they state that at the time of her death she left no son surviving her, though they say she had a number of children, and one of the witnesses, called on behalf of the plaintiffs, says that she had a child fourteen years before her death, which would be almost practically inconsistent with the case relied upon now by the plaintiffs, that at the time of her death Anar Koer was 62 or 63 years old.

That was the evidence which was produced in the first suit. The evidence was simply that she died childless, and upon that evidence the Subordinate [620] Judge came to the conclusion that he could not act upon it; and he, thinking that, upon the whole, this person Sitaram had been proved to be the child of Anar Koer, came to the conclusion that the suit must be dismissed, and the suit was dismissed; and reading the evidence in that case, we have come to the conclusion that if that case had stood alone, and the plaintiffs' case had come before us on appeal, it would have been impossible for us to interfere in that case or reverse that judgment. And the same issue was tried here, which was tried by the two Subordinate Judges, one of whom came to one conclusion and another to another conclusion, and practically we have to say which of these two, in this state of things, is right. We think that, having regard to the fact that this was in fact a second trial, and a second trial after an enquiry which had disclosed to the plaintiffs exactly what the defendant's case was, before a decree can be made in favour of the plaintiffs in a suit of this kind, a very different kind of case must be made out, and evidence of a very different kind must be given from that which has been given here.

But, in addition to that, we find here the fact, which I mentioned just now, that not only are a different set of witnesses called by the plaintiffs in the second case from that which they called in the first, but they make a totally different case now from what they made then. They rest the present case on the allegation that at the time this boy is said to have been born this woman was so very old as to have been past the age of child-bearing, no such case having been made by them at the first trial."

They added :—

" Certain points were taken here with reference to the matter being res judicata. In the view that we take of it, we do not think it necessary for us to decide that question, and I think it better that we should be understood as not expressing any opinion upon the point one way or the other."

As to costs, the order below went with the rest of the decree ; but on this appeal no order was made as to costs.

On the appeal of the plaintiffs—

Mr. J. D. Mayne for the appellants argued that even if the record of the suit decided on the 22nd March 1886 had been properly referred to in order to compare the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in the present suit with the judgment of that former date no such variances were to be found, no such differences in the cases put forward appeared, and no such inferences arose from comparison of the evidence, as the judgment now appealed from suggested. The case made by the appellants was the same in both cases, the [621] evidence in the latter indicating more completely why Sitaram Singh was shown not to be the son of Anar Koer, viz., because her age was too advanced for her to have borne a son, who would at the date of the hearing be so young as he was. The cases set up were identical on both occasions ; and if on the first, the appellants did not go into evidence as to her age, it was because the boy had not been seen by them, and was not in Court. Afterwards they made this their principal proof of what had been on both occasions alleged. The High Court had only touched on the question whether the defence of res judicata was maintainable, without deciding it. It should have decided that there was no res judicata.

In effect the High Court in the judgment of 22nd March 1886 had affirmed a state of things on which the issue, son or no son of Anar Koer, could not be decided on the state of things before the Court, viz., owing to the want of the necessary parties to the suit. Therefore the question in issue was not only left undecided, so that it was not heard and determined, but the judgment was that it could not be heard or determined. Reference was made to Kali Krishna Tagore v. The Secretary of State for India (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 173). The decree in favour of this one, or that, of the parties, did not constitute res judicata which to be a bar must be a matter finally heard and determined. The evidence supported the appellants' case.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondent, contended that the present suit was barred by the decision in the former one. As matters stood, the decree of the Subordinate Judge, dated 30th November 1875, was on the record of this present suit, unaltered and unreversed. On this he relied as a final adjudication, and argued that it could not be got rid of by a judgment in reference to it in the present suit. The merits were with the respondent.

Counsel for the appellant was not called upon to reply.

Afterwards on the 6th March 1897 their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Macnaghten.—The question in this appeal is whether the infant respondent Sitaram Singh is or is not the son of one Anar Koer who died in November or December 1884.

[622] Upon the answer to this question the title of the appellants to a moiety of certain shares in mouza Nadaura depends.

Anar Koer was the wife of Adit Singh, the guardian on the record, and alleged father of Sitaram, and she was the only child and heiress of Mahipat Singh.

Mahipat Singh and a cousin of his, one Jawahir Singh, had purchased the shares in question on their joint account and had registered them in their joint names. Mahipat, who survived Jawahir, died in August 1882. On his death the plaintiffs, who were sons of Jawahir, applied for registration on the ground that the family was joint, and that the succession belonged to them. The Deputy Collector on a summary application decided in their favour. Anar Koer then brought a regular suit to recover her father's moiety. In that suit it was held that the family was not joint, and this decision was confirmed on appeal. But the registration in the Collector's books was not altered, and possession of the whole property has remained with the plaintiffs ever since.

In the present suit, which was commenced in 1888, the plaintiffs asked to have it declared that Sitaram was not the son of Anar Koer or the grandson by the daughter of Mahipat, and that Anar Koer did not leave any child behind. The Subordinate Judge of Gya made a declaration to that effect. The High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and BEVERLEY, J.) reversed this decision and dismissed the suit. From that reversal the present appeal is brought.

There had been a previous litigation begun in 1885 between the same parties in which the very same issue was raised. The Additional Subordinate Judge of Gya, by whom the case was tried, a different person from the Subordinate Judge in the present suit, attached little or no weight to the oral evidence on the part of the plaintiffs. Holding that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiffs and that they had not discharged it he dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Judges of the High Court (MITTER and AGNEW, JJ.) affirmed the decree. They did not, however, deal with the real question at issue between the parties. They held that the suit could not be maintained in the absence of certain persons in the same interest as the plaintiffs. [623] And apart from that objection they were of opinion that under the particular circumstances of the suit before them the Court ought not, in the exercise of its discretion, to make a declaratory decree. Whether the view of the learned Judges on these points was right or wrong the judgment proceeds expressly on the footing that it was "not necessary to come to a decision" on the question of Sitaram's parentage. And so the appeal was dismissed.

The plaintiffs then bought up the interests of the persons not represented in the first suit and commenced fresh proceedings. It was objected that the plaintiffs were precluded from bringing a second suit by the decision in the suit of 1885. In a preliminary judgment the Subordinate Judge disposed of that point without any hesitation. On the 7th of February 1890 he delivered judgment on the main question. He carefully reviewed the evidence and all the circumstances of the case. He was not so much impressed by the oral testimony on the part of the plaintiffs as he was by the way in which the defendant's case had been conducted and by the absence of evidence which, if the defence were an honest one, would, he thought, certainly have been forthcoming. He held that the plaintiffs had made out "a sufficient primâ facie case," and that the defendant had altogether failed to meet it.

It is not necessary for their Lordships to do more than express their concurrence with the Subordinate Judge in his view of the question as it was presented to him, because to that extent the learned Judges of the High Court adopt the reasoning and conclusion of the Court below.

"We have," they say, "gone through the evidence in this case very carefully and if the oral evidence taken there" (that is in the Subordinate Court) "had stood alone, it appears to us that it would have been very difficult for us to interfere with the decision, because the reasoning of the Subordinate Judge upon the evidence as it appeared there, appears to be quite sound, and the reasons given for the conclusion he came to that Anar Koer, at the time when this person Sitaram was said to have been born, was a woman of such an age as to be passed the age of child-bearing appear to be well founded."

[624] The way in which the learned Judges of the High Court disposed of a decision which upon the evidence adduced at the trial they themselves thought well founded was perhaps rather summary. It seems that at the trial the parties had put in evidence the judgment and the decree and such of the depositions in the first suit as they considered material. But the learned Judges on appeal were not satisfied with so meagre an instalment of past history. They held it "necessary in the interests of justice" that they should see the whole of the paper-book in the suit of 1885 and deal with it as part of the record before them. Reading the two records they found that the witnesses on the part of the plaintiffs in the two suits were not the same, and they assumed rather hastily that the plaintiffs were making "a totally different case" from that which they had made originally. Taking the evidence in the first suit by itself they pronounced an opinion that if that suit had come before them on appeal it would have been impossible for them to have reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge who had dismissed the plaintiffs' suit "thinking," they said, "that upon the whole this person Sitaram had been proved to be the child of Anar Koer." The same issue, they added, had been tried by two Subordinate Judges; the question was which of the two was right. Under the circumstances they preferred the earlier decision—a decision nearer the time of Anar Koer's death—to the result of a second trial after an inquiry which had, they thought, "disclosed to the plaintiffs exactly what the defendant's case was."

Their Lordships cannot think this mode of dealing with the matter at all satisfactory. The reason why the plaintiffs called a different set of witnesses on the second trial is perhaps not far to seek. In the first case the Subordinate Judge had put aside the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses on the ground that they were all either biased by relationship in favour of the plaintiffs or prejudiced against Adit Singh by former disputes. The plaintiffs can hardly be blamed for not choosing to rely a second time upon witnesses thus discredited. Nor is it correct to say that in the second suit the plaintiffs set up "a totally different case." In both suits their case was the same. They averred that Anar Koer died without issue. But when the time of Sitaram's birth was fixed the question was brought within [625] a narrower compass. It was enough for the plaintiffs then to prove if they could that at that time Anar Koer was past child-bearing. The case they made originally was established beyond question if they could shew that at the time when the alleged offspring of Anar Koer was born it was impossible for Anar Koer in the course of nature to become a mother.

It is quite true that on the first trial the plaintiffs did not make it part of their case that Anar Koer was past child-bearing in the latter years of her life. Apparently they had no reason to anticipate that so recent a date would be fixed for the birth of the rival heir who has never yet been produced in Court. They seem to have expected an older claimant. When the defence was opened and Adit Singh, who was the first witness for the defendant, pledged himself to the date of Sitaram's birth, the importance of the question became apparent, and thenceforth every witness for the defendant who did not state on examination-in-chief that he was ignorant of Anar Koer's age was cross-examined closely on the subject. No one, however, could tell how old Anar Koer was at her marriage, or how old she was at Mahipat's death. One and all they professed to know nothing whatever about her age. Moreover, it is to be observed, that two of the plaintiffs' witnesses on cross-examination stated that Anar Koer had reached an age which makes child-bearing impossible, or at least very improbable. One said she was 55 at the date of Mahipat's death. Another who gave his age as 48 said she was older than he was. So that the first statement as to Anar Koer's age came from the camp of the plaintiffs before the exact position of the defendant was declared. And if on the first enquiry the plaintiffs gained information useful to them by having the date of Sitaram's birth fixed, the defendant's advisers were made aware of the case they would have to meet in the event of a second trial. And it was an easy case for them to meet if their story was true. However, instead of producing evidence as to Anar Koer's age at Mahipat's death, or as to the birth of a child of her womb, Adit Singh contented himself with the repetition of his former evidence and the allegation that Anar Koer was only his second wife. He had been married before he said to a woman with whom he had lived in wedlock for more than twenty years and he married Anar Koer after [626] her death. So much he remembered and swore to positively. But he could remember nothing more about the first wife. He could not even recall her name, and the Subordinate Judge, who saw him under cross-examination, came to the conclusion that that part of his story, at any rate, was a fiction.

It may perhaps be doubted whether the learned Judges of the High Court were right in assuming on the mere perusal of the evidence in the first suit to decide a case which was not before them and on which they could not have heard any argument. However that may be, it is obvious that by the course which they took they gave the effect of a judgment conclusive between the parties to a decision which was superseded on appeal, and which in the opinion of the only tribunal competent to rehear the case ought never to have been pronounced. Indeed, unless the matter of the decision of the Subordinate Judge in the first suit be treated as res judicata, it can have little or no bearing on the question at issue. Granted that the first decision of the lower Court was right it by no means follows that the second must be wrong.

It was argued or contended with much persistence before their Lordships that the decision in the first suit might support a plea of res judicata. That contention did not commend itself to their Lordships. It met with rather more favour in the High Court, though it did not quite find acceptance there. The learned Judge who delivered the judgment of the Court expressed himself as follows —

"Certain points were taken here with reference to this matter being res judicata. In the view we take of it we do not think it necessary for us to decide that question, and I think it better that we should be understood as not expressing any opinion upon the point one way or another."

Their Lordships are unable to understand what advantage there can be in treating such a point as open to argument, and thus throwing doubt upon the meaning of an enactment which in this part of it at least seems to be expressed in tolerably clear language. To support a plea of res judicata it is not enough that the parties are the same and that the same matter is in issue. The matter must have been "heard and finally decided." If there [627] had been no appeal in the first suit the decision of the Subordinate Judge would no doubt have given rise to the plea. But the appeal destroyed the finality of the decision. The judgment of the lower Court was superseded by the judgment of the Court of Appeal. And the only thing finally decided by the Court of Appeal was that in a suit constituted as the suit of 1885 was, no decision ought to have been pronounced on the merits.

Before their Lordships certain judgments in proceedings in execution were appealed to as sufficient to raise or eke out the plea of res judicata. But in each case on turning to the judgment it appears that the Court expressly guarded itself against being supposed to decide the question of Sitaram's parentage.

Their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that the Subordinate Judge came to a right conclusion upon the evidence and the circumstances of the case before him. They do not, however, think that there was anything in the evidence in the first suit or in the judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge or in what the learned Judges term "the history of the case" to suggest any doubt as to the propriety of the decision which they overruled.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the decision of the High Court should be reversed, and the appeal from the decision of Subordinate Judge of Gya dismissed with costs. The respondent will pay the costs of this appeal.

[On appeal from a Court of Admiralty held by the Recorder of Rangoon.]

Collision—Damage by a ship under way colliding with another at anchor—Burden of justifying duty of ship at anchor.

Where a ship under way comes into collision with another at anchor in a proper place, and showing, at night, an anchor light, it is obvious that the burden of justifying is heavily cast on the ship under way. At the same [628] time there is an obligation on the anchored ship to keep a competent watch, to show an anchor light, and to do everything to avert a collision and lessen the damage from it. If, as was the case here, the damaged ship is placed in a difficulty entirely by the erroneous course, or conduct, of the other, and is obliged to take a step on the instant, she is entitled to claim from a Court a favourable consideration for her action, even if that should afterwards appear not to have been the best possible.

A steamship, entering the fairway of a river with the tide flowing, collided with the respondent's tug at anchor in a proper place, and showing an anchor light. Near the tug was a pilot brig, astern of which the steam ship wanted to round, attempting to pass between the tug and the brig. She could, however, have taken a course astern of both. At the approach of the steamship both the anchored vessels, heading against the tide, hove on their anchors, and drifted back.

The justification set up by the owners of the steam ship was that she was misled by the pilot brig's drifting, the anchor light of the latter having been kept up. Blame to a third ship, if blame there were, was held to be no excuse for the colliding ship, as against the tug's complaint.

The main charge against the tug was that she did not slack away chain as soon as there was danger, but hove on her anchor. It was found, however, that if the tug were already drifting when the collision took place, there was no reason to suppose that by slacking away chain at the earliest possible moment, the collision would have been averted, or lessened in force.

On the other hand, the facts against the impugnants' steamship were : (1) that her course could, without difficulty, have been directed so that, by going astern of the tug from the port side instead of crossing her bows, all risk of collision would have been avoided ; (2) that there was a want of sufficient look-out on board the steam ship, especially as regarded the tug ; (3) that there was possibly also a miscalculation on the part of the steam ship of the room to pass, with reference to the force and set of the tide. She was, accordingly, alone held to blame, and her owners liable in damages.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (8th January 1896) of the Recorder of Rangoon exercising Admiralty jurisdiction.

This suit was brought by the appellants to recover a sum of Rs. 13,182 as damages resulting from a collision between their tug the Mary and the respondent's steam ship the Meanatchy. This occurred about 10-30 P.M. on the 8th February 1895 at the entrance of the Rangoon river, and was alleged by the appellants to have been caused by the negligent navigation of the Meanatchy.

The respondents counter-claimed from the appellants Rs. 15,125 for damages sustained by the Meanatchy in the collision which [629] they attributed to the negligence of the master and crew in their management of the Mary.

The Recorder of Rangoon dismissed the suit in a Court of Admiralty, which he held in accordance with the provisions of the Act relating to "Colonial Courts of Admiralty, 1890." This is the statute 53 and 54 Vic., c. 27, entitled "An Act to amend the law respecting the exercise of Admiralty jurisdiction in Her Majesty's dominions and elsewhere out of the United Kingdom." This Act repealed the Vice-Admiralty Courts Acts of 1863 and 1867, besides other Acts.

The question on this appeal was, which of the two, the steamship Meanatchy or the tug Mary, was to blame.

The appellant Company, the promovents, owning the tug Mary, alleged that those in charge of the Meanatchy had been in fault for failure to keep a good look-out, for having taken an unnecessary course, difficult under the circumstances, and for having failed to slow, or reverse, until the moment of collision.

The respondents alleged that the crew of the tug failed to keep a good look-out, not having a proper watch, and not having, at the time, a competent officer in charge of her. They also alleged that those on board the tug had not paid out the anchor chain, but had hove on the anchor, the latter not being the proper way to avoid the collision, or diminish the force of it.

The questions put by the Recorder to his nautical Assessors, with the answers, are set forth in the judgment of their Lordships, who also had the assistance of Assessors.

The judgment of the Court of Admiralty was as follows :—

"It appears that on the night of the 8th February the Mary was anchored near the pilot brig at the mouth of the river. The evidence is not very clear as to the exact distance between two vessels. In fact, it could hardly be so. But the vessels appear to have been four hundred or five hundred yards apart. It appears that the pilot brig was ahead of the Mary. Mr. Warwick, the pilot in command of the pilot brig, gave evidence that they were almost abreast of each other. But the evidence of Mr. O'Brien, the master of the tug, and that of the other witnesses in the case, goes to show that the tug was astern of the pilot brig. While they were in these positions the S.S. Meanatchy, came within sight, and she directed her course towards the pilot brig, whence she had to take up a pilot. The evidence shows that she was going in a direct course towards these two vessels, and their lights ahead of her. Both vessels were carrying anchor lights. The evidence of the [630] captain of the Meanatchy and his officers shows that it was the intention of the captain to steer between these two vessels, which he saw at anchor, and to round up under the stern of the pilot brig in order to take the pilot on board. When he arrived close to the Mary and was rounding too, the captain found that he was close upon her and that collision was inevitable. The captain of the tug was, at the time the Meanatchy was sighted, on board the pilot brig, and he remained there for some little time longer, and when the Meanatchy was not very far off he went off in his boat to his vessel, and at the time of the collision was apparently about one hundred yards astern of her. He saw that the collision was going to occur and he gave orders to heave short. The effect of that would be, first, to draw up the tug on towards the anchor. When the anchor was lifted the vessel would begin to drift, but the immediate effect would be what I have just stated, so that the vessel would not drift at once. The Meanatchy struck the tug and caused certain damages for which compensation has been claimed."

The judgment then stated the questions put to the Assessors and their answers (all of which are quoted in their Lordships' judgment), and concluded with :—

"That being so, the suit fails and must be dismissed with costs."

Of the counter-claim by the impugnant Company (Rs. 15,125) Rs. 6,213 were allowed, and decreed with costs thereon, in favour of them as owners of the Meanatchy.

Mr. Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Mr. Butler Aspinall for the Appellants.—The facts found in the judgment of the Court below are not such as to have justified that Court in pronouncing the Mary to be solely in fault. The argument for the appellant was that the collision was caused by acts and omissions on the part of the Meanatchy alone. That ship taking an imprudent course between the Mary and the pilot brig, improperly, and at wrong time, starboarded her helm, attempting to cross the bows of the Mary. A good look-out, as the evidence showed, was not kept on board the Meanatchy, though it was her duty to watch both the tug and the pilot brig. Nor did the Meanatchy stop or reverse her engines in due time, nor did she reduce her speed, nor did she properly conform to article 18 of the "Regulations for preventing Collisions at Sea." On the other hand, all reasonable precautions were taken on board the Mary to avert and lessen the force of the collision, which was due to the fault of the Meanatchy alone.

Sir Walter Phillimore, Q.C., and Mr. Lawriston Batten for [631] the respondent Company.—The finding of the Court below, and the opinion of the Assessors, with which the judgment of the Court was in accord, were correct. According to the evidence, the original positions of the tug and the brig were such that the course steered by the Meanatchy was right and safe at the commencement. The relative positions of the anchored vessels to one another had, however, been changed before the collision by their own acts. They had shove on their anchors, and drifted, and the pilot brig when drifting had kept up her anchor light, as though she were stationary. There was, on the other hand, no evidence of the want of ordinary skill or care in the navigation of the Meanatchy, and, on the contrary, the evidence showed that the latter when in the difficulty that had suddenly arisen, and when a collision was imminent, took all the steps which she could reasonably be expected to take. The pilot brig's light was misleading to the Meanatchy. The Mary tug, instead of paying out anchor chain at the near approach of the steamship, when collision appeared to be imminent, hove on her anchor. To have slackened out chain would probably have caused her to take the collision on her beam instead of on her stem, as the evidence tended to show; and would have, at all events, lessened the damage. The master of the tug was returning to the tug in a boat, and the tide was against him; from the boat he gave the order, and when the tug drifted it would have been easier for the boat to approach. In reference to the duties of a ship at anchor in danger of a ship under way colliding with her, the Clara (12 Ohio., 200) decided in 1880 in the Supreme Court of the United States was cited. In that case an anchored vessel was held to blame and liable.

Mr. Joseph Walton, Q.C., replied.

Afterwards, on March 20th, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir Francis Jeune.—This is an appeal from the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon, sitting as a Colonial Court of Admiralty in an action between the Mary Tug Company, Limited, as owners of the tug Mary, and the British India Steam Navigation Company, Limited, as owners of the S.S. Meanatchy. The [632] appellants claimed, and the respondents counter-claimed, in respect of a collision which took place between the Mary and the Meanatchy at the entrance of the Rangoon river on the night of the 8th February 1895.

The Mary was lying at anchor heading to the flood tide which was running with a force which is differently estimated by the witnesses, but which was certainly considerable. A pilot brig, the Samson, was lying also at anchor in a position which the learned Recorder considered was ahead of the tug, and at a distance of between 400 to 500 yards from her. The Meanatchy was coming up the Rangoon river, and sighted first the pilot brig a little on her port bow, and, shortly after, the Mary at a distance which her captain puts at about four miles. At about one mile, according to the evidence of her captain and the third officer who was on watch (though the evidence of the helmsman and the man at the look-out indicates that this distance was much less) the Meanatchy starboarded, her purpose being to pass between the Mary and the pilot brig, and round up under the stem of the latter, in order to take a pilot. While the Meanatchy was at some distance, the pilot brig hove short, and the learned Recorder has found that she dragged to a position more nearly abreast of the Mary, the object of her doing so no doubt being to keep nearer to the boat in which the pilot would be dropped. The anchor lights of the pilot brig were not changed. The Meanatchy under her starboard helm, with her starboard bow about 20 feet from her stem, struck the stem of the Mary, doing, and receiving, damage. The case put forward on behalf of the Meanatchy was that her course was misled by a belief that the pilot brig was stationary.

It was also urged on behalf of the Meanatchy that the Mary was anchored in an improper place having regard to the position of the pilot brig, that there was no proper look-out on board the Mary, and that the captain of the Mary committed an error in the management of his vessel, namely, in heaving short instead of at once slacking out the chain of his anchor before the collision.

The learned Recorder asked six questions of his Assessors :—

[633] (1) Were the pilot brig and the Mary moored in proper position?

(2) Was the captain of the Meanatchy justified in navigating his vessel as he did?

(3) Was the pilot brig properly navigated?

(4) If not, did such improper navigation tend to cause the collision?

(5) If a proper look-out had been kept on the Mary could a collision have been avoided?

(6) Did the captain of the Mary act properly in giving the order to heave short, or ought he to have ordered the chain to be slacked?

The replies given by the Assessors to these questions were as follows :—

(1) The Mary was anchored in a dangerous position.

(2) Yes. If the brig had remained stationary the captain of the Meanatchy would have been able safely to round under her stern without going near the tug. Moreover, the captain of the Meanatchy was misled by the fact that the commander of the pilot brig kept his anchor light up when the ship was under way.

(3) No.

(4) Yes.

(5) If there had been a proper look-out the collision might have been avoided, or its effects mitigated. In our opinion the master of the tug was not justified in leaving her without a properly qualified person in charge.

(6) He ought to have paid out chain as the Meanatchy was so close to him.

On this advice, the learned Recorder gave judgment for the respondents on the claim and counterclaim.

Their Lordships will first consider the conduct of the Meanatchy. It is beyond question that the Mary was at anchor and exhibiting a proper light, that the Meanatchy sighted the riding light of the Mary a considerable time, and at a con-[634] siderable distance, before the collision, and that by starboarding her helm in the endeavour to pass between her and the pilot brig she came into collision with her. When a vessel under way comes into collision with a vessel at anchor exhibiting a proper light, it is obvious that she has a heavy burden cast on her to justify her conduct. In this case the burden is the more serious because their Lordships are advised by their Assessors that, with a tide such as was running up, and, to some extent, across, the Rangoon River, to endeavour to pass between two vessels in the position of the pilot brig and the Mary was a proceeding not without risk even in the daytime, still more at night, and that it would have been safer seamanship to have gone round under the sterns both of the Mary and of the pilot brig. The justification put forward on behalf of the Meanatchy is that she was misled by the movement of the pilot brig, and her omission to change her riding light for the lights of a vessel underway. Their Lordships do not desire to express any opinion of the conduct of this vessel, but assuming that she drifted substantially in the way alleged on behalf of the Meanatchy, their Lordships are of opinion that the Meanatchy cannot successfully plead that she was misled by the movement of the light of the pilot brig in order to excuse her collision with the Mary.

Their Lordships think that those on the Meanatchy should have noticed both the actual movement of the light of the pilot brig, and also that movement in relation to the light of the Mary. But they are also advised, and entertain no doubt, that the observation on board of the Meanatchy should have been directed to the Mary as well as to the pilot brig, and that, had such observation been effective, the course of the Meanatchy could, without difficulty, have been so directed as to avoid collision with the Mary. Their Lordships are of opinion that it was the want of sufficient look-out on board the Meanatchy, especially as regards the Mary, and possibly also a miscalculation of distance owing to the force and set of the tide, which brought about the collision, and for these errors the Meanatchy cannot be excused.

The case against the Mary turns mainly upon the omission to slack away chain as soon as there was risk of collision. There are, however, other charges with which it will be convenient to [636] deal first. It is alleged that the Mary was brought to anchor in an improper position. But this their Lordships think cannot be sustained. There is no rule prescribing any special place of anchorage for vessels in that part of the Rangoon River, and their Lordships are advised that neither as regards the circumstance that the ship near which the Mary lay was a pilot vessel, nor as regards the berth taken up by the Mary in relation to that vessel is any fault to be found. On the latter point, the evidence of the Assistant Port Officer appears to their Lordships to be conclusive. It is also urged that there was a want of look-out on board the Mary. In so far as this charge takes the form of an allegation that there was no one on the look-out, or that there was no properly qualified person in charge, the case does not appear to their Lordships to be made out. Their Lordships think that it would not be proper to hold that the captain was necessarily to blame for leaving his own vessel at anchor and going on board the pilot brig, and they see no reason to doubt that the engineer left in charge was competent to perform the duties of an anchor watch, and was attending to them.

The facts as to the action of the Mary appear to be that shortly before the collision, and, in consequence, as their Lordships think, of the approach of the Meanatchy, the captain of the Mary, who was then in a boat alongside, or astern, of his vessel, ordered her to be hove short on her cable with the intention, which was accomplished, of making her drift astern. The Mary by this process first moved forward about 30 feet, and then dragged astern, so that possibly she was not quite so far astern at the collision as she would have been had the anchor chain been paid out at once.

Their Lordships entertain no doubt that in the case of a vessel at anchor there is an obligation to keep a competent person on watch, and that it is his duty, not only to see that the anchor light or lights are properly exhibited, but also to do everything in his power to avert or to minimize a collision. Many such things may no doubt be done, and it is necessary also to be prepared to summon aid for any needful purpose. The case of the Clara (12 Ohio, 200) decided in the Supreme Court of the United States on which [636] reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the respondents does not appear to their Lordships to go beyond a recognition of this general principle. It would appear that the Supreme Court, in appeals from the Circuit Courts, has jurisdiction limited to a determination of questions of law raised on the record, or by bill of exceptions. The Circuit Court found, as facts, that the plaintiff's ship, the Julia Newell, with which the Clara came into collision, was improperly lying at anchor, without a watch on deck, that a storm was increasing, and set in about the time the Clara came to anchor, and was a very severe snow storm, that if the Julia Newell had had a sufficient watch on deck the accident might have been prevented, and that the Clara was well manned and had proper lights and a proper look-out; and the Circuit Court held that the failure to keep a watch on the deck of the Julia Newell was the cause of the collision. It cannot be ascertained from the report, nor was it material to be stated, as only questions of law could be considered, what particular course might have been adopted on board the Julia Newell to have prevented the collision. The Supreme Court held that the Julia Newell was alone to blame; but this decision affords no aid in the present enquiry, because it proceeds on the assumption of such negligence, and its results, as in the present case, constitute the very issues in controversy.

Not only, however, is the general obligation as to an anchor watch insufficient to dispose of the questions raised in this case, but, even if it be conceded that the person in charge was guilty of an error of judgment, other considerations arise. It has to be considered whether, had the course, which is suggested as the best, been taken, the result as to the collision would have been materially affected; and their Lordships are advised that there is no reason to suppose that had the chain been slacked away at the earliest moment at which such action would have been proper, the collision would have been averted, or its results mitigated. But even were this more doubtful than their Lordships think it is, another point of importance remains. A competent sailor, as their Lordships are advised, would have been justified till a very late moment in assuming that the Meanatchy would, as she easily could, have abstained from an [637] attempt to cross his bows; and so long as there was a reasonable possibility that the Meanatchy would go under his stern, he would not have aided, but, on the contrary, might have hampered such a manœuvre by causing his own vessel to drift astern. Being thus placed, entirely by the erroneous conduct of the Meanatchy, in a position of difficulty in which an instant step was imperative, he became entitled, as this and other tribunals have often held, to claim a favourable consideration for the action which he decided to take, even if it should afterwards appear that such action was not the best possible.

It was suggested by the Counsel for the respondents that the order by the captain of the Mary to heave short was given without reference to the approach of the Meanatchy, before any risk of collision, and merely in order to bring his vessel nearer to the boat in which he was lying. As above stated, in their Lordships' opinion, this was not so in fact, but, if it were, it is all the more probable that the Mary had at the time of the collision drifted astern as far as if her chain had been paid out just before it; and, indeed, if the vessel was already drifting it would have become of little or no use to pay out chain.

For these reasons, their Lordships are of opinion that the Meanatchy must be held alone to blame for the collision.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decision of the Court of the Recorder should be reversed, and judgment entered for the appellants on the claim and counterclaim, and the case remitted in order that the damages due to the appellants may be ascertained. The respondents must pay the appellants the costs of this appeal, and the costs of the claim and counterclaim in the Court below.

Maintenance, order of Criminal Court as to—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), sections, 488 and 177—Complaint by a wife against her husband for maintenance—Issue of summons—Jurisdiction of Presidency Magistrate.

If a person neglects or refuses to maintain his wife, the proper Court to take cognizance of the complaint of the wife is the Court within the jurisdiction of which the husband resides.

REFERENCE by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta under section 432 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The facts of the case and the question referred for the opinion of the High Court appear from the following letter of reference:—

"In this case the husband is living at Assansol and the wife in Calcutta.

"The question for determination is whether I can issue a summons calling upon the husband to attend in my Court and shew cause why he should not maintain his wife. It is a question of jurisdiction.

"The Legislature does not contemplate an exercise of jurisdiction by a Magistrate outside the area to which he is appointed by the Government, and the Code, by section 177†, lays down a fundamental principle that the competency of a forum to take cognizance of an enquiry into an 'offence,' as defined by section 4 of the Code, is determined by the place in which the offence may have been committed.

"It is doubtful if the failure to maintain can strictly be called an 'offence,' as defined by section 4, in cases where there is no order for maintenance in existence, inasmuch as there is no penalty attaching to the breach of duty, the penalty only arising under section 488 if a husband refuses to maintain after an order is passed for him to do so. It is an offence to disobey a Magistrate's order for maintenance, but there is no penalty attaching to the refusal to maintain in the first instance. Such a refusal is a breach of duty which gives the wife a right to a summons. It is the duty of a wife to reside with her husband, and her co-relative right to be maintained by him under his roof. The first process calling on the husband to maintain his wife should therefore be sought in the district in which the obligation is prima facie to be fulfilled, i. e., in the district in which the husband resides. [639] I do not think that such duty and co-relative right can be altered by anything stated ex-parte by the wife when applying for a summons.

* Criminal Reference No. 1 of 1897 made by T. A. Pearson, Esq., Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 4th of May 1897.

Ordinary place of inquiry and trial. † [Sec. 177:—Every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed.]

"There are cases bearing on the question, one; In re the Petition of Fakrudin (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 40) decided by the Bombay High Court by two learned Judges, which lays down that the application for a summons for maintenance should be made in the district in which the husband resides, the learned Judges remarking that the words of section 488 point to its being only the Magistrate in whose jurisdiction the person against whom complaint is made resides who has jurisdiction; and they further support their view by arguments of convenience.

"On the other hand, there is a decision of the Allahabad High Court, In re the Petition of Decastro (I. L. R., 13 All., 348), which takes a different view, but it is a decision of a single Judge. It will be noticed that the application in the present case is drawn up so as to fall within the facts of the Allahabad case above referred to, and in the Allahabad case the learned Judge, Mr. Justice KNOX, decided that under the circumstances of that case the wife had a right to choose her own residence, and to apply for a summons in the Court in whose jurisdiction she resided, and the learned Judge cited the case of In re Todd (5 N. W. P. H. C., 237) as supporting that view. The ruling in In re Todd is not a very satisfactory authority, as no arguments are given in the report, and the matters mentioned by the Bombay High Court case above referred to do not appear to have been raised.

"I am inclined to follow (as has always been the practice in such applications in the Presidency Magistrate's Courts) the view taken by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in preference to the ruling of the single learned Judge in the Allahabad case, but as the matter is one of some difficulty, and one as to which a definite ruling for the Presidency is required, there being, so far as I am aware, no decision on the point by the Calcutta High Court, I refer for the opinion of the learned Judges of the High Court the question, whether this Court or the Assansol Court is the proper Court from which the summons asked for should be issued."

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows:—

We think that the Presidency Magistrate has taken a right view in the matter. "It is the duty of the woman," as observed by WEST, J., in In re the Petition of Fakrudin (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 40), "to reside with her husband, and it is her co-relative right to be maintained by him under his roof." And when the husband fails in his duty, the proper Court to take cognizance of the com-[640] plaint of the wife is the Court within the jurisdiction of which he may reside. The language of section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure itself favours this view; and it seems to us that, if the principle which underlies section 177 of the Code may be applied to this case, the complaint should be enquired into by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the husband neglected or refused to maintain his wife. Let the record be sent back with this expression of our opinion.

NOTES.

[In view of the conflict of decisions between cases like 24 Cal., 638 and those like 13 All., 348, the Legislature in the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, sec. 488, inserted clause (9) to the effect that "the accused may be proceeded against in any district where he resides or is, or where he last resided with his wife, or, as the case may be, the mother of the illegitimate child."]

Parties—Adding parties to Suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 32—Court adding a defendant—Limitation.

No question of limitation arises where a Court, of its own motion, under section 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, adds a party defendant to a suit. Oriental Bank Corporation v. Charriol (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 642), followed

THIS suit was brought to recover money due on a mortgage bond, dated the 12th Jaista 1288 (24th May 1881). On the 25th Baisack 1294 (7th May 1887) the appellant, defendant No 7, took a usufructuary mortgage of the equity of redemption in the mortgaged lands and of certain other properties. When the suit was instituted he was not made a party, but he was added by the order of the Court under section 32 of the Civil Procedure Code. He put in a written statement, pleading that the suit was barred by limitation. The Munsif allowed the plea, and dismissed the suit as against that defendant, and the defendant No. 6, who had improperly been made a party to the suit, but decreed it as against the other defendants. On appeal to the [641] Subordinate Judge, the decree was varied, the Subordinate Judge holding that the suit was not barred, as there had been an acknowledgment of the debt by the other defendants in a bond dated 28th Assin 1292 (13th October 1885), and that the plaintiffs were entitled to count limitation from that date.

The defendant No. 7 appealed.

Babu Jagat Chunder Banerjee appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. H. E. Mendes for the Respondents.

C.A.V.

The judgment of the Court (O'Kinealy and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is a suit for money due on a simple mortgage bond dated the 12th Jaista 1288, and the only point in the appeal is in regard to the defendant No. 7, who became the mortgagee of the equity of redemption after the plaintiffs' mortgage. This defendant was not originally on the record, but was, in the course of the suit, added by the first Court under section 32 of the Code.

It has been held in the case of Oriental Bank Corporation v. Charriol (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 642) that where a Court, acting on information brought to its notice, adds a party who, it thinks, is necessary for the disposal of the suit, no question of limitation arises.

The defendant No. 7 in this case was, under the Transfer of Property Act, a party necessary for the final disposal of the suit. We, therefore, think that no question of limitation arises; and the mortgage in suit must be enforced against the defendant No. 7, as well as the other defendants, except the defendant No. 6.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Right of Occupancy—Transfer of Right—Suit for registration of name in landlord's serishta—Right of Suit—Notice—Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 73.

Under the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) the transferee of a holding of a raiyat, with right of occupancy transferable by custom, cannot maintain a suit for registration of his own name in the landlord's serishta by expunging that of his vendor.

A declaration that the transferee, and not the old tenant, is responsible for the rent of the holding cannot be obtained without service of notice as prescribed by section 73 of the Act.

THE plaintiff in this case alleged that a certain ancestral guzasta kasht, with right of transfer, was held by defendant No. 3 under his landlords, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2; that the defendant No. 3 sold it to the plaintiff under a registered deed of sale, dated 6th August 1889, and put him in possession thereof; that in Jeith (May) 1890 he applied for registration of his name in the landlord's serishta by expunging the name of his vendor, and offered to pay the salami and the year's rent, and although the defendant No. 2 received the salami and rent, defendant No. 1 refused to do so; that suits for rent were brought by defendant No. 1 against defendant No. 3, in which the plaintiff was compelled to deposit the decretal amounts, and his prayer to be made party to the suits was disallowed. The plaintiff, accordingly, prayed that declaration be made of his title to get his name registered by expunging that of the defendant No. 3; and that his name might be caused to be so registered in the serishta of defendant No. 1.

The lower Courts found the tenure to be transferable by custom, but held that the plaintiff had failed to prove his title by purchase, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 261 of 1896, against the decree of B. C. Chatterjee, Esq., District Judge of Arrah, dated the 7th of December 1895, affirming the order of Babu Chunder Coomar Roy, Munsif of that District, dated the 27th of June 1895.

[643] Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf (for Mr. C. Gregory) and Babu Raghunandan Prasad for the Appellant.

Babu Saligram Singh and Babu Mahabir Sahai for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (RAMPINI and STEVENS, JJ.) was delivered by Rampini, J.—This is a suit brought by a person who alleges that he is the transferee of an occupancy holding against the landlord of the jote, and who seeks to have it declared that he is entitled to have his name registered in the serishta of defendant No. 1, and to have the name of defendant No. 3, his transferor, expunged.

The lower Courts have gone into the merits of the case, and they have dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiff has not established his purchase of the jote in question against defendant No. 3.

The only point found in favour of the plaintiff is that the jote is a transferable one. The plaintiff now appeals to this Court and impugns the finding of the Lower Appellate Court. We do not, however, think it is necessary to enter into the merits of this case, as it appears to us that the suit is not maintainable under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff is, on his own showing, an occupancy raiyat. He is not a permanent tenure-holder, nor a raiyat holding at a fixed rate, but is merely a raiyat with a right of occupancy, which the Lower Appellate Court has found to be transferable.

Under these circumstances we think that he is not entitled to the relief asked for, viz., to have his name registered in his landlord's serishta, and to have the name of defendant No. 3 expunged.

The lower Courts have apparently overlooked the fact that such a suit is not maintainable under the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is no longer compulsory for the zemindar to register the names of any tenants in his serishta. The Act provides for the official registration of transfers of the rights of permanent tenure-holders and raiyats holding at fixed rates. But the transfers of occupancy rights are not so registered, and there is no provision [644] of law by which they can be registered in the landlord's serishta. When occupancy rights, transferable by custom, have been transferred, it is no doubt open to the transferees to sue under the Specific Relief Act to have it declared that they have acquired certain rights; but it is clear that if it is the object of such a suit, as it apparently was of this suit, to have it declared that the old tenant is no longer responsible for the rent, and that the transferee is so responsible to the landlord, such a declaration cannot be obtained without the service of the notice prescribed by section 73. Now, it is not alleged in this case that any such notice was served, and this would seem to be a further reason for dismissing this suit. However this may be, it is plain that it must be dismissed on the ground that the suit, as brought, is not maintainable under the provisions of the present law.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Right of suit—Benamidar—Suit for foreclosure of mortgage—Beneficial owner—Parties—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 85.

A suit for foreclosure of a mortgage may be brought by the person named in the mortgage deed as the mortgagee, although he was, in fact, only the benamidar of the beneficial owner, and such a suit should not be dismissed because the beneficial owner is not added as a party.

THIS was a suit for foreclosure and for possession of certain lands mortgaged to the plaintiff under a kut-kobala mortgage. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff was only the benamidar of his grandfather, who had advanced the money and was in fact the beneficial owner; that the plaintiff was incompetent to bring the suit; and that they had not received the full amount for which the mortgage had been given.

[645] Both the lower Courts found that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar, and held that he was incompetent to bring the suit.

The plaintiff appealed.

Babu Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Babu Jogesh Chunder Dey for the Respondents.

C. A. V.

The judgment of the Court (O'Kinealy and Hill, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is a suit for foreclosure and for possession of the land mortgaged. The answer of the defendants was that, although the mortgage bond was executed in the name of the plaintiff, the money was the money of Bissonath Misser, the grandfather of the plaintiff. They further said that Baloram Gorain, who executed the mortgage, had not received the full amount for which the mortgage was executed. Both the lower Courts have held that Bissonath Misser was the beneficial owner, and not the plaintiff in whose name the mortgage is said to have been executed.

In a case, very similar to this, the same point was brought for decision to this Court; and it was decided that the contract could be enforced by the parties who had entered into it, and that the suit should not be dismissed because the beneficial owner was not added as a party.

Whether Baloram Gorain got the money from Bissonath Misser or not, the transfer of the mortgaged property was by the deed made to the plaintiff. And as the contract was made for good consideration, we think that the defendants should not be allowed to turn round and say that the terms of that document are all incorrect, and the person from whom the money was received, but to whom the document conveys no interest, must be brought in.

We, therefore, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts, and remand the case for trial on its merits. Costs to abide the result.

Hindu law—Will—Construction of Will—Devise of immoveable property—Bequest to Widows—Life interest—Succession Act (X of 1865), section 82—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), section 3—Gift over.

A Hindu testator gave a twelve annas share of his property to his two wives by clause 2 of his will which was as follows —

"My first and second wives shall together be entitled to twelve annas of all the properties left by me and D and R sons of my father's sister's son R N C, deceased, who have been living in commensality from the time of my predecessor, shall be entitled to a four annas share in equal shares, according to the following rules" Clause 4 was as follows: "If there should be any dispute or disagreement between my two wives, or if there be any disagreement between either or both of them and the executors abovenamed, she or they live in my family dwelling house, or according to the rules of Hindu religion in some holy place, maintaining a good character, then each of them shall receive a monthly allowance of Rs 10 for maintenance, but if otherwise she shall be entirely deprived of her right." Clause 9 provided that no person of the family of the fathers of his two wives should be able to exercise any control over the money and property left by the testator Clause 5 provided for the education of the testator's sister's son The gift over was to the effect that any one acting contrary to the terms of the will should be deprived of his interest which should in due course devolve on the other heirs

It was found on the evidence that forfeiture under clause 4 of the will had been incurred by the defendant B, the younger widow of the testator, by reason of her having broken the condition relating to residence

Held, that section 82 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), which enacts that "where property is bequeathed to any person, he is entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein, unless it appears from the will that only a restricted interest was intended for him," applied to the case

Held, also, that the will gave only a restricted interest to the widows, and that clause 2 of the will should be construed as giving to the widows, as joint tenants, a life interest in a twelve annas share of the estate with the right of survivorship.

The clause in the will as to residence was valid and binding.

* Appeal from Original Decree No 111 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Krishna Chunder Das, Subordinate Judge of Pubna and Bograh, dated the 4th of February 1895.

[647] Held, further, that the plaintiff, the son of testator's sister, who was in existence at the date of the testator's death, and who was the next reversionary heir after his widows, was entitled to take under the gift over, and not the heirs to the stridhana of P, the elder widow of the testator.

THE facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, and Moulvi Mahomed Habibullah, for Babu Haran Chunder Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Babu Srinath Dass, Babu Golap Chunder Sircar and Babu Hurro Prashad Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows :—

This was a suit for the construction of the will of one Chandra Nath Maitra, for a declaration that since the death of Peyari Sundari, his elder widow, a twelve annas share of the estate left by him has vested by inheritance in the plaintiff, his sister's son, for a further declaration that defendant No. 1, Bhoba Tarini, the younger widow of the testator, has forfeited all her rights in the estate of her husband, that the putni granted by her in favour of defendant No. 2, Kailash Chandra Shah, is inoperative as against the plaintiff, and that defendant No. 1 is in any case incompetent to manage the estate, and for recovery of possession of certain properties and for confirmation of plaintiff's possession in certain others. The main allegations of fact upon which the suit was based are, that on the death of Chandra Nath Maitra, his widow Peyari Sundari, and Modhu Sudan Chakravarti, took out probate of his will and managed his estate ; that on the death of Modhu Sudan Chakravarti and Peyari Sundari, the defendant No. 1 obtained letters of administration in respect of the estate of the testator , that the defendant No. 1, by reason of her disagreement with her co-widow and the executor to the will, left the family-dwelling house of her husband, and she has been leading an unchaste life, and her right to the estate of her husband has consequently become extinguished under the terms of the will ; that of the twelve annas share of the testator's estate, which was bequeathed to his two widows, the six annas share obtained by Peyari Sundari devolved on the plaintiff by inheritance on her death, and the six annas obtained by the defendant [648] No. 1 has also devolved on him as the next heir of the testator by reason of the extinguishment of her right ; and that the putni of this last-mentioned share granted by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 is invalid. Doorga Nath Chuckerbutty and Rojoni Nath Chuckerbutty, sons of the testator's father's sister's son, who have obtained a four annas share of the estate under the will, have been made defendants 3 and 4.

The suit was contested by defendants 1 and 2 who filed separate written statements ; and the substance of their defence was, that the twelve annas share of the estate bequeathed to the two widows had become vested in the defendant No. 1 ; that the plaintiff's allegation that the defendant No. 1 had forfeited her right by reason of her disagreement with her co-widow and the executor, her change of residence and her unchastity, was unfounded and untrue; that the putni granted to defendant No. 2 was valid and binding as being an alienation for legal necessity ; and that the plaintiff was not the legitimate son of the testator's sister, and consequently not the next reversionary heir.

Upon these pleadings several issues were raised ; and the Court below, having found them all in favour of the plaintiff, has given him a decree as prayed.

Against that decree defendants 1 and 2 have preferred this appeal, and it is contended on their behalf, first, that the Court below is wrong in holding that the widows of the testator took a limited estate, whereas it ought to have held that they took an absolute estate under the will;

secondly, that the Court below should have held that the widows took the bequest as joint tenants, and that on Peyari Sundari's death the whole estate bequeathed devolved on defendant No. 1 by survivorship;

thirdly, that even if they took the bequest as tenants in common, the Court below should have held that the share obtained by Peyari Sundari passed on her death to the heirs to her stridhana and not to the plaintiff;

fourthly, that the Court below is wrong in holding that defendant No. 1 has forfeited her interest in her husband's property, whereas it ought to have held that the clause in the will relating [649] to forfeiture was void for vagueness; and that the evidence adduced in the case was insufficient to prove the unchastity of defendant No. 1, and the other contingencies upon the happening of which forfeiture was to follow: and fifthly, that the Court below should have held that the gift over under which the plaintiff claims was invalid.

On the first point, it is contended for the appellants, that under section 82 of the Indian Succession Act, which the Hindu Wills Act makes applicable to the will in this case, the two widows of the testator must be held to have acquired the same interest in the twelve annas share of the estate bequeathed to them that he had, that is an absolute interest; and it is further argued that, quite irrespectively of that section, they took an absolute interest under the terms of the will.

On the other hand, the learned Vakils for the respondents contended that, having regard to the last proviso to section 3 of the Hindu Wills Act and to the provisions of the Hindu law as laid down in the Dayabhaga, chapter IV, section 1, § 23 which governs this case, section 82 of the Succession Act cannot have any application here: and that, even if it was applicable, still the will should not be construed as giving the widows any absolute interest. And several cases have been cited in support of the argument on each side.

The clause in the will bequeathing a twelve annas share to the two widows runs thus: "My first and second wives shall together be entitled to 12 (twelve) annas of all the properties left by me and Doorga Nath Chuckerbutty and Rojoni Nath Chuckerbutty sons of my father's sister's son Radha Nath Chuckerbutty, deceased, who have been living in commensality from the time of my predecessor, shall be entitled to a four annas share in equal shares, according to the following rules." And there is nothing in the will either in what follows or in what precedes, expressly stating that the widows are to take an absolute estate.

If this stood alone, and section 82 of the Indian Succession Act was not applicable to the case, then as the bequest (which in this respect follows the same rule as a gift) was one of immoveable property by the husband to his wives, they would take a [650] limited estate under the Dayabhaga. They would take the property without having any power to alienate it; and property over which they have not the power of alienation, cannot constitute their stridhana or absolute property (see Dayabhaga, chapter IV, section I, 18, 19 and 23), and must on their death pass to the heirs of their husband. (See Colebrooke's Digest, Bk. V, 515, Commentary). On the other hand, if section 82 of the Indian Succession Act applies to this case, then, unless the will shews that a restricted interest was intended to be created, they must be held to have acquired an absolute estate.

Now, the only ground upon which it can possibly be said that section 82 does not apply here is, that the last paragraph of section 3 of the Hindu Wills Act makes it inapplicable. But does it really make the section inapplicable to the present case? It does not, like the corresponding provision of the Transfer of Property Act in section 2, enact that nothing contained in the Act "shall affect any rule of Hindu law," but it merely says that nothing contained in the Act "shall authorise a Hindu to create in property any interest which he could not have created before." But a Hindu husband was never incompetent to create in favour of his wife an absolute interest in immoveable property bequeathed by him to her, though it was necessary, in order to create such interest, to use express language to that effect. The application of section 82 to a case like the present cannot therefore be said to be barred by section 3 of the Hindu Wills Act. Nor do the cases of Cally Nath Naugh Chowdhry v. Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdhry (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 378) and Alangamonjori Dabee v. Sonamoni Dabee (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 637), cited for the respondents, bear upon the present question, the sections of the Indian Succession Act, of which the appllication to Hindus was held in those cases to be restricted by section 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, having really the effect of authorising the creation of an interest in property which a Hindu could not create before, namely, an interest in favour of an unborn person. We feel bound to add, however, that, though we are unable to construe section 3 of the Hindu Wills Act as making section 82 of the Succession Act inapplicable to a case like the present, yet we think it very doubtful whether the attention [651] of the Legislature was directed to the point that the application of section 82 to Hindu Wills might have the effect of partially abrogating the rule of Hindu law that a gift by the husband of immoveable property to the wife without express words creating an absolute estate, conveys only a limited interest

Section 82 of the Indian Succession Act being, in our opinion, applicable to this will, it becomes unnecessary to examine at length the cases cited on either side upon the first point, as they were decided without reference to the provisions of that section. We only wish to observe with regard to those cases, that an important distinction, which is sometimes lost sight of, may reconcile the apparent conflict in some of them. The rule of Hindu law referred to above is based upon a text attributed to Narada cited in the Dayabhaga, chapter IV, section I, 23, and is limited to the case of gift of immoveable property to the wife, and it is to this particular case that the decision in Koonj Behari Dhur v. Prem Chund Dutt (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 684) relates, while in Kollany Koer v. Luchmee Pershad (24 W. R., 395), the question for decision was whether a gift to the daughter conveyed an absolute estate, and what the learned Judges held was that there was nothing in the Hindu law to show that a gift to a female means a limited gift.

But though section 82 of the Indian Succession Act applies to this case, we think it appears from the will, amply within the meaning of that section, that only a restricted interest was intended to be created in favour of the widows. In construing a document like this, which is the will of a Hindu, "it is not improper," observe their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Shumsul Huda v. Shewakram (L. R., 2 I. A., 7: 14 B. L. R., 226), "to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family; and it may be assumed that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule, at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate." And these notions and wishes are amply and emphatically indicated in the will before us. For, though the bequest to the two widows of the testator, and that in favour of his [652] father's sister's grandsons, are contained in one and the same clause of the will (namely, the second) the estate granted to the former is made defeasible upon the happening of certain events specified in clause 4 which, according to Hindu notions, imply dereliction of duty on the part of a widow. Again in the 9th clause the testator says: "No person of the family of the fathers of my two wives shall be able to exercise any control over the money and property left by me." This would be wholly inconsistent with an intention to give the wives an absolute estate, as in that case their estate must, in the absence of lineal descendants of whom there were none, pass to their brothers and parents; (see Dayabhaga, chapter IV, section III, 29). Moreover, if the widows were intended to take an absolute estate, the testator's sister's son, who was the next reversionary heir, and who, as the 5th clause of the will shows, was an object of affection to him, would get nothing. Such an intention would, therefore, be extremely unlikely, especially when we find that the testator left a four annas share of the estate to the sons of his father's sister's son. We are, therefore, of opinion that the widows took only life estates under the will. We may observe that the view we take is quite in accordance with the cases of Punchoo Money Dossee v. Troylucko Mohinee Dossee (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 342) and Hirabai v. Lakshmibai (I. L. R, 11 Bom., 573).

In support of the second contention it is argued for the appellants that where a bequest is made in favour of two persons without any specification of their shares, they take as joint tenants with right of survivorship and not as tenants in common: and section 93 of the Indian Succession Act, and the judgment of COUCH, C.J., in Mahomed Shumsul Huda v. Shewakram (7 B. L. R., 700 note: L. R., 2 I. A., 11) are relied upon. It is further urged that, while in the bequest in favour of the two grandsons of the testator's father's sister, it is expressly said that they are to take the four annas given to them in equal shares, the bequest of the twelve annas to the widows in the same clause (the second) makes no mention of the shares in which they are to take; and that this indicates an intention that they are to take as joint tenants.

With reference to the first branch of this argument, [653] though the view contended for is in accordance with the rule of English law (see Jarman on Wills, 5th edition, p. 1115), yet there is not much in reason to commend it for acceptance. Where any property is bequeathed to two or more persons without any specification of shares, the natural presumption is that they are intended to take in equal shares; and when the estate bequeathed is one of inheritance, it is far more reasonable to suppose that each legatee and his heirs are the objects of the testator's bounty, than that he intends that the legatees should take by survivorship, and the heirs of the last surviving legatee should take the whole. We may observe that even in English law the leaning has been in favour of tenancy in common; and "the Court," as Lord THURLOW remarked in Jolliffe v. East (3 Brown's C. C., 35), "decrees a tenancy in common as much as it can." Section 93 of the Succession Act, which only relates to the case of one of two legatees dying before the testator, does not touch the present question. Nor does the judgment of Sir R. COUCH in Mahomed Shumsul Huda v. Shewakram (7 B. L. R., 700 note: L. R., 2 I. A., 11), in which the Privy Council did not think it necessary to decide the point, lay down the broad rule that the appellants contend for, the learned Chief Justice distinctly observing, as a reason for construing the bequest as creating a joint tenancy, that "it is only by this construction that the estate can be kept in the testator's family," an intention to keep the estate in the testator's family being indicated by the language of the will and by surrounding circumstances. On the other hand, the Privy Council in Rewun Persad v. Radha Bibee (4 Moore I. A, 137) held that joint legatees in such a case would take as tenants in common. The second branch of the argument is, however, in our opinion, sound; and we think we must construe the second clause of the will as giving to the widows as joint tenants a life interest in a twelve annas share of the estate, with the right of survivorship. If the intention had been that the widows should take the twelve annas as tenants in common, their shares would have been specified in the same way as those of the testator's father's sister's grandsons in the same clause. But after all, in the view we [654] have taken of the bequest in favour of the widows upon the first contention of the appellants, namely, that it creates only a life estate, the question whether they took as joint tenants or as tenants in common is not of much practical importance. For, even if they took life estates as tenants in common, upon the death of either, the property bequeathed to her for her life must pass to the surviving widow as the next heir of the testator, who would acquire a widow's estate in the same as upon an intestacy, unless such estate is defeated by some other provisions of the will.

In the view we have taken of the bequest in favour of the widows, namely, that they took as joint tenants a life estate in the property bequeathed, with the right of survivorship, the third contention of the appellant does not arise.

We now come to the consideration of the fourth contention of the appellants which involves two questions, namely, what is the meaning and effect of the fourth clause of the will which provides that the widows shall forfeit their right upon the happening of certain events? And how far have those events happened? The fourth clause of the will, of which the translation, as given in the paper-book, is slightly inaccurate, runs thus: "If there be any dispute or disagreement between my two wives, or if there being any disagreement between either or both of them and the executor above named, she or they live in my family-dwelling house, or according to the rules of Hindu religion in some holy place, maintaining a good character, then each of them shall receive a monthly allowance of Rs. 10 for maintenance; but if otherwise she shall be entirely deprived of her right." The construction of this clause is not altogether free from difficulty. We think it means this, that if the two widows quarrel with each other, or if either or both of them quarrel with the executor and live either in the testator's family dwelling-house or in some holy place, observing the rules of Hindu religion and leading a chaste life, then each of them shall receive as maintenance Rs. 10 a month, but if they act otherwise, that is, if they neither live in the testator's family dwelling-house, nor in a holy place, according to the rules of Hindu religion, leading a chaste life, they shall be entirely deprived of their rights; so that, according to this clause of the will, either widow forfeits [655] her right if she quarrels with her co-widow or with the executor, and does not reside in the testator's family dwelling-house, nor in a holy place, according to the rules of Hindu religion, leading a chaste life.

If, therefore, it is proved that the testator's younger widow, the defendant No. 1, quarrelled with the elder widow, Peyari Sundari, and with the executor, and has been residing neither in the testator's family dwelling-house, nor in any holy place, but in her father's house, then in our opinion forfeiture has been incurred quite apart from the question whether she has been leading an unchaste life, which the Court below has answered in the affirmative. The learned Vakil for the appellants contends upon the authority of Fillingham v. Bromely (1 T. and R., 530), and the judgment of Lord CRANWORTH in Clavering

v. Ellison [7 H. L. C., 707 (726)], that the clause in the will requiring residence at certain places is void for uncertainty and unreasonableness, that there cannot therefore be any forfeiture for breach of such a condition, and that the finding of the Court below upon the question of unchastity is not warranted by the evidence.

We are of opinion that there is nothing uncertain or unreasonable in the condition to make it void. For reasons best known to him, the testator, as the ninth clause of the will clearly shows, had either no liking for, or no confidence in, the paternal relations of his wives; and so he naturally insisted upon his widows residing in his family dwelling-house, or, should mutual disagreement or disagreements with the executor make that inconvenient, then in some holy place, according to the rules of Hindu religion. And considering the habits and mode of life of Hindu widows, none of the difficulties adverted to in the cases cited can arise with reference to the condition in the will now under consideration. On the other hand, a condition, requiring residence in a certain house to entitle the legatee to the estate bequeathed, was considered valid by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Ganendro Mohun Tagore v. Juttendro Mohun Tagore (L. R., 1 I. A., 397: 14 B. L. R., 60); and the Bombay High Court in Mulji Bhaishankar [656] v. Bai Ujam (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 218) and Girianna Murkundi Naik v. Honama (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 236) held that a condition in the husband's will requiring residence in a certain place to entitle the widow to maintenance was valid in law; and though the learned Judges in both these cases held that breach of the condition for just cause would not defeat the widow's right, no question of just cause can arise here, seeing that the will itself provides that when residence in the family-dwelling house may become inconvenient, the widow may live in any holy place, nor is there any suggestion that there was any just cause for not complying with this alternative condition. The condition being in our opinion valid and binding, let us next see whether it has been broken. The answer to this question need not detain us long. The defendant No. 1, Bhoba Tarini, admits in her deposition that, after Peyari Sundari, her co-widow, had obtained probate, she instituted proceedings for revocation of the probate and lost the case; and that she instituted another case for nikas or accounts against Peyari Sundari. She also admits that she had misunderstanding with Modhu Sudan Chakravarti, the executor named in the will And though Bhoba Tarini and some of her witnesses, such as her brother Chandra Nath Chakravarti and her naib Girish Chandra Shikdar, say that she lives sometimes at her husband's house at Kalagachi and sometimes at her father's at Bachra, we agree with the Court below in thinking that their evidence is unreliable, and insufficient to rebut the evidence of the witnesses examined for the plaintiff, two of whom, Modhu Sudan Maitra and Prasanna Kumar Nundi, who are men of some position and respectability, and appear from the tenor of their depositions to be perfectly fair and straightforward witnesses, we see no reason whatever to disbelieve. These two witnesses prove that for the last six or seven years Bhoba Tarini has been living at her father's house at Bachra, and though they say that she may have occasionally gone to her husband's family dwelling-house, that cannot amount to her residing there. Bhoba Tarini's admission that she had quarrels with Peyari Sundari, with Modhu Sudan Chakravarti, with the plaintiff and his mother, and in fact, with almost everyone of her husband's relations, goes clearly to corroborate the evidence on the plaintiff's side that [657] she had left her husband's abode, and has been residing at her father's house at Bachra. We, therefore, find, on the evidence, that the condition about residence has clearly been broken, and the forfeiture mentioned in the fourth clause of the will incurred.

In this view of the case it is not necessary to consider the question of unchastity. But as the finding of the Court below upon that question must seriously affect the defendant No. 1, and as the evidence on the point has been fully discussed before us, and is, in our opinion, insufficient to warrant that finding, we deem it desirable to state our reasons for disagreeing with the Court below on this point. We may observe that the evidence shews that there has been for some years a good deal of scandal in the village of Bachra concerning defendant No. 1, arising out of her reckless want of modesty in general, and her unusual familiarity with defendant No. 2, Kailash Chandra Shah in particular. We should add that we consider the evidence adduced for the defendants to show that Kailash Chandra Shah never goes to see Bhoba Tarini at Bachra is unreliable, as it is opposed, not only to the evidence of the witness Prasanna Kumar Nundi, whom we consider to be perfectly reliable, but also to the probabilities of the case, Kailash Chandra Shah being the person who has taken a putni of the share of Bhoba Tarini, and who is looking after her affairs. But though that is so, the question still remains whether the evidence is sufficient to prove the charge of unchastity; and to that question the answer should, we think, be in the negative. The witnesses chiefly relied upon by the Court below upon the point are Madhub Chandra Chakravarti, his son Purnendu, his nephew Umesh, his priest Modhu Sudan Maitra, and the pleader Doorga Kanto Chakravarti. But Modhu Sudan Maitra, whom we consider a truthful witness, says: "I have not myself seen anything against Bhoba Tarini's character, but I have heard." As for what Doorga Kant Chakravarti says in his deposition in this case and his former deposition put in and admitted by him to be correct, it is by no means very clear evidence of unchastity, the statements and conduct imputed to Bhoba Tarini being quite reconcilable with innocence, and being evidence only of want of modesty. The witnesses Madhub, his son and his nephew no doubt depose to facts which, if true, would be evidence of unchastity, but considering the ill-feeling existing between Bhoba [658] Tarini and Madhub, as is admitted by Madhub himself, we think it would be unsafe to hold upon their evidence that the serious charge of unchastity brought against Bhoba Tarini has been established. The remaining witnesses on the point do not call for any special remark. We may observe that their statements, and in particular those of Modhu Sudan Singh, are of an improbable character, the last-named witness evidently attempting to prove too much. Upon the whole evidence, then, we find the charge of unchastity brought against defendant No. 1 not established. Forfeiture under clause 4 of the will is, however, as we have said above, incurred by her by reason of her having broken the condition relating to residence.

But though that is so, what she has forfeited under the will she may claim by inheritance as the next heir of the testator, unless there is any valid gift over. This brings us to the consideration of the question raised in the fifth and last contention of the appellants, namely, whether the gift over under which the plaintiff claims is valid. The clause in the will relating to this gift over is the one at the end of the first paragraph, which, as translated in the paper-book, runs thus: " And any one acting contrary thereto [that is to the terms of the will] should be deprived of his interest which shall in due course devolve on the other heirs." We should note here that the word in the original, which is here translated as "his," is in the common gender, and may mean either " his" or " her," and the word rendered as " heirs " is in the singular number in the original. It is contended by the appellants that the clause relating to the gift over is void as infringing, if not in its application to the actual event in the present case, at any rate, in the possible range of its application, the rule of Hindu law that the donee must be a sentient being that is not an unborn person. There is no dispute that in the actual event that has happened, that is, on the date that the forfeiture under clause 4, as found above, was incurred, the plaintiff who is the sister's son of the testator was the next heir after the widow, and that he was in existence at the date of the will and of the testator's death, being in fact the person referred to, though not by name, in the fifth clause of the will. But it is argued that it was possible that at the date the forfeiture was incurred, some one not in existence at the tes- [659] tator's death, but subsequently born, might have been the next reversionary heir, and if that was so, the gift over, it is said, is void. In support of this argument the case of Lord Dungannon v. Smith (12 Cl. and F., 546) is relied upon. In that case the testator bequeathed certain leasehold estates to trustees in trust to pay the rents and profits to his grandson during his life, and after his death in trust to permit the person who for the time being should take by descent, as heir male of the body of his grandson, to take the rents and profits until the time that some one of such persons should attain the age of twenty-one years, and then to convey the premises to that person with a further gift over, if no such person should live to attain the age of twenty-one, in favour of certain other descendants of the testator in succession. At the death of the grandson his son, who was twenty-one years, entered into possession of the leasehold estates. But on a bill filed against him by the next of kin it was held that the gift over under which he claimed was void for remoteness, because, though in the actual event the property bequeathed might have vested within a life in being and twenty-one years afterwards, yet at the date of the testator's death it could not be said that in any possible event the property must vest, if at all, within the time allowed by law, that is, a life or lives in being and twenty-one years and nine or ten months afterwards; and the opinion expressed by two of the learned Judges that the gift over might be regarded as a series of separate gifts to the eldest son of the grandson if he attained twenty-one years, if not, then to other male heirs of the body of the testator's grandson in succession, was not accepted as correct, because there was no gift to the eldest son, except as one of a series of persons, and there was no authority for splitting the bequest in the manner suggested.

It is contended that this case is authority for the position that in order to determine whether a gift over violates any rule of law, we must look, not to actual events at the date when the benefit of the gift is claimed, but to possible events at the date of the testator's death. We are unable to accept this broad contention as correct. The decision in the case cited is based upon the ground that it is a settled rule of English law affirmed by a long series of decisions that a bequest is void for remoteness unless it necessarily vests, if [660] at all, within a life or lives in being or twenty-one years and nine or ten months afterwards. Is there any similarly settled rule of law applicable to this case that a bequest is void unless it necessarily is in favour of persons all of whom are in existence at the testator's death? If there is, the gift over will fail, unless it is possible to construe it as a series of gifts over, one or more of which may be valid and the rest void. If not, there is no reason why the gift over should not be valid, so far as it enures to the benefit of the plaintiff, who unquestionably was in existence at the date of the testator's death. It was at one time thought that there was such a rule of law applicable to bequests by Hindus, and it was held in the cases of Soudamney Dossee v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 262) and Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455), following Leake v. Robinson (2 Mer., 363), that a bequest to a class, some of whom may come into existence after the testator's death, was wholly void. But it has now been authoritatively settled by the decision of the Privy Council in Rai Bishen Chand v. Asmaida Koer (I. L. R., 6 All., 560: L. R., 11 I. A., 164) that this view is incorrect, being supported neither by the Hindu law, nor by any of the provisions of the Indian Succession Act which have been made applicable to Hindus. In that case their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that a gift in favour of the donor's "grandson Satrujit and the brothers of Satrujit that may be subsequently born" was valid, so far as Satrujit's interest was concerned. And following that case this Court held in Ram Lal Sett v. Kanai Lal Sett (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 663) that a gift by a Hindu to his two living grandsons and to their brothers that may be born afterwards conveyed a valid title to the two living grandsons. If that is so, there is still greater reason why the plaintiff, who was in existence at the date of the testator's death, and was and is the next reversionary heir after his widows, should be held entitled to take under the gift over. He is not one of several joint donees, some of whom are incompetent to take, but is one of a series of persons of whom he, who is the next reversioner at the date that the widow's interest ceases, is intended to take; and he answered that description at the time when that interest ceased [661] It was clearly the intention of the testator that in the event which has happened he should take the estate; and there is no reason why effect should not be given to that intention.

The grounds urged before us therefore all fail, and the decree appealed from must be affirmed, except as regards costs. But seeing that the question about the construction of the will is not altogether free from difficulty, and seeing also that the charge of unchastity brought against defendant No. 1 has not been established, we think the defendants, though unsuccessful, should not be made liable for the costs of the plaintiff. The result then is that the decree of the Court below will be affirmed, except so far as it makes the defendants liable for the costs of the plaintiff; and the parties will bear their own costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Valuation of Suit—Designed exaggeration of valuation—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), section 11—Munsif, Jurisdiction of—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 578—Jurisdiction—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), section 15, sub section 3.

A suit was brought in the Munsif's Court for money as well as for damages valued at Rs. 1,004. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 900, but dismissed the claim for the balance, which was for damages. On appeal the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the claim had been designedly exaggerated, and he therefore held that the suit was one cognizable by the Small Cause Court, and directed the plaint to be returned to the plaintiff for the purpose of presenting it to the proper Court.

Held, that as the suit was tried on its merits by the first Court, and the over-valuation of the suit was not found by the Appellate Court to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits, the objection as to jurisdiction should not have been given effect to, and therefore the Court below was wrong in directing the plaint to be returned.

THE facts of this case and the arguments appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Moulvie Abdul Jawad for the Appellants.

Babu Nil Madhub Bose and Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ.) was delivered by Banerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs, appellants, to recover a sum of Rs. 1,004, on the allegation that the plaintiff No. 1 gave to the defendant a currency note for Rs. 1,000 for change, believing, under a mistake, that it was a note for Rs. 100 only; that the defendant shortly afterwards returned to plaintiff No. 1 a note for Rs. 100 making her believe that it was the identical currency note which she had made over to the defendant, and saying that he was unable to change it, that subsequently, upon the mistake being discovered on the return of the husband of plaintiff No. 1, the defendant was asked to give back the currency note for Rs. 1,000, but he denied having received it, that not having had in their hands this note for Rs. 1,000, the plaintiffs, to meet the expense for the construction of their house had to borrow Rs. 800 on interest, and thus had been made liable to pay interest, to the extent of Rs. 104; and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to recover from the defendant Rs. 900, being the difference between the Rs. 1,000 note made over to him, and the Rs. 100 note received from him, together with Rs 104 as damages.

The defence was that the defendant was not liable for the plaintiff's claim; and that, on the face of the plaint, the claim could only have been for Rs, 900, and it had evidently been exaggerated with the object of ousting the jurisdiction of the proper Court in which the suit should have been brought.

The parties went to trial upon the following issues: "First, [663] whether the Court has jurisdiction to try the suit? Second, whether the defendant misappropriated the proceeds of a Rs. 1,000 note belonging to the plaintiff? Third, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any and what damages?"

The first Court, after having found upon the third issue that the claim for damages was not made out, in its decision upon the first issue, said this: "The plaintiffs' claim, as stated in the plaint, is composed of two portions: one for Rs. 900, being the proceeds of their Rs. 1,000 note alleged to have been misappropriated by the defendant, and another for Rs. 104, being the amount of damages claimed. It has been observed above that the latter claim for Rs. 104 is not made out. The plaintiffs' case is now confined only to the first portion of their claim, namely, for Rs. 900. The question which is now pressed before the Court by the learned pleader for the defendant is that the plaintiffs' claim, which is now reduced below Rs. 1,000, should be tried by the Small Cause Court at Sealdah and not by this Court, the plaintiffs being not at liberty, by making an unwarrantable addition to their claim, to bring the present suit within the cognizance of this Court, ousting the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court." And a little further on it observed: "In the present case, plaintiffs very legitimately claimed damages, but they failed to make them out. This failure on their part will not oust the jurisdiction of this Court." And then having found the second issue for the plaintiffs, the first Court gave them a decree for Rs. 900.

On appeal the Lower Appellate Court has reversed that decree, and ordered the plaint to be returned to the plaintiffs for the purpose of being presented to the proper Court, on the ground that the suit properly lay in the Court of Small Causes, and not in the Court of the Munsif, the claim having been designedly exaggerated, with the view of bringing the suit in the Munsif's Court. In support of its decision, the Lower Appellate Court refers to the cases of Nanda Kumar Banerjee v. Ishan Chandra Banerjee (1 B. L. R., Ap., 91), Bonomally Nawn v. Campbell (10 B. L. R., 193) and Lakshman Bhatkar v. Babaji Bhatkar (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 31).

[664] In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiffs that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in law, and that the cases relied upon in that decision are distinguishable from the present; and in support of this contention, section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), and the cases of Mohee Lall v. Kheta Ram Marwary (25 W. R., 76) and Damodhar Timaji Gosavi v. Trimbak Sakharam (I. L. R., 10 Bom., 370) are relied upon.

We are of opinion that the appellants' contention is correct. This is how the matter stands. Under sub-section 3 of section 15 of Act IX of 1887, the local Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to try suits for money, where the amount does not exceed Rs. 1,000, and by section 19, sub-section 2, of Act XII of 1887, the local Munsif has jurisdiction to try suits where the value does not exceed Rs. 2,000. In the present case, therefore, if the claim had been only for the sum of Rs. 900 decreed by the first Court, the Small Cause Court, and not the Court of the Munsif, would have had jurisdiction to try the suit, and the question is whether, although the suit was valued at Rs. 1,004, that is, at an amount which exceeded the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, and made the suit triable by the Munsif, the fact of this valuation being the result of a designed exaggeration of the claim for the purpose of evading the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court and bringing the suit in the Munsif's Court, as the Lower Appellate Court has found, makes the suit really one cognizable by the Court of Small Causes, and the plaint liable to be returned to the plaintiff for presentation to that Court, notwithstanding that the suit was tried by the Munsif on the merits, and notwithstanding that the Appellate Court does not find that the over-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits.

We are of opinion that, having regard to the provisions of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, this question ought to be answered in the negative. That section enacts that, "Notwithstanding anything in section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an objection that by reason of over-valuation or under-valuation of a suit"—we quote only so much of the section as is applicable to the present case—"a Court of First Instance, which had not [665] jurisdiction with reference to the suit exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto, shall not be entertained by an Appellate Court unless (a) the objection was taken in the Court of First Instance on or before the first hearing, or (b) the Appellate Court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing that the suit was over-valued, and that the over-valuation thereof has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits." And the section goes on to enact that, "if the objection was taken in the manner mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section 1, but the Appellate Court is not satisfied as to both the matters mentioned in clause (b) of that sub-section, and has before it the materials necessary for the determination of the other grounds of appeal itself, it shall dispose of the appeal as if there had been no defect of jurisdiction in the Court of First Instance."

Now in the present case, although the objection was taken in the first Court before the first hearing, and although the Appellate Court was satisfied that the suit was over-valued, it does not say that it is satisfied that the over-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of this suit on its merits. The Appellate Court, therefore, has not here proceeded in conformity with sub-section 2 of section 11, as it ought to have done.

It was argued by the learned Vakil for the respondent that section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act has no application to this case, because the Act is intended, as its preamble shows, only to prescribe the mode of valuing certain suits, and that section 11 is limited in its operation to those cases where the change of jurisdiction is from a higher to a lower Court of the same class, that is, from a Subordinate Judge's Court to a Munsif's Court, or vice versâ, and not where it is from a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, like a Court of Small Causes, to that of a Munsif.

We do not think that this argument is sound. Though the object of the Act is to prescribe the mode of valuing certain suits, section 11 comes under Part III of the Act which is headed as a part relating to supplemental provisions; and there is nothing in the language of the section to limit its operation in the way contended for. We are, therefore, of opinion that section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act applies to this case, and [666] that the Court of appeal below was wrong in reversing the decree of the first Court and directing the return of the plaint, without complying with the provisions of that section.

The two cases cited from the Bengal Law Reports are both distinguishable from the present; first, because they were decided before the Suits Valuation Act was passed; and, secondly, because the principle upon which they are based has no application to this case. That principle is this, that the plaintiff cannot give jurisdiction to or take away jurisdiction from a Court by adding to his claim something to which he was not entitled upon any view of the case, and that such unwarrantable addition to his claim must be struck out, and the jurisdiction of the Court determined with reference to the rest of his claim.

Can this be said of the claim for damages to the extent of Rs. 104 in this case? A claim for damages like this is not absolutely untenable as a matter of law; and it is only because the evidence, in the opinion of the Courts below, was insufficient to substantiate this part of the claim that it has to be dismissed. In our opinion this case is much more analogous to that of Mohee Lall v. Kheta Ram Marwary (25 W. R., 76), which we see no reason to dissent from, and which, we think, we ought to follow.

As for the case of Lakshman Bhatkar v. Babaji Bhatkar (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 31), there the first Court had returned the plaint on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to try the suit by reason of its value, and the High Court confirmed the first Court's decision. It is true that Mr. Justice WEST in his judgment observed: "An exaggerated claim thus brought for the purpose of getting a trial in a different Court from the one intended by the Legislature is substantially a fraud upon the law, and must be rejected, whether it arises from mere recklessness or from an artful design to get the adjudication of one Judge instead of that of another." This was a mere obiter dictum of the learned Judge; and having regard to the provisions of the Suits Valuation Act, which was passed some years after the date of this decision, and to the fact that in a later case, namely, that of Damodhar Timaji Gosavi v. Trimbak Sakharam (I. L. R., 10 Bom., 370), [667] which was governed by Act XI of 1865, the Bombay High Court declined to follow this dictum, we do not think that it would be right to apply that principle to this case. It is, no doubt, a sound rule that Courts should not allow parties to evade the law relating to matters of jurisdiction, and that, where it is found that a party has intentionally exaggerated his claim in order to bring his suit in a Court which otherwise would not have jurisdiction to try it, before the merits of the claim have been gone into the plaint should be returned to be presented to the proper Court. But this rule must be taken with qualifications; and one important qualification is that embodied in section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, which is this, namely, that where the suit has been tried on its merits by the first Court, and the over-valuation or under-valuation of the suit is not found by the Appellate Court to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits, there the objection as to jurisdiction should not be given effect to. A plaintiff who alters the valuation of his suit for the purpose of evading jurisdiction may be punished by having no costs allowed to him; but it would not, in our opinion, conduce to promote the ends of justice, if an Appellate Court were to set aside a decision which is found to be correct on the merits, simply because the value of the suit had been designedly increased, or diminished, to evade jurisdiction.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court must be set aside, and the case remanded to that Court in order that it may dispose of the appeal, having regard to the provisions of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Registration Act (III of 1877), section 77—Suit for registration of a conveyance—Power of Court to inquire into the genuineness as well as the validity of a document, Effect of—Execution of conveyance by a certificated guardian in contravention of the terms of permission granted by the District Judge—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), section 30

In a suit under section 77 † of the Registration Act a Court cannot go into any matter affecting the validity of a document apart from its genuineness The question of its validity must be determined in a suit properly framed for that purpose

Balambal Ammal v Arunachela Chetti (I L R 18 Mad 255), approved.

Where, therefore, a document was executed by the certificated guardian of a minor in contravention of the terms of permission accorded by the District Judge Held, the Court could under section 77 direct its registration, if only the document was proved to be genuine, although the document was voidable at the instance of the minor under section 30 ‡ of Act VIII of 1890

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are fully set out in the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Hori Mohan Chakravarty for the Appellant

Babu Bassant Coomar Bose, Dr Asutosh Mookerjee and Babu Jnanendra Nath Bose for the Respondent

Babu Hori Mohan Chakravarty.—The Courts below have taken an erroneous view of the scope of a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act. The Courts below, having found that the document had been executed by the guardian, should have ordered its registration, irrespective of the question whether or not the registered document would be binding against the minor; see Balambal Ammal v Arunachala Chetti (I L R, 18 Mad, 255).

[669] Babu Bassant Coomar Bose—In a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act the Court is entitled to inquire into the genuineness as well

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No 1363 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Amrita Lal Pal, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 8th of May 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Nogendra Nath Dhur, Munsif of Munshigunge, dated the 28th of June 1894,

† [Sec 77 —Where the Registrar refuses to order the document to be registered, under section 72 or section 76, any person claiming under such document, or his representative assign or agent, may, within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal, institute in the Civil Court within the local limits of whose original jurisdiction is situate the office in which the document is sought to be registered, a suit for a decree directing the document to be registered in such office, if it be duly presented for registration within thirty days after the passing of such decree, and the provisions contained in the second and third paragraphs of section 75, shall, mutatis mutandis, apply to all documents so presented, and notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, the document shall be receivable in evidence in such suit.]

(Margin: Suit in case of refusal)

‡ [Sec. 30.—A disposal of immoveable property by a guardian in contravention of either of the two last foregoing sections is voidable at the instance of any other person affected thereby.]

(Margin: Voidability of transfers made in contravention of section 28 or section 29)

as the validity of the document. In this case the guardian had admittedly exceeded the authority conferred on him by the Judge, and, therefore, the deed cannot bind the minor.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee on the same side —The question is whether there has been an execution of the document within the meaning of section 73 of the Registration Act, admittedly the document was not executed by the minor defendant; his guardian, as such, had only limited authority to execute a deed on his behalf, and if, as in the present instance, the guardian put his signature in excess of his authority, that ought not to be held to be execution by the minor or on his behalf within the meaning of section 73, the suit, therefore, ought to be dismissed against the minor

Babu Hori Mohan Chakravarty replied

The judgment of the High Court (Bannerjee and Rampini, JJ) was as follows —

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act (III of 1877) for a decree directing the registration of a conveyance executed on behalf of the minor, defendant No. 1, by his mother, defendant No 2, who was for the time being his guardian appointed under Act VIII of 1890, the Sub Registrar and the Registrar on appeal having refused to register the document The defendant No 2 having been removed from guardianship, the defendant No 1 is represented by Peary Lall Das who has since been appointed his guardian

The two defendants filed separate written statements, both denying the genuineness of the conveyance set up by the plaintiff, and, further, urging that, as the permission granted by the District Judge under Act VIII of 1890 was for selling the property covered by the conveyance for Rs 400, and as the sale to the plaintiff was for Rs 200, even if the conveyance was genuine, it was invalid by reason of its being executed in contravention of the terms of the permission

The first Court held that the conveyance was a genuine document, but it dismissed the suit on the ground that it was [670] invalid, as it was executed by the guardian of the minor in disregard of the terms of the permission granted by the Judge, and on appeal the Munsif's decision has been affirmed by the Subordinate Judge

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiff -

First, that the Courts below have misconstrued the order of the District Judge granting permission to sell the property in question in holding that the sale that was sanctioned was to be for a certain price when the order makes no mention of price, and, secondly, that granting that the sale was in contravention of the Judge's permission, the Court in a suit under section 77 was bound to inquire only into the question of the genuineness of the conveyance, and the finding upon that question being in favour of the plaintiff, the Courts below are wrong in law in dismissing the suit

The first point need not detain us long In the view we take of the scope of a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act, it is unnecessary to determine this point. We may only incidentally observe that, though the order of the District Judge granting permission does not, it is true, make any mention of the price, the order must be read along with the petition upon which it was passed, and reading the order and the petition together, we think the Courts below were quite right in the view taken by them that the sale to the plaintiff was in contravention of the terms of the permission The first contention of the appellant must therefore fail.

The question raised in the second contention, namely, whether in a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act, the Court can go into any matter affecting the validity of a document, apart from its genuineness, is not alogether free from difficulty. After giving our best consideration to it, we think the question ought to be answered in favour of the appellant.

The suit contemplated by section 77 of the Registration Act is, to use the words of the section, "a suit for a decree directing the document to be registered," and not a suit for a decree declaring the validity or the binding character of the document. What then is the Court to inquire into in such a suit? Is it simply the question of the genuineness of the document, or that of its [671] genuineness and validity as well? We are of opinion that it is only the former. For it is only the question of execution, together with the connected question whether the executant is a minor, an idiot, or a lunatic, that the Registering Officer is required to inquire into, under sections 34 and 35 of the Act, when a document is presented for registration; and the inquiry in a suit under section 77, which is the last step that may be resorted to, to enforce registration, should be held to be limited to the same question.

Where, as in this case, the document is one that is required by section 17 of the Registration Act to be registered, section 49 of the Act makes it inadmissible as evidence of any transaction affecting immoveable property, unless it has been registered; and the object of a suit under section 77 is to obtain registration of the document so as to remove the bar to its admissibility in evidence, the question of its validity being left to be determined in a proper suit. This view, we may add, is in accordance with the case of Balambal Ammal v. Arunachala Chetti (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 255).

It may no doubt appear at first sight somewhat anomalous, that a document of which the invalidity is evident, as it is in this case, should, nevertheless, have to be ordered to be registered, if the view we take of section 77 is correct. But a little consideration will show that a much greater anomaly might result if the opposite view were accepted. For the party propounding a document may, notwithstanding its invalidity, be entitled to collateral relief in the form of refund of consideration and the like, which the limited scope of a suit under section 77, which is only for a decree directing the document to be registered, may prevent the Court from granting. The case before us is an instance in point. Though the document here is voidable under section 30 of Act VIII of 1890, the plaintiff is entitled to a refund of the consideration money which he has paid; but the Court cannot grant him that relief in this suit.

The document is found to have been executed by the guardian of the minor for the time being. It is true it was executed in contravention of the terms of the permission accorded by the District Judge, but the law (section 30 of Act VIII of 1890) only declares that the document is voidable. That being so, in the [672] view we have taken of the scope of a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed.

The decrees of the Courts below must, therefore, be set aside, and the plaintiff's suit decreed with costs in all the Courts.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Joint Hindu family under Mitakshara Law—Sale of joint family property in execution of decree against father—Decree for damages for theft or misappropriation—Antecedent debt—Pious duty of sons to pay father's debt—Bona fide purchaser, Equities of.

In execution of a decree for damages for theft or misappropriation against M and S, two of the members of a joint Hindu family under the Mitakshara Law, ancestral property of the family was sold and the purchasers took possession. In a suit by the sons of M and S and several other members of the family for recovery of their interests in the property, Held, that there was no "debt antecedent" to the decree in this case, that even if the right to obtain damages for the theft or misappropriation could be said to have created a "debt," the debt was tainted with illegality or immorality, the sons were not under a pious duty to pay the debt, and the interests of the sons did not pass by the sale.

Held, also, that the purchasers in this case were not entitled to the equities of a bona fide purchaser, as the decree, if examined, would have put them upon inquiry.

THE property in question in this suit was ancestral land of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, which had been sold in execution of a decree against some of the members. The family consisted of three brothers: Mangru Mahton, Darshan Mahton, Sobha Mahton and their wives and sons; of these, Darshan died before the present action was brought. The decree in execution of which the sale took place was passed in a suit for damages for theft or misappropriation of paddy by Mangru and Sobha Mahton and other persons unconnected with the family. The plaintiffs in the case who claimed to recover their interests in the joint-property were the wife and sons of Mangru, the widow [673] and sons of Darshan, Sobha himself, and his wife and sons. The defendants 1 to 4 were the purchasers in execution, and Mangru Mahton was defendant No. 5, and the decree-holder, defendant No. 6. The sale certificate did not specify whose property was sold, but the names of the parties in the original suit for damages were mentioned. The principal question argued was what was the extent of interest which passed by the sale. The facts are fully given in the judgment of the High Court.

The defendants 1 to 4 appealed to the High Court.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee, Babu Tarit Mohan Das and Moulvi Mahomed Habibullah for the Appellants.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee for the Respondents.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee.—The decree and sale proceedings against Mangru and Sobha are binding upon the family, as they were the heads of the family, and the family had the benefit of the wrongful act. The purchaser was not bound to go behind the sale proceedings and to make inquiry; he had no notice. In Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheopersad Singh (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148: L. R., 6 I. A, 88) after referring to Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (14

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 266 of 1895, against the decree of Moulvie K. S. Fukhruddin Hassain, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 28th of June 1895.

B. L. R., 187 : 22 W. R., 56 : L. R., 1 I. A., 321) the Privy Council held that the purchaser is not bound to go further than to see that there was a decree properly given against the father. A bonâ fide purchaser like the appellant is protected against the claim of the sons. The sons have a pious duty to pay the father's debts. There is no difference between a liability to damages and other debts of the father. In Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 21 : L. R., 13 I. A., 1) the decree was for mesne profits. Beni Parshad v. Puran Chand (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 262). The next point is that the purchaser being the landlord, the present suit for the recovery of possession against him is barred by two years' limitation under Art. 3, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The suit is also barred by one year's limitation, as a claim or objection made in execution was rejected before the present sale. The position of Sobha Mahton at all events is clearly the same as that of Mangru, and he is not entitled to a decree.

[674] Babu Umakali Mukerjee for the Respondents.—The decree was for damages for theft or misappropriation; it cannot be said that it was for a "debt" contracted by the father; much less can it be said that the sons were liable for such damages, on the ground of their pious obligation as sons. None of the cases cited authorize such a proposition. It does not make any difference here that the purchaser was a stranger; he was bound to make inquiry. As to Sobha Mahton, the defendants do not appear to have questioned his right or proceeded against him in the lower Court; they proceeded against Mangru there, and cannot ask for Sobha's share in appeal. Then as to limitation, the Tenancy Act does not apply to this case, as the suit was not between a raiyat and his landlord as such, and the point was not taken below. One year's limitation also cannot apply, as there is nothing on the record to show that the claim case was regularly tried and decided.

Baba Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

This suit was brought by all the members of a Mitakshara family except one, namely, Mangru Mahton, who was the fifth defendant, for the purpose of obtaining possession of property which had been sold in execution of a decree obtained against Mangru Mahton and also against Sobha Mahton, his brother, the fifth of the plaintiffs The family consisted of three brothers and their wives and sons. The suit in which the decree was obtained which led to the sale was brought for the purpose of recovering damages for dhan which had been stolen by the defendants in that suit. The defendants in that suit included Mangru Mahton and Sobha Mahton. We may mention in passing that the decree in that suit describes the claim as being for the recovery of Rs. 561-14-6 as damages on account of the price of the grains appropriated by the defendants. That statement is important, having regard to the chief question which has been argued in this appeal.

No evidence has been given in this case as to any of the proceedings in execution, and all we have to look at is the certificate of sale which has been put in and the decree. The certificate of sale [675] is headed with the names of the parties, and it certifies the sale of this particular kasht, without describing to whom it belongs.

It is contended on behalf of the purchaser that the effect of this sale was to dispose of the rights of the whole family in this kasht. On the other hand, it is urged on behalf of the appellants that only Mangru Mahton's right passed thereby.

We may at once dispose of the rights of the children of Darshan Mahton, who was one of these three brothers, and of the widow of Darshan. The argument addressed to us was based entirely upon the duty of a Hindu son governed by the Mitakshara Law to pay the debts of his father, and there is nothing in this case which could possibly bind the family by any acts of a manager. In the first place, it is not shown that either Mangru or Sobha was the manager of the family, and the particular debt, if it was a debt, which was created, was not one which was contracted by the manager as such or in any way for the family. We say "if it was a debt," because as a matter of fact it was not a debt at all. There is no way in which Darshan Mahton's descendants are bound. So far as they are concerned therefore the appeal must fail.

To proceed with the others, we think it must be accepted that this sale was held in execution of a decree both aginst Mangru Mahton and Sobha Mahton. The sale purports to have been made in the suit as against all the defendants, and unless the contrary is shown, we must suppose that the judgment-creditor took proceedings against both Mangru and Sobha who were defendants in that suit and were interested in this kasht. In the plaint it is alleged that the proceedings were only against Mangru Mahton; but that allegation might easily have been substantiated by proof. In the absence of any proof we must take it that the certificate of sale was in pursuance of proper proceedings against both brothers. That being so, it follows that as far as Sobha Mahton is concerned his suit must fail.

But the case with regard to the others is very different. Although the sale certificate purports to pass the whole of the property, still the sons would not be liable, unless it is shown that there was a proper decree made against their father in respect of an antecedent debt which was not contracted for illegal or [676] immoral purposes That, to put it very shortly, is the result of the authorities on the matter. In the first place, we do not think that there was any antecedent debt at all. The cases cited refer to transactions which have been entered into by way of a contract or something approaching a contract between the father and some other person, and the debt which was so contracted it became the pious duty of the sons to pay off. But here there was no debt antecedent to the decree. There was merely a right to damages for a wrongful and criminal act; and so those cases would have no application to the present case. But even if it could be said that that right to damages created a debt before the suit was brought, still it is difficult to see how such a debt was not tainted with either illegality or immorality. The origin of this debt, if debt it was, was a theft committed by those persons who were sued.

It is contended that the purchaser being a bonâ fide purchaser, was not compelled to go so far back as to ascertain those facts. On an authority which was cited to us it is argued that he need not go behind the decree. At any rate it is suggested that he ought not to investigate the decree which led up to the sale. Certainly a purchaser of property under these circumstances, when he is shown to be aware that the persons who on suing were members of a family, would act very unwisely if he did not examine at least the decree. The decree would either give the purchaser notice or put him on inquiry. This is not a case where the decree recites a debt which primâ facie was one binding a family or one properly contracted, but it is a case distinctly which, to say the least of it, would put the purchaser upon inquiry.

There is one more matter which it is necessary for us to refer to. It was argued at the beginning that this suit was barred by limitation, firstly, on the ground that a claim had been preferred to the property in execution. The petition of claim has not been put in, and on the evidence on the record it appears that no decision was come to on that claim. The claim was put in too late, and nothing was done with regard to it.

Then it is said that under the Bengal Tenancy Act two years' limitation applies. But this is not a suit by an occupancy raiyat [677] against his landlord as such, but against a person who may happen to be his landlord, and who is being sued as purchaser of the occupancy right and in consequence of that purchase.

These are all the matters necessary for our consideration in this case.

The result is, that we must vary the decree of the lower Court by disallowing to Sobha Mahton the share which he claims. So far as he is concerned, therefore, the suit must be dismissed Subject to this modification the decree will be affirmed.

The appellants must pay to the respondents the costs of this appeal.

Mortgage—Usufructuary mortgage—Sudbharna bond—Covenant to repay—Construction of mortgage bond—Suit for money and for sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 67.

In a sudbharna mortgage bond it was stipulated, "having paid the principal money in the month of Chait 1297 we shall take back the document and the land. In case we fail to repay the principal money at due date the sudbharna bond shall remain in force."

Held, that there was in this contract no agreement to repay the principal money, and no such agreement was implied by the provisions as to taking back the document and the land, and therefore there was no right to a money decree.

Held, that under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) an usufructuary mortgagee cannot as such (i. e., unless there is anything in the contract which would imply the right) sue either for foreclosure or for sale.

* Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 531 and 738 of 1895, against the decree of Babu Jagaddurlabh Mozumdar, Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 3rd of January 1895, reversing the decree of Babu Gyanendra Chandra Banerjee, Munsif of Modhubani, dated the 14th of June 1894.

Umda v. Umrao Begam (I. L. R., 11 All., 367); Chathu v. Kunjan (I. L. R., 12 Mad. 109); and Ramayya v. Guruva (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 232) referred to. Venkatasami v. Subramanya (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 88) not followed.

[678] THESE were suits for recovery of money due upon sudbharna bonds, whereby the bharnadar or mortgagee retained possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest. In appeal No. 531, the suit was also for "making the mortgaged property liable for the debt" as well as the person and the other properties of the defendant, mortgagor. The bond in case No. 531, after stating that the consideration money had been received, proceeded:—

"We therefore declare and give out in writing that in lieu of interest we give in bharna 6 bighas 4 cottahs of kamshareh (low rate) kasht land as per boundaries for a term of three years from 1294 to 1296 F. The facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra for the appellant argued that a liberal construction should be put upon the document, and it should be held that there was an agreement to repay the money The law (Transfer of Property Act, section 67) did not take away the right to a decree for sale of the mortgaged property in this case He cited Dr Rash Behary Ghose on Mortgage, 2nd edition, page 373, and the case of Venkatasami v Subramanya (I L. Moulvie Mahomed Mustafa Khan for the respondent contended that there was no covenant to pay, and a decree for money or for sale could not be passed in these cases. He cited sections 58, 67, 68 and 62 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act and the following cases Umda v Umrao Begam (I L. R., 11 All., 367), Chathu v. Kunjan (I. [679] Babu Ram Charan Mitra in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows.—

Although these two cases were tried together in the Lower Appellate Court and before us, they are not in every respect similar

They are both suits brought to recover money alleged to be due upon usufructuary mortgages, and in both cases the mortgagee alleged that he had given up possession of the property mortgaged. In No 531 the plaintiff asked for and obtained from the first Court a decree for sale. In No 738, he only asked for a money decree, which was given to him in the first instance The Lower Appellate Court has set aside both decrees and dismissed the suits on the ground that the contract does not give a right to sue for the money. We have heard the appeals argued at some length, and are of opinion that they must be dismissed.

The question depends partly upon the construction which is to be placed upon the particular contract, and partly upon the construction which is to be placed upon certain sections of the Transfer of Property Act.

To take first the contract in appeal No. 531, after a recital of the necessity for a loan of Rs. 124 the bond declares that in lieu of interest the executants give in bharna certain land for a term of three years from 1294 to 1296 F. S. "That the said bharnadar should hold possession over the bharna property and appropriate the proceeds thereof till the term of the bond. We shall pay the rent payable by us year after year in the zemindari cutchari, and the mahajan shall have no concern with it, and having paid the principal money in the month of Chait 1297 we shall take back the document and the land. In case we fail to repay the principal money at due date this sudbharna bond shall remain in force."

There is in this contract no agreement to repay the principal money, and therefore there would be no right to a money decree. It was contended that the provision as to taking back the document and the land on payment of the principal implied an agreement to repay the money. This is not so. That provision [680] is merely what is generally known as a proviso for redemption. It fixes the minimum time within which the mortgagor can redeem. It does nothing more. This bond is, we think, an usufructuary mortgage within the meaning of section 58 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act. That clause is as follows:—

"Where the mortgagor delivers possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, and authorises him to retain such possession until payment of the mortgage money, and to receive the rents and profits accruing from the property and to appropriate them in lieu of interest, or in payment of the mortgage money, or partly in lieu of interest and partly in payment of the mortgage money, the transaction is called an usufructuary mortgage, and the mortgagee an usufructuary mortgagee."

This is exactly what has been contracted for here. The mortgagor delivered possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, and authorised him to retain possession until payment of the mortgage money, and to receive the rents and profits in lieu of interest.

It remains to be seen what is the remedy of an usufructuary mortgagee. This is to be found in section 67, which, after detailing the general right of a mortgagee to foreclosure or sale, proceeds to except three cases from this general right. A simple mortgagee cannot sue for foreclosure; a mortgagee by conditional sale cannot sue for sale; an usufructuary mortgagee cannot as such, i.e., unless there is anything in the contract which would imply the right, sue either for foreclosure or for sale. This is, we think, the natural meaning of the terms of section 67. Although the section speaks of instituting a suit, we are of opinion that those words do not so much relate to the form in which the suit is to be brought as to the remedy to which the plaintiff is entitled. It could not be that the words "to institute a suit for foreclosure or sale," would only debar an alternative prayer and not bar either relief.

It remains to be seen whether there is anything in this bond which would exclude the operation of section 67. There is no express contract to submit to a decree for sale or to one for foreclosure. Can such a contract be implied? We are unable to see in this bond anything, from which we may infer any such agreement.

[681] Several cases on the subject were brought to our notice, and it may be well to refer to some of them.

The case of Umda v. Umrao Begam (I. L. R., 11 All., 367) is an express authority that the present suit is not maintainable. Three decisions of the Madras High Court were referred to. The first of these is Venkatasami v. Subramanya (I. L. R, 11 Mad., 88), and it seems to hold that an usufructuary mortgagee is entitled to a decree for sale. The terms of the mortgage are not given in that case, and the general proposition thus laid down was not followed.

In Chathu v. Kunjan (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 109) a Bench which included one of the learned Judges who decided the case in Venkatasami v. Subramanya (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 88) arrived at an opposite conclusion, and held that an usufructuary mortgagee cannot, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, sue either for sale or for foreclosure.

In Ramayya v. Guruva (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 232) another Division Bench held that where there was a covenant for payment of the money the mortgagee could bring the property to sale. These cases shew that, where the bond in question amounts to nothing more than an usufructuary mortgage as defined in section 58, there is no remedy either by way of sale or foreclosure. There being nothing in the present bond to differentiate it from a simple usufructuary mortgage as defined in the Act, we must hold that the suit fails.

In the other case all that is asked for is a money decree. There is not in the bond any provision by which the mortgagor binds himself to pay the money, and none of the conditions of section 68* of the Transfer of Property Act are fulfilled. The plaintiff is not entitled to a money decree.

It is not necessary for us to express any opinion as to whether he is entitled to any other decree, as up to now he has never asked for any other.

Both appeals are dismissed with costs.

Right to sue for mortgage-money.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Khetter Nath Biswas............Auction-purchaser

Faizuddin Ali and another, Decree-holders,............and others Judgment-debtors.*

Sale in execution of decree—Sale under mortgage decree—Sale in execution of a money decree, effect of, before the sale in execution of mortgage decree confirmed——Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 310A, 311, 312, 314, and 316— Effect of sale not being set aside either under section 310A or 311 of the Code.

A certain property was sold on the 16th August 1895 in execution of a mortgage decree, dated 9th December 1892, and was purchased by A. In the meantime an eight annas share of the said property was sold in execution of a money decree and was purchased by B on the 22nd May 1893. On the 10th September 1895 the judgment-debtor applied to set aside the mortgage sale under section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on the 14th September 1895 a similar application was made by B. On the 28th March 1896 both these applications came on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge who passed no order; and on the same date B presented a petition, asking the Court to set aside the sale held in execution of the mortgage decree upon payment by him of the mortgage money, with interest and costs, and also to declare that he might be entitled to redeem the property. On the 30th March 1895 the Subordinate Judge allowed the petition and ordered the sale to be set aside upon the aforesaid terms.

Held, that, inasmuch as under section 312† of the Code of Civil Procedure A was entitled to have an order confirming the sale of the 16th August 1895, unless the sale were set aside under section 310A or section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as the sale was not set aside under either of these sections, the Court below had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale upon payment by the applicant of the mortgage money with interest and costs. Brij Mohun Thakur v. Uma Nath Choudhry (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 8) referred to.

THE facts of the case and the arguments appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee for the Appellant.

The Respondents did not appear.

The judgments of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) were as follows:—

[683] Maclean, C.J.—I regret that in this case we have not had the advantage of hearing the case argued on behalf of the principal respondent, who is the purchaser under the sale of the 15th March 1893.

* Appeal from order No. 208 of 1896 against the order of Babu Biprodas Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Moorshedabad, dated the 30th and 31st of March 1896.

† [Sec. 312:—If no such application as is mentioned in the last preceding section be made, or if such application be made and the objection be disallowed, the Court shall pass an order confirming the sale as regards the parties to the suit and the purchaser.

Effect of objection being disallowed and of its being allowed.

If such application be made, and if the objection be allowed, the Court shall pass an order setting aside the sale.

No suit to set aside, on the ground of such irregularity, an order passed under this section shall be brought by the party against whom such order has been made.]

The facts which are necessary for our decision in this case may be stated shortly as follows: On the 9th December 1892 the plaintiff in the mortgage suit obtained a mortgage decree, and on the 22nd of May 1893 a decree for sale absolute was made in that suit. In the meantime, on the 15th of March of the same year, the respondent, who, in the course of the argument, has been referred to as the principal respondent, purchased an eight annas share of the property which was on mortgage, under a sale in execution of a money decree. On the 16th August 1895 the mortgaged property was put up for sale in pursuance of the decree absolute, to which I have referred, of the 22nd May 1893. Under that sale the present appellant became the purchaser. On the 10th September 1895, that is to say, within a very short period after the sale under which the present appellant bought, the judgment-debtor applied to set aside the sale under section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on the 14th September of the same year the principal respondent made a similar application under the same section.

These applications came before the Subordinate Judge who heard them out on the merits, and on the 28th March 1896 reserved judgment, but upon that day the principal respondent presented a petition, which was accepted, that the sale of the 16th August 1895 might be set aside, upon payment by him of what was due for principal, interest and costs under the mortgage, and that, on such payment being made, the sale might be set aside and he might be declared entitled to redeem the property On the 30th March of the same year, the learned Subordinate Judge assented to the view of the principal respondent, granted the prayer of that petition, and ordered the sale to be set aside, upon the footing to which I have here referred. In the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge, he seems to have considered that he was bound by the decision in the case of Premchand Pal v. Purnima Dasi (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 546), which, however, does not appear to have commended itself to his mind.

[684] Upon these facts the question we have to decide is whether the learned Judge, whose opinion, as I said before, would appear not to have been in consonance with the case to which I have referred, but by which he considered, and rightly considered, he was bound, was right in point of law. The real question is, whether upon the application of the principal respondent of the 28th of March 1896, the Judge in the Court below ought to have set aside the sale of 16th August 1895 under which the appellant had purchased, I think that, in arriving at the conclusion that he ought, he arrived at a conclusion which was erroneous. The view I take of the position is this: The appellant was the purchaser under the sale of the 16th August 1895. Under the provisions of section 312 of the Code, he was entitled to ask the Court for an order to confirm the sale, unless the sale were set aside under section 310A or section 311 of the Code. No application was made under section 310A, so that we may dismiss that from our minds. Two applications were made to set aside the sale under the provisions of section 311 of the Code, but we must take it, and do take it, for the purposes of this judgment, that those applications were negatived. The applications were made, but no decision was given upon them; they were practically abandoned. A fresh application on the 28th of March 1896 to set aside the sale on payment of what was due to the judgment-debtor was substituted in their place. What jurisdiction was there to make any such order? It seems to me that under section 312 of the Code, the purchaser, the appellant, was entitled to have an order confirming the sale unless the sale were set aside under one of the sections to which I have referred.

This view seems to me to be consistent with the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Brij Mohun Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chowdhry (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 8) in which Lord HANNEN (at page 10 of the report) says this: "Here there was an order for sale, and the property was put up for sale, but there was no order confirming the sale. Under section 312, if no such application, as is mentioned in section 311, is made, there is only one duty left to the Court, namely, to pass an order confirming the sale as regards the parties to the suit and the purchaser. The Subordinate Judge [685] refused to do that, and set aside the sale, and directed the purchase money to be refunded on certain terms." It seems to me that the present case is in accordance with the principle laid down in that case. No doubt section 314 says that no sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree shall become absolute until it has been confirmed by the Court, and section 316 says that the title to the property sold shall vest in the purchaser from the date of such certificate and not before; but if the purchaser under the sale of 16th August 1895, there having been no application under section 310A and no successful application under section 311, did become, as I think he did become, entitled to an order confirming the sale, I fail to see what power there was in the Court below to set aside that sale upon the terms upon which it did set it aside. I may point out here that this is not a question between the mortgagor and mortgagee, but it is a question between two third parties, two outside purchasers. The learned Vakil for the appellant has drawn our attention to the case by which the learned Judge in the Court below thought he was bound, the case of Premchand Pal v. Purnima Dasi (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 546). In the head note it is stated that the right to redeem property exists until the sale has been actually confirmed; but the point was not necessary for the decision of that case, and did not arise in that case. The date of sale there was the 17th August and the date of confirmation of the sale was the 18th of December 1883, but there was no offer to redeem before the date of confirmation. The question which now arises did not arise in that case, nor was it necessary for the purposes of the decision. No doubt there are obiter dicta to the effect which I have mentioned, namely, that the right to redeem subsists until the sale has been confirmed, though even that proposition is put in a very qualified manner by Mr. Justice BEVERLEY at page 554, where he says this: "If the judgment-debtor deposit the amount of the decree between the date of purchase and the date of confirmation of sale, it is possible that the sale might be set aside." That is very cautious language: I do not think there is anything in this judgment which conflicts with the actual decision in the case by which the learned Judge in the [686] Court below thinks he was bound. I regret, as I said before, that we have not had the advantage of hearing the opposite view urged before us on the part of the respondent, but in the view I take, I think the Subordinate Judge was wrong. The appeal will be allowed, and the appellant will have the costs of the appeal.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 16th March, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE GORDON.

Pachkauri and another............Appellants

Rioting—Unlawful assembly—Right of private defence of property—Causing grievous hurt in furtherance of common object—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sections 97, 99, 147, 149, 325.

The accused, receiving information that the complainant's party were about to take forcible possession of a plot of land, which was found by the Court to be in the possession of the accused, collected a large number of men, some of whom were armed, and went through the village to the land in question. While they were engaged in ploughing, the complainant's party came up (some of them being armed) and interfered with the ploughing. A fight ensued, in the course of which one of the complainant's party was grievously wounded and subsequently died, and two of the accused's party were hurt.

Held, that if the accused were rightfully in possession of the land and found it necessary to protect themselves from aggression on the part of another body of men, they were justified in taking such precautions as they thought were required and using such force or violence as was necessary to prevent the aggression.

Held, also, that under such circumstances they could not rightly be held to be members of an unlawful assembly.

Queen-Empress v. Narsang Pathabhai (I. L. R., 14 Bom., 441), Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lall (19 W. R., Cr., 66), Shunkur Singh v Burmah Mahto (23 W. R., Cr., 25), followed; Ganouri Lal Dass v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 206), distinguished.

THE appellants were convicted by the Sessions Judge of Gya [687] of committing offences under sections 147, 149 and 325 of the Penal Code, namely, being members of an unlawful assembly, using force and violence in the prosecution of the common object of that assembly, and causing grievous hurt to some one or other of the party of the complainants in furtherance of that common object. There was a dispute between certain Babhuns and Mahomedans about certain lands, of which it was found by the Sessions Judge, the Mahomedans, who were the accused, obtained possession five or six years previously, and continued in peaceful possession until October 1895. The accused, the Mahomedans, also contended that they were lawfully engaged in ploughing the land, when the complainant's party came and attacked them.

The complainants, on the other hand, alleged that their employer, in execution of a rent decree (ex parte) against a third party, purchased the land and obtained possession of it in September 1895, and that on 4th July 1896, a few days after, they had sowed the plot with nowaj-dhan; while they were engaged in ploughing the fields, the accused, with a large number of armed men, came and attacked them, and in consequence one of their men was grievously hurt and died four days afterwards. The Sessions Judge, holding that there was an unlawful assembly on the part of the accused as well as on the part of the complainants, each party attempting to enforce some right or supposed right in the property, convicted the accused of rioting with the common object of enforcing by criminal force a right to the plot of land, and sentenced them to rigorous imprisonment for one year. From this sentence the accused appealed.

Mr. P. L. Roy (with him Babu Dasarathi Sanyal) for the Appellants.—The Judge has found that the appellants obtained possession of the property in dispute five or six years ago, and continued in such possession, until the day of the riot. Upon that finding the common object of the unlawful assembly fails, and under these circumstances the accused had unquestionably the right of private defence of person as well as of property. Queen v. Mitto Singh (3 W. R., Cr., 41), Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lall (19 W. R., Cr., 66), Shunkur Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R., Cr., 25). It may be contended [688] by the opposite party that the appellants had no right of private defence on the authority of the case of Ganouri Lal Das v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 206). That case is not, however, in point. It only decides that there is no right of private defence against a civil trespass. [GHOSE, J.—That case overrules the cases you have cited.] But the decision in question is not a Full Bench case, and therefore it cannot be contended that the cases I have cited are overruled by that decision. The cases I have cited lay down the true principle which should govern all such cases, that is to say, that a person is entitled to maintain his right in possession, and for that purpose he and his neighbours are entitled to use reasonable force to drive out intruders. Queen-Emprees v. Narsang Pathabhai (I L. R., 14 Bom., 441).

Babu Raghunandun Prasad (with him Mr. Gregory) for the Crown.—On the authority of Ganouri Lal Das v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 206) the accused in this case have no right of private defence. They came armed and were prepared to fight under any contingency, and they did fight and killed one of our men. The appeal should be dismissed.

The appellants before us, Pachkauri and Jodha Singh, have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Gya of the offences under sections 147, 149 and 325 of the Penal Code, namely, that they were members of an unlawful assembly; that force and violence were used in the prosecution of the common object of that assembly; and that grievous hurt was caused to some one or other of the party of the complainant in furtherance of that common object. And each of them has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

It appears that there was a dispute between two parties, described as the Babhuns and Mahomedans, about certain lands; but it is found by the Sessions Judge that the Mahomedans obtained possession five or six years ago, and continued to be in peaceful possession until, at any rate, October 1895. The case for the prosecution, however, is that in execution of a rent [689] decree (ex parte) obtained against a third party, the complainant's employer purchased the land, and obtained possession in September 1895; and that on the 4th July last, they (the Babhuns) were engaged in ploughing the fields, when the accused, with a large number of armed men, came and attacked them; the result of such attack being that a man belonging to their party, namely, Dipa Singh, was grievously hurt, and that he died in consequence thereof four days afterwards. This case is distinctly denied by the accused, who say that their party (the Mahomedans), notwithstanding the sale that took place, continued in possession of the property, and they were lawfully engaged in ploughing the lands when the complainant's party came in and attacked them; and, that in the course of the tussle which took place between the parties, Dipa Singh was hurt, and two men belonging to their side were similarly hurt. We have already said that the learned Sessions Judge has found that the party of the accused (the Mahomedans) obtained possession of the property five or six years ago, and continued in such possession; and we might now state that that officer has disbelieved the evidence adduced for the prosecution which was to the effect that they obtained de facto possession of the property in September 1895, that they sowed nowaj-dhan a few days before, and were lawfully engaged in ploughing the fields on the date of the occurrence. The learned Sessions Judge, no doubt, in one part of his judgment, throws out certain observations which would seem to indicate that he was inclined to believe that Dipa Singh had ploughed the land, but he says at the same time that there is no evidence thereof. We may therefore take it, upon the findings come to by the Sessions Judge himself in this case, that the complainant's party never obtained actual possession of the land; and we think we may well infer from the fact of the party of the accused being in possession in October 1895, that they continued in such possession until the date of this occurrence.

We observe that the learned Sessions Judge has further disbelieved the evidence for the prosecution, in so far as that evidence sought to prove that the complainant's party, who, on the day of the occurrence went to the land, were only four in number. He seems to hold, if we understand him rightly, that there was an [690] unlawful assembly on the part of the complainant, as also on the part of the accused, each party attempting to enforce some right, or supposed right in the property. But we fail to see how that position can be maintained so far as the party of the accused were concerned, if, as we hold, and as we take it, the learned Sessions Judge has in effect held, that the latter had been in possession of the property for five or six years together, and was in lawful possession of it up to the date of the occurrence. We are unable to say that the accused were upon that date endeavouring to enforce a right, or supposed right, within the meaning of section 143 of the Penal Code. It would seem (and that is what we understand the Sessions Judge's view of the evidence to be) that the party of the accused had become aware that the complainant's party wanted to take forcible possession of the land; and that, in order to protect themselves from the aggression of the complainant, they collected a large number of men, some of them being armed, and went through the village to the land in question, and while they were there actually engaged in ploughing the land, the Babhuns came up also armed (some of them) and interfered with the ploughing, and this evidently resulted in a fight between the parties, and the consequence was that Dipa on one side was grievously wounded, while two men on the side of the Mahomedans were hurt. It seems to us that, if the party of the accused were rightfully in possession of the land on the date in question, and if they found it necessary to protect themselves from aggression on the part of the complainant's party, they were justified in taking such precautions as they thought were required, and we think that in doing so they could not rightly be held to be members of an unlawful assembly. The view that we adopt in this case is supported by the cases of Queen-Empress v. Narsang Pathabhai (I.L.R., 14 Bom., 441), of Bujoo Singh v. Khub Lall (19 W. R., Cr., 66), and of Shunkur Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R., Cr., 25). And we might say that the facts of the case of Ganouri Lal Das v. Queen-Empress (I.L.R., 16 Cal., 206) are distinguishable from those in the present case.

Turning then to the conduct of the two appellants before us, it appears that, as far as Pachkauri is concerned, there is no evidence [691] upon the record to show that he used any force or violence, or made any attack upon the complainant's party; and as regards Jodha Singh all that the evidence indicates is that he had a lathi in his hand, and that he struck Dipa Singh with the lathi. But it does not appear that he inflicted the fatal blow. Therefore, so far as the first-mentioned appellant is concerned, we do not see how he could be convicted of any offence in this case; and as to the other appellant, Jodha Singh, if the fact be that the complainant's party were the aggressors, he was entitled in the exercise of his right of private defence of property to use such force or violence as was necessary to prevent the aggression; and it does not appear that he used more violence than was necessary on this occasion.

Upon these grounds we think that the conviction and sentence must be set aside.

Tarak Nath Chowdhry.... . .....Defendant.*

Damages, Suit for—Opium Act (I of 1878), section 9—Act XIII of 1857—Wrongful entrance and illegal search—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), sections 155, 156 and 165—Non-cognizable offence.

An offence under section 9 of the opium Act (I of 1878), and not coming under section 14 of that Act, is a non-cognizable offence, and is therefore one for which by section 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code a police officer cannot arrest without warrant; and he has therefore under section 155 * of the Code no authority to investigate such an offence without the order of a Magistrate ; nor under section 165 can he make a search in respect of it.

* Appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent No 3 of 1895, against the decree of the Hon'ble ROBERT FULTON RAMPINI, one of the Judges of this Court, dated the 7th of December 1894, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 677 of 1894, against the decree of D. Cameron, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Dinagepore, dated the 19th of March 1894, reversing the decree of Babu Ashini Koomar Gooha, Munsif of that district, dated 30th of December 1893.

[692] The power of arrest without warrant referred to in clause (g) of section 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code is an unqualified power, and not a conditional power, as in section 24 of Act XIII of 1857, which only gives the right to a police officer to arrest without warrant in case the accused does not furnish the security required by that section.

Where a police officer, therefore, in respect of an offence under section 9 of the Opium Act not coming under section 14 of that Act, made a search in the house of the accused without an order of a Magistrate : Held, that his action could not be justified, either under section 24 of Act XIII of 1857, or under the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that he was liable in an action for damages for the illegal search.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court.

Babu Girija Sunker Mozoomdar for the Appellant.

Babu Srinath Das and Babu Mohiny Mohun Chuckerbutty for the Respondent.

The judgments of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J. and BANERJEE, J.) were as follow :—

Maclean, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff sued the defendant, who is a sub-inspector of police, for damages for having, as he alleged, wrongfully and illegally entered and searched his house

The question which we have to decide is whether the police officer, under the circumstances in this case, had any right to enter the plaintiff's house and to make a search.

The Munsif before whom the suit was originally brought found in favour of the plaintiff, and he gave the plaintiff Rs. 10 for damages, the plaintiff stated that he desired nothing in the nature of large damages, and that the only object of his action was to clear himself against the imputation which lay upon him by reason of the proceedings which were taken by the police officer.

The case then came before the District Judge in appeal. He reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The District Judge in his judgment has not gone into the question of law which was raised before Mr. Justice RAMPINI, and which has been discussed before us.

The plaintiff appealed from the decision of the District Judge [693] to this Court, and Mr. Justice RAMPINI affirmed that decision. Hence the present appeal.

The appellant bases his appeal upon the ground that the sub-inspector had no authority to search the plaintiff's house under the circumstances in the case. I need not go into the facts in detail because the only question which we have to decide and which we can decide now is a question of law. But shortly the facts are these : The police sub-inspector received an information

* [Sec. 155 :—When information is given to an officer in charge of a Police station of the commission within the limits of such station of a non-cognizable offence, he shall enter in a book to be kept as aforesaid the substance of such information and refer the informant to the Magistrate.

Information in non-cognizable cases.

Investigation into non-cognizable cases.

No Police-officer shall investigate a non-cognizable case without the order of a Magistrate of the first or second class having power to try such case or commit the same for trial, or of a Presidency Magistrate.

Any Police-officer receiving such order may exercise the same powers in respect of the investigation (except the power to arrest without warrant) as an officer in charge of a Police-station may exercise in a cognizable case.]

to the effect that the plaintiff was illegally cultivating poppy plants in his field, and in consequence of that information he went to the spot where it was alleged that they had been cultivated. He there found only one poppy plant, but in consequence of some indication which he said he saw there he was led to suspect that there had been other poppy plants growing in the same field, and that they had been previously removed. Drawing an inference from that, that they had been carried to the plaintiff's house, the police officer went to the plaintiff's house and made search for those plants; but in the result he found none. Criminal proceedings were then taken against the plaintiff, which ultimately resulted in his discharge. Hence the present action. These are all the facts that I need advert to for the purpose of the present case. The real question resolves into one of law, namely, whether the police officer had any authority to make the search which he did.

As I said before, the District Judge has not gone into the question of law which was raised before Mr. Justice RAMPINI, and which has been raised before us. Mr. Justice RAMPINI considered that under the Opium Act (I of 1878) the police officer had no authority to make the search he did.

That was practically admitted by the learned Vakil who appears for the respondent, though at the conclusion of his argument he made a somewhat faint suggestion that the search was authorized under section 14 of that Act. Looking at the language of that section, I think that this case does not come within that section, and I agree with Mr. Justice RAMPINI on this point.

Then it is said that, assuming that the search was not authorized by Act I of 1878, the police officer had power to make a [694] search under the provisions of section 165 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Now to arrive at a conclusion as to whether that argument be sound or not we must look at that section and also at some other sections of the Code. Section 165 says that "whenever an officer in charge of a police station, or a police officer making an investigation, considers that the production of any document or other thing is necessary to the conduct of an investigation into any offence which he is authorized to investigate, he may make a search." I pass over the consideration as to whether or not there was in this case any evidence to show that the police officer had any "reason to believe" as required by the section, and before he can make the search, that the appellant would not have produced the poppy plants if he had been summoned or ordered under section 94 of the Code to do so. In my mind this case hinges upon the question whether this was a case which the police officer was authorized to investigate; for, if he were not, it must be admitted, as indeed it has been admitted by the respondent's Vakil, that section 165 has no application to this case.

To ascertain then the cases which police officers are authorized to investigate, one must look at sections 155 and 156 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 155 says this:

"When information is given to an officer in charge of a police station of the commission within the limits of such station of a non-cognizable offence, he shall enter in a book to be kept as aforesaid the substance of such information and refer the informant to the Magistrate.

"No police officer shall investigate a non-cognizable case without the order of a Magistrate of the first or second class having power to try such case or to commit the same for trial or of a Presidency Magistrate."

If this case were a non-cognizable case, it is admitted that there was no order of any Magistrate. Then section 156 provides: "Any officer in charge of a police station may, without the order of a Magistrate, investigate any cognizable case which a Court having jurisdiction over the local area within the limits of such station would have power to inquire into and try under the provisions of chapter XV relating to the place of inquiry or trial.

[695] What then we have to ascertain is whether this case was a non-cognizable case within the meaning of section 155 of the Code, or a 'cognizable case' within the meaning of section 156. Cognizable and non-cognizable cases are defined in sub-section (q), section 4 of the Code. "Cognizable offence' means an offence for, and 'cognizable case' means a case in, which a police officer, within or without the Presidency towns, may in accordance with the second schedule or under any law for the time being in force arrest without warrant."

It is, I think, clear that the police officer could not in this case have arrested without warrant in accordance with the second schedule to the Code. Whether he could have done so "under any law for the time being in force," I will deal with in a moment. "'Non-cognizable offence' means an offence for, and 'non-cognizable case' means a case in, which a police officer within or without the Presidency towns may not arrest without warrant."

The contention of the respondents is that this was a cognizable case within the meaning of the definition of such case in the Code of Criminal Procedure, the police officer having power to arrest without warrant by virtue of the provisions of section 24 of Act XIII of 1857; and that, being a cognizable case, the police officer was authorized to investigate the case without the order of a Magistrate according to the provisions of section 156 of the Code.

The question then is now reduced to whether the police officer could lawfully arrest without warrant. It is conceded that the only law in force which could give him the power is section 24 of Act XIII of 1857. That section says: "Whenever a police officer or Abkari daroga or Opium gomastah shall receive intelligence of any land within his jurisdiction to have been illegally cultivated with poppy he shall immediately proceed to the spot; and if the information be correct shall attach the crop so illegally cultivated and report the same without delay to the authority to which he may be subordinate. He shall at the same time take security from the cultivator of the said land for his appearance before the Magistrate; and in the event of such cultivator not giving the required security, he shall send him in custody to the Magistrate." Can this be said to [696] give the police officer a power to arrest without warrant within the meaning of sub-section (q) of section 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure? I think not. It is not an absolute power of arrest; it is conditional only upon the accused not giving the required security. It may be described as a right to take him into custody if he cannot give bail. That is what it amounts to. The police officer is bound to take security for the appearance of the accused before the Magistrate, consequently the police officer has no power to arrest under that section, unless and until the accused person refuses or is unable to furnish the security which is referred to in that section. In my opinion such a qualified power of arrest—a power of arrest not in respect of the offence alleged against him, but only of arrest in default of his giving security for his appearance before a Magistrate—is not such a power to arrest without warrant as is pointed out in the definition of "cognizable offence" in the definition clause of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The power to arrest without warrant in that definition must, I think, be referable to a power of arrest in respect of and on account of the offence alleged. But the power to arrest under section 24 of Act XIII of 1857 is not in respect of the offence alleged, but because the accused cannot or will not give bail. That is quite a different thing. The case then not being a cognizable case within the meaning of the definition in the Code, is a non-cognizable one, and under section 155

the police officer was not authorized to investigate it without an order of the Magistrate.

That being so, and inasmuch as his power to search under section 165 of the Code is incidental to the conduct of the investigation into any offence which he is authorized to investigate, I think that the police officer not having been authorized to investigate into the alleged offence had no right to make the search he made under section 165. I am, therefore, of opinion that the police officer acted illegally in entering and searching the plaintiff's house, and in consequence an action for damages by the plaintiff will lie against him. It was conceded that if the officer had no authority to search the plaintiff's house the action would lie.

At the same time I desire to add, and I think that it is my [697] duty to add, that I have seen nothing in this case to indicate, as regards the conduct of the police officer, that he acted otherwise than bonâ fide and in the belief that he was authorized to make the search, and that he was only doing his duty.

The result, therefore, is that the decrees of the District Judge and Mr. Justice RAMPINI will be set aside, and that of the Munsif restored. The appellant will get his costs in all the Courts.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question is, whether the defendant, who is a sub-inspector of police, has made himself liable in this action for damages for having searched the house of the plaintiff under the circumstances found by the learned District Judge. It has been found that in searching the house of the plaintiff he acted, not maliciously, but in good faith, under an honest belief that he was only doing his duty. That is a finding which this Court is bound to accept, and I may add that I see no reason to dissent from that finding. I think that having regard to the circumstances disclosed in the evidence that is the only finding that a Court of Justice should arrive at. But, then, there still remains the question whether that should exempt the defendant from liability to an action like this, if the search of the plaintiff's house made by him was altogether unauthorized by law. To that question the answer must be in the negative. It therefore becomes necessary to consider whether the search made by the defendant of the plaintiff's house was, or was not, authorized by law. It was but faintly urged before us that the search was authorized by section 14 of the Opium Act (I of 1878). I quite agree with Mr. Justice RAMPINI in thinking that that section does not apply to this case, because there is nothing to show that the police officer had either personal knowledge or information in writing to the effect that the house he searched contained opium or poppy heads, which would come under the definition of opium in the Opium Act. That being so, the question is reduced to this, namely, whether the search he made was authorized by section 165 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as Mr. Justice RAMPINI has held.

In order that a search may be authorized by that section, it is necessary that the police officer should consider that the produc-[698]tion of some particular thing "is necessary to the conduct of an investigation into any offence which he is authorized to investigate." The offence here was that of illicit cultivation of poppy, which is made punishable by section 9 of the Opium Act,—and the question reduces itself to this, namely, whether that is an offence which a police officer is authorized to investigate without any order of a Magistrate.

Section 155 of the Code of Criminal Procedure enacts that "no police officer shall investigate a non-cognizable case without the order of a Magistrate." If the offence here was a non-cognizable offence, the police officer had no power to investigate it, and the case would not come under section 165 of the Code. Referring to the definition of "non-cognizable case" and "non-cognizable offence" as given in clause (q) of section 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I find that a "non-cognizable offence means an offence for, and a non-cognizable case means a case in, which a Police officer, within or without the Presidency towns, may not arrest without warrant." Schedule II of the Code of Criminal Procedure under the head of "Offences against other Laws," shows for what offences not coming under the Indian Penal Code a Police officer may arrest without a warrant; and they are offences punishable with imprisonment for three years and upwards. The offence in this case is punishable under section 9 of the Opium Act with imprisonment not exceeding one year; so that the case is not one for which a Police officer may arrest without warrant under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

But then it was contended, and that contention has been accepted by Mr. Justice RAMPINI, that under section 24 of Act XIII of 1857, the Police officer here was authorised to arrest the plaintiff without a warrant. Section 21, however, as has been clearly pointed out in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, does not authorise a Police officer, unconditionally, to arrest a person against whom the information mentioned in that section has been received. It only authorises a Police officer to take security from the person informed against, and the power to take such person into custody arises only upon his default in giving the security that may be demanded of him. The liability [699] to arrest is a concomitant, not of the offence of which the person is suspected, but of his inability to give security for the furnishing of which alone he is liable. That being so, the case does not come under the definition of a cognizable case, and the Police officer was prohibited by section 165 of the Code to investigate it, and, accordingly, section 165 had no application. The view taken of the case by Mr. Justice RAMPINI and the learned District Judge must therefore be held to be incorrect, and the judgment and decree of both the learned Judges must be set aside and the decree of the Munsif restored with costs.

FULL BENCH.

The 3rd February and 12th March, 1897.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Interest--Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 86—Mortgage by conditional sale - Interest after due date—Interest Act (XXXII of 1839)—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Articles 116, 132.

Held, by a majority of the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., O'KINEALY, J., and MACPHERSON, J.) that when a mortgage bond contains no stipulation for the payment of interest after the due date, interest is payable by virtue of the Interest Act (XXXII of 1839). Article 116† of schedule II to the Limitation Act prescribes the period of limitation in such a case; and therefore only six years' interest after the due date at 6 per cent. per annum is recoverable. The mortgagor cannot redeem until he has repaid the principal sum with such interest and costs.

[700] Held (by TREVELYAN and BANERJEE, JJ.) that the interest after due date should be regarded as interest due on the mortgage within the meaning of section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882); and that being so, that it becomes a charge on the mortgaged property, and the period of limitation applicable to the claim for such interest is twelve years, under article 132‡ of schedule II to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

* Full Bench Reference in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 534 of 1895 against the decree of G. G. Dey, Esq., District Judge of Shahabad, dated the 15th December 1894, modifying the decree of Babu Kalidhan Mookerjee, Munsif of Arrah, dated the 1st May 1894.

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
For compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered.	Six years ...	When the period of limitation would begin to run against a suit brought on a similar contract not registered.]

‡ [Art. 132 :—

To enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property. Explanation.—The allowance and fees respectively called malikkana and haqqs shall, for the purpose of this clause, be deemed to be money charged upon immoveable property.	Twelve years...	When the money sued for becomes due.]

THIS was a reference made by TREVELYAN and BANERJEE, JJ., to the Full Bench, in the following terms:—

"The question in this case is what articles of the Limitation Act should be applied to a claim for interest on a mortgage after the due date, when the bond makes no provision for such interest, having special regard to the provisions of the Interest Act (XXXII of 1839).

"If the decision of a Division Bench in Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 274) be correct, article 132 would apparently apply; but in Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19), article 116 has been held to apply.

"The case of Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 274) is supported by the following authorities:—Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (I.L.R., 18 Mad., 248), Kristna Reddi v. Varada Rajulu Reddi (I.L.R., 18 Mad., 338*n*), and to some extent by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Chhajmal Das v. Brijbhukan Lal (I. L. R., 17 All., 511: L. R., 22 I. A. 199), though the point now in question was not argued On the other hand, the case of Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19) is in conformity with the following reported decisions:—Golam Abas v. Mahomed Jaffer (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 23*n*), Badi Bibi Sahibal v. Sami Pillai (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 257), Thayar Ammal v. Lakshmi Ammal (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 331), Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand (I. L. R., 10 All., 85), and Bhagwant Singh v. Daryao Singh (I. L. R., 11 All., 416). We refer this appeal to the decision of a Full Bench."

The material part of the mortgage deed provided that "if the consideration-money with interest at 1½ per cent. per mensem be paid back by the 30th Bhadro 1290, the propetry sold by [701] conditional sale shall be reconveyed to the mortgagors; but if the consideration be not repaid by that time, the mortgagor's right to redeem shall be gone."

Babu Makhan Lal for the Appellants.—Under the Interest Act interest is allowed only as compensation for breach of contract, and not as part of a debt due under a mortgage bond. The plaintiffs are not entitled to any interest after due date; such a claim is barred by article 116 of the Limitation Act. Limitation runs from the breach of the contract, that is, from the time when the money became due. Interest is only to be given as damages for breach of contract, not as interest under the bond,—Cook v. Fowler (L. R., 7 H. L., 27), Bishen Dayal v. Udit Narain (I. L. R., 8 All., 486). [MACLEAN, C.J., referred to Mathura Das v. Narindar Bahadur Pal (I. L. R., 19 All, 39: L. R., 23 I. A., 138).] That case shows that article 116 applies. [TREVELYAN, J.—It shows that the defendants must pay six years' interest at least. BANERJEE, J.—If the suit was for foreclosure,—and the plaint shows that it was,—the question as to the amount of money due must be determined with reference to section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act]. Under the bond, the mortgagors are not bound to do anything after due date, not even to give possession. If the money was not paid, the sale was to be confirmed, and the mortgagees might have brought a suit for possession. But there being nothing to be done by the defendants the plaintiffs were not entitled to any damages. Should the Court, however, take a contrary view, I contend that article 116 applies, but that the defendants ought not in any event to be ordered to pay interest for the period during which the plaintiffs delayed bringing the suit.

Babu Tarak Nath Palit for the Respondents.—Sections 86-88 of the Transfer of Property Act apply to this case. Section 86 contemplates an account, not only during the period from the mortgage to the filing of the suit, but up to the latest period the law will allow, that is, up to the time allowed to the mortgagor to pay the money; Surya Narain Singh v. Jogendra Narain Roy Chowdhury (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 360). [MACLEAN, C.J.—The question is, to how many [702] years' interest are the plaintiffs entitled?] The decision in the case of Mathura Das v. Narindar Bahadur Pal shows that they are entitled to six years interest at least, at the agreed rate. This is not a claim for interest by way of damages but for interest under the bond. [MACLEAN, C.J.—The document seems to draw a distinction between "the consideration money" and "the consideration money with interest." The "consideration money with interest" has to be paid within one year; and then the stipulation is that if the "consideration money" is not paid within a year the mortgagor shall be foreclosed]. The two expressions must mean the same thing, namely, the payment of what will entitle the mortgagors to a re-conveyance. The second clause is merely a corollary to the first. [MACLEAN, C.J., referred to Chhajmal Dass v. Brijbhukan Lal (I. L. R., 17 All., 511: L. R, 22 I. A., 199).] Even if there is no condition for payment of interest after due date in the mortgage bond, post diem interest at a reasonable rate may be given,— Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 248), Thayar Ammal v. Lakshmi Ammal (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 331) It would be a grave injustice to the plaintiffs not to allow them to recover interest for the full period at the agreed rate—Futtehma Begum v. Mohamed Ausur [I. L. R., 9 Cal., 309 (314).] The Court has power to allow interest, such interest to be recoverable in the same way as the mortgage money and the costs of the suit—Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I. L R., 21 Cal., 274), Chaturbhai Karsan v. Harbhamji Harisanoji (I. L. R., 20 Bom., 744). [The cases of Baldeo Panday v. Gokal Rai (I. L. R., 1 All., 603), Balgobind Das v. Narain Lal (I. L. R. 15 All., 339), Deen Doyal Lall v. Het Narain Singh (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 41), and Nanchand Hansraj v. Bapusaheb Rustambhai (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 131), were also referred to.]

Babu Makhan Lal in reply. A. C. V.

The following judgments were delivered by the Full Bench :—

Maclean, C J.—The answer to the question submitted by this reference appears to me to depend upon the question how the interest arises. If it arise and be held to be payable by virtue of [703] Act XXXII of 1839, it appears to me that article 116 of schedule II to the Limitaton Act (XV of 1877) applies. In that respect I agree with the decision in the case of Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19), which, upon this point, is consistent with the recent decision in the Privy Council of Mathura Das v. Narindar Bahadur Pal (I. L. R., 19 All., 39: L. R., 23 I. A., 138). In view of the latter case, however, the former is erroneous in holding that no interest was recoverable. It is clear, having regard to the Privy Council case, that six years' interest is recoverable. This was not contested in the present case, nor could it have been, in the face of the latter decision. Under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagor cannot redeem unless and until this interest, if and when found due, be paid. If again, post diem interest be provided for by the contract, it is just as much a charge on the property as the principal; and the mortgagor cannot redeem until he pays it. In such a case article 132 of the Limitation Act would apply.

In each individual case one has to ascertain how the interest arises, whether under the Act or under the contract. The language of the contract in this case is very different from that in the contract in the Privy Council case, to which I have referred, and, upon its construction, I am unable to discover any intention to provide for post diem interest. The plaintiff, therefore, can only recover six years' interest under the Statute I have referred to. plus, of course, the one year's interest stipulated for by the deed; and the defendant cannot redeem until all principal, with such interest and costs, is paid. There is nothing in this view which conflicts with the judgment in the case of Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 274). I see nothing to quarrel with in that judgment. No question of limitation was raised in that suit.

One other point was urged by the respondent. He said, and properly, that he could support the judgment of the Court below upon reasons other than those given by the Judge, and he said that if he were held to be entitled to six years' interest only, he could ask for that at the rate of 18 rupees per cent., the rate stipulated for by the deed, as long as he did not get more than the [704] Court below had given him. I do not think this argument can prevail. In the first place, the Judge below has exercised his discretion as to the question of interest; and, secondly, I doubt if he, as an Appellate Court, can assess the amount. If the matter were open the Privy Council case of Chhajmal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (I. L. R., 17 All., 511 : L. R., 22 I. A., 199) would assist the plaintiff's contention.

The judgment of the Court below must therefore be modified by allowing only six years' interest at 6 per cent. plus the interest for the first year at the stipulated rate, and as both parties have partially succeeded, there will be no costs of this appeal.

O'Kinealy, J.—I concur in the judgment which has just been delivered by the Chief Justice.

Macpherson, J.—I also concur.

Trevelyan, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of Mr. Justice BANERJEE which he is about to deliver. I agree in the conclusion arrived at by him for the reasons given in that judgment.

Banerjee, J.—The suit which has given rise to this reference was brought by the plaintiffs, respondents, on the 28th of April 1893 for foreclosure of a mortgage by conditional sale, dated the 19th September 1882, stipulating that the principal and interest at 1½ per cent. per mensem should be repaid in September 1883. The defence, so far as it is necessary to be considered for the purposes of this appeal, was that no interest was recoverable under the terms of the mortgage deed for any period after the due date, and that the claim for interest after that date was barred by limitation.

The first Court gave effect to the defence and made a decree ordering payment of the principal and interest up to due date with costs within two months, and foreclosure in default.

On appeal by the plaintiffs, the Lower Appellate Court has modified that decree by allowing interest after due date at 6 per cent. per annum.

In second appeal it is contended for the defendants, appellants, that no interest was recoverable under the mortgage-deed for any [705] period after the due date, and that if any interest was recoverable, the claim for it is barred by limitation.

The decree in this case was made under section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that "the Court shall make a decree ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage and for his costs of the suit," &c. And the question is, what was due to the plaintiff for "principal and interest on the mortgage." The answer to it must depend upon the construction of the mortgage deed. That document provides that "if the consideration money with interest at 1½ per cent. per mensem be paid back by the 30th Bhadro 1290, the property sold by conditional sale shall be reconveyed to the mortgagors, but if the consideration be not repaid by that time, the mortgagor's right to redeem shall be gone." The omission of the words "with interest" in the second clause quoted above does not go for much, when interest up to due date is so clearly stipulated for. The deed, no doubt, contains no express stipulation for payment of any interest after due date. But the mortgage being one by conditional sale, such a stipulation would not ordinarily find a place in it; and at any rate the mere absence of any such express stipulation would not imply an intention not to claim any interest after due date. On the contrary, it would be unreasonable to suppose that the parties intended that the mortgagor who remained in possession of the mortgaged property and continued to enjoy its profits should be entitled to redeem it at any time after the due date upon payment merely of the principal and interest up to the due date without paying any interest for the period after that date. The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mathura Das v Narindar Bahadur Pal (I. L R., 19 All., 39: L. R., 23 I. A., 138) support the view I take. The case of Cook v. Fowler (L. R., 7 H. L., 27) was referred to as being opposed to that view. But all that case decides is "that upon a contract for the payment of money borrowed for a fixed period on a day certain, with interest at a certain rate down to that day, a further contract for the continuance of the same rate of interest after that day until actual payment," cannot be implied. There is no question here as to the rate of interest. The Court below has, under Act XXXII of 1839 allowed, in [706] its discretion, interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and the plaintiffs are satisfied with that rate. The question now is whether any interest after due date is recoverable on the mortgage. I am of opinion that this question should be answered in favour of the mortgagees The law (Act XXXII of 1839) allows them to recover interest after due date. The Court of Appeal below in the exercise of its discretion has awarded interest at a certain rate after that date. And there is nothing in the mortgage deed to disentitle them to such interest, or to entitle the mortgagors to redeem without payment of the same. The interest after due date that has been allowed in this case should, in my opinion, be regarded as interest due on the mortgage within the meaning of section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act. And if that is so, it becomes a charge on the mortgaged property, and the period of limitation applicable to this part of the claim is twelve years under article 132 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act.

The view I take is supported by the case of Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (I.L.R., 18 Mad., 248), and also by Chajjmal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (I.L.R., 17 All., 511), and Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 274). The decisions of the Allahabad High Court in Narendra Bahadur Pal v. Khadim Husain (I.L R., 17 All., 581), Mansab v. Golab Chand (I.L.R., 10 All., 85), and Bhagwant Singh v. Daryao Singh (I.L.R., 11 All., 416) and of this Court in Golam Abas v. Mahomed Jaffer (I. L. R, 19 Cal., 23) which support the opposite view, have in effect been overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in Mathura Das v. Narindar Bahadur Pal (I. L. R., 19 All., 39: L.R., 23 I.A., 138).

For the foregoing reasons, I would respectfully dissent from the decision in Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Koomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19), and hold that the decree appealed against is correct. The second appeal should therefore in my opinion be dismissed with costs.

Maclean, C.J.—As the majority of the Court are in favour of the view I have expressed, the decree of the Court below will be modified to the extent I have indicated in my judgment, but as I have said there will be no costs of the appeal.

[707] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 26th April, 1897.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Chand Monee Dasya and others............Judgment-Debtors

versus

Santo Monee Dasya (Auction-Purchaser) and others...........Decree-holders.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Article 178—Application to set aside a sale by a person interested in the sale—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 173 - Limitation Act, Art. 166—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 311 and 244—Second appeal.

An application to set aside a sale under section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is governed by Article 178,† schedule II of the Limitation Act, and should be made within three years from the date when the right to apply accrues.

Where the auction-purchaser is a benamidar for the judgment-debtor, in an application to set aside a sale under sections 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and 311 of the Code o Civil Procedure, a second appeal lies to the High Court from the order made on the application, as the application is one under section 244 of the Code.

THIS appeal arose out of an application made in February 1893 by one of the judgment-debtors and the heirs of another deceased judgment-debtor, to set aside a sale of a tenure, which was sold in September 1892 in execution of a decree for its own arrears, under section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the allegation that the sale was

Description of application.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
Applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule, or by the Code of Civil Procedure, Section 230	Three years ...	When the right to apply accrues.]

brought about by the fraud of the decree-holder in collusion with one of the judgment-debtors, and that the said judgment-debtor purchased the property sold in the name of his wife. The defence of the auction-purchaser was that the application was barred by limitation under article 166, schedule II of the Limitation Act; that she was not the benamdar for one of the judgment-debtors, and that the applicants had no locus standi. The Munsif, holding that the auction-purchaser was a mere benamdar for one of the judgment-debtors, that the application was not barred by limitation, as it was made within thirty days from the date when the [708] applicants first came to know of the fraud, and that the applicants had a right to make the application, set aside the sale. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif, holding that as no fraud was proved the application was barred by limitation, as it was not made within thirty days from the date of the sale.

From this decision the judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhry for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Chatterjee and Baboo Nalini Nath Sen for the Respondents.

Mr. Chatterjee for the respondents took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal, on the ground that no second appeal lay in this case.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhry for the appellants.—The parties to the suit, being parties in the application, and the question being one which comes under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a second appeal lies: see Prosuno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683).

The Bengal Tenancy Act does not provide any special limitation for an application under section 173 of the Act; therefore, under section 185, clause (2), the general law of limitation should govern the case. There being no other provision in the Limitation Act specially applicable to an application like this, article 178 of the second schedule should apply. If that article applies, the present application is quite within time.

Mr. Chatterjee.—The question does not come under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and more especially when one of the parties to the application, i e, the auction-purchaser, is an outsider, and therefore no second appeal lies. Article 178, schedule II of the Limitation Act, does not apply; article 166 applies, which provides for applications of a similar nature. Even admitting that the application is not barred by limitation, the sale ought to stand. It is only voidable and not void; see Gopal Chunder Mittra v. Ram Lal Goshain (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 554).

[709] The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C.J.—I think that this case must go back upon the question whether the case is one which comes within the purview of section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That point, as I understand, was not argued before the learned Judge in the Court below, and has not been heard and tried out by him, by reason of the fact that he held that the Statute of Limitation was fatal to the applicant's application under that section. The appellant says that th view is wrong. He contends that the only portion of the Limitation Act th applies to an application under section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is artic 178 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, which allows a period of three years within which to take proceedings such as the present. The appellant is clearly within that period of time. I see no answer to that contention. I can find no other article of the Limitation Act which applies to the case, nor can I find any provision in the third schedule of the Bengal Tenancy Act, under which an application under this particular section is dealt with.

That being so, I am of opinion that the application comes within article 178 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act. It is doubtless an anomaly that in the case of applications under section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a period of three years should be allowed, within which the application may be made to set aside a sale, whilst in the case of other similar applications, as, for instance, for setting aside a sale on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, or on the ground that the decree-holder has purchased without the permission of the Court, thirty days only is given under article 166 of the second schedule of that Act. However, whether or not the result of our judgment lead to the anomaly I have indicated, we have heard no argument from the respondents to show why article 178 of the Limitation Act does not apply to the present case. We think it does, and that the learned Judge in the Court below was wrong in holding that the application, in so far as it was an application under section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, was barred by limitation.

Another point which was taken on behalf of the respondent [710] was, that no second appeal would lie to this Court. Having regard to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683: L. R., 19 I. A., 166), I think it clear that this is an application cognizable under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore we think a second appeal lies to this Court.

As to the question of costs, we think that the proper course is, that the costs of this appeal abide the ultimate result of the trial of the issue under section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Banerjee, J. I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add one word with reference to the contention advanced by the learned Counsel for the respondent, that the case should be held to come under article 166 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. It was argued that the ground upon which the sale is now sought to be impugned, namely, that the judgment-debtor has purchased the property in contravention of the provisions of section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is one of irregularity in conducting the sale within the meaning of article 166. But I find great difficulty in giving effect to that argument. If a purchase by a judgment-debtor in contravention of the law laid down in section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act could be treated as an irregularity in the conduct of the sale within the meaning of the article to which I have referred, for the same reason would a purchase by a decree-holder without the permission of the Court in contravention of section 294 of the Code of Civil Procedure, be but an irregularity in the conduct of the sale, but the Legislature has thought it fit in article 166 to insert in a separate clause the case of an application for setting aside a sale on the ground that the decree-holder has purchased without the permission of the Court. That shows that the Legislature in enacting article 166 did not consider a case like this to be covered by the words, "on the ground of irregularity in conducting the sale."

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Kailash Mondul............Defendant

Baroda Sundari Dasi.. ... .Plaintiff.*

Res judicata—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 13, explanation II—Suit for rent—Whether the question that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar could be raised in a subsequent suit for rent, it not having been raised in a suit previously brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant.

In a previous suit brought by the plaintiff for rent the defendant denied the relationship of landlord and tenant, but he did not plead that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar. The plaintiff obtained a decree In a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff against the same defendant, for rent for subsequent years the defendant inter alia contended that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar The plaintiff objected that the previous decree was a bar to defendant's contention.

Held that even if the matter in issue might and ought to have been made a defence in the former suit, yet as it was not finally heard and decided by the Court, within the meaning of section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the defendant was not precluded in this suit from raising the objection that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar

THE facts of the case, and the arguments for the purposes of this report appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Kali Kissen Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Sarada Charan Mitter and Babu Surendra Chunder Sen for the Respondent

The judgments of the High Court (MACLEAN, C J , and BANERJEE, J.) were as follows —

Maclean, C J—I think this appeal must succeed In 1878, or possibly a little anterior to that date, as the judgment to which I refer is dated the 28th February 1878, the present plaintiff brought an action against the present defendant for the recovery of rent. In that suit the defendant pleaded abatement, but did not [712] adduce any evidence to make out his plea On the 28th February 1878, the Courts decreed the suit in favour of the then plaintiff with costs and interest, that is to say, the Court decreed at that time that the plaintiff was entitled to the particular amount of rent which the plaintiff then claimed. On the 13th April 1894, sixteen years afterwards, the same plaintiff brings another rent suit against the same defendant asking for payment from the defendant of rent accruing due in respect of subsequent years. The defendant puts in a defence raising, as he considers, various defences to that plaint. The case comes before the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge, and they both hold that the decree in the previous suit amounted to res judicata as regards the claim in the present suit, and that the defendant consequently was debarred by reason of the decree in the previous suit from putting in certain defences which he regarded, rightly or wrongly, as sufficient and good defences to the present suit. The decree in the former suit is in my opinion no bar to his doing so. A decree in a former suit by a landlord against his tenant for rent then due does not constitute res judicata in a subsequent suit for rent subsequently accrued by the same plaintiff against the same defendant. The defendant in the latter suit is entitled to show that the rent is not due; the decree in the former suit in no sense debars him from so doing.

The respondent relies mainly upon the explanation II to section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But looking first at section 13 itself, can we say that the question of whether any rent is now due was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, or that it has been heard and finally decided by the Court in the previous suit? The rent for which the plaintiff is now suing had not accrued when the previous suit was brought.

All that the Court previously decided was that a particular amount of rent he claimed was due from the defendant to the plaintiff. Can it be said to follow from that that the rent now claimed is of necessity, by reason of that decision in 1878, equally due from the defendant, or that the defendant is to be debarred from setting up any defences he may have to the present action? In my opinion the present claim was not directly and substantially in issue, and it has not been heard or finally decided. In respect of explanation II, the language of which, to [713] my mind, is not very clear, it says that "any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit."

We have no materials before us to enable us to say that the matter which the defendant now desires to set up might or ought to have been made ground of defence in the particular action in respect of that particular rent. The matters he now desires to set up may not have been within the knowledge of the defendant in 1878. Can we say then that he is debarred from going into those matters now? I think not. It may be that on looking further into the matter, some particular issue, precisely similar to some particular issue now raised, was then decided. If so, the principle of res judicata may apply, possibly, to that particular issue.

I see there is a decision in the case of Konerrav v. Gurrav [I. L. R, 5 Bom., 589 (594)] upon this explanation which certainly has some bearing upon the present case. The head note there is this "In a previous suit between the plaintiff and the defendant the plaintiff alleged that there had been a partition of the family property into two parcels, and, under a deed of partition drawn up at the time, claimed one of these parcels. The deed being held invalid the suit was rejected, with liberty to plaintiff to sue for a general partition. In the second suit the plaintiff prayed for a general partition as a member of an undivided Hindu family. Held, that the second suit was not res judicata, for although the plaintiff might in the first suit have made an alternative case and prayed for a general partition in case he failed to establish the previous partition which he ~~alleged~~, yet it could not be said that he ought to have done so."

That case has some bearing upon the present, so far as explanation II to section 13 is concerned.

The appeal in my opinion must succeed, and the case must be remanded to the Court of First Instance for retrial. Costs will be dealt with by the Court retrying the case.

Banerjee, J. - I am of the same opinion. The plea of res judicata in this case is based upon the terms of explanation II to [714] section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is contended that as the defendant could have urged in defence to the former action the defence now raised by him, namely, that the plaintiff is a mere benamidar, that is a sufficient reason why he should be precluded from raising that defence now. No doubt explanation II is very comprehensive in its terms; but the question is, whether it would include a case like the present. Granting that the matter now in issue might and ought to have been made a ground of defence in the former suit, the question still remains whether it "has been heard and finally decided" by the Court within the meaning of section 13. All that explanation II says is that "any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit," but it does not go on to say, "and it shall be deemed to have been heard and finally decided," notwithstanding that the question was never considered by the Court, and notwithstanding that the subject-matter of the subsequent suit is different from that of the former suit. It is only where the subject-matter of the two suits is the same that the matter can be said to have been heard and finally decided within the meaning of section 13 of the Code, even though the matter was never raised in issue: but it is very difficult to hold that a matter which was never raised in issue actually in the former suit, and which is raised in defence in a subsequent suit in which the subject-matter is different from that of the former suit, shall, nevertheless, by virtue of explanation II of section 13, be deemed to have been, not only matter directly and substantially in issue, but matter which has been heard and finally decided. That being so, I think that the second explanation does not help the respondent. The view I take is fully supported by a recent decision of this Court in the case of Saikum Abu Torab Abdul Waheb v. Rahaman Buksh (I. L. R., 24 Cal., 83). I think I may add that to a case like the present may be fully applied the well-known observations of Vice-Chancellor KNIGHT BRUCE in Barrs v. Jackson [2 Sm., L. C (10th ed.), 757], which, notwithstanding the reversal of the judgment, have been ever since recognized and acted upon. See The Queen v. Hutchings (L. R, 6 Q. B. D., 300) and Tekait Doorga Persad Singh v. Tekaitni [715] Doorga Kounwari [I. R., 5 I. A., 149 (158): I. L. R., 4 Cal., 190 (200)]. The observations to which I refer are these: "It is, I think, to be collected [sic], that the rule against re agitating matter adjudicated is subject generally to this restriction, that however essential the establishment of particular facts may be to the soundness of a judicial decision, however it may proceed on them as established, and however binding and conclusive the decision may, as to its immediate and direct object, be, those facts are not all necessarily established conclusively between the parties, and that either may again litigate them for any other purpose as to which they may come in question, provided the immediate subject of the decision be not attempted to be withdrawn from its operation, so as to defeat its direct object."

For these reasons I think the case ought to go back for retrial.

S. C. G. Appeal allowed. Case remanded.

NOTES.

[The judgment of SUNDARA AYYAR, J., in Bommidi Bayyan Naidu v. Bommidi Suryanarayana (1912) 37 Mad., 70 F.B. : 23 M L J., 543, overruling 21 M.L J., 344, is exhaustive and critical. At pp. 88, 89 he observes, "The explanation IV would be objectless if a decision also is not to be implied and made the ground of estoppel with respect to what is impliedly to be regarded as having been directly and substantially in issue. At any rate the logical result of the respondent's position must be to make an explicit decision equally necessary with respect to a ground of attack or defence not having been urged with regard to a matter involved in the decree itself in the previous suit. The learned Judge's (SANKARAN NAIR'S) position is no doubt supported by several decisions in the Calcutta High Court, (1897) 24 Cal., 711 and (1901) 28 Cal., 17; but in my opinion these decisions are absolutely unsupportable and quite inconsistent with the decision of the Privy Council in (1872) 12 B.L.R., 391; (1912) 39 Cal., 527, even if the decision of the same tribunal in (1902) 24 All., 429 on appeal from (1897) 20 All., 110 could be distinguished as stated by SANKARAN NAIR, J., on the ground that the implication of a decision on an issue which ought to have been raised in the previous suit was justifiable in that case as the decree passed in the earlier suit would itself be affected otherwise. The Calcutta High Court however did not consider (1902) 24 All., 429 distinguishable on that ground. GURUDAS BANERJEE, J., who was a party to the decision in 24 Cal., 711 observed in (1906) 1 C.L.J., 248 that the position adopted by him in the previous case would require to be reconsidered in consequence of the decision in (1902) 24 All., 429. The same view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in (1906) 4 C.L.J., 211; (1908) 35 Cal., 979; (1909) 13 C.W.N., 513, although 35 Cal., 979 might be explicable if the distinction adopted by SANKARAN NAIR, J., be correct. This Court also has held that a ground of attack or defence which a party omitted to bring forward in an earlier suit might be taken to have been decided in the suit. See (1898) 21 Mad., 91; (1908) 31 Mad., 385."

"Assuming by the term 'subject-matter' is meant the relief claimed by the plaintiff, * * * we feel constrained to dissent from the decision of BANERJEE, J., in 24 Cal., 711 and from the later ruling, 28 Cal., 17, which approved of that decision. Section 11 bars the trial not only of suits but of issues, and no issue can be tried in which the matter in issue has been in issue in a former suit between the same parties and heard and decided. * * *. The only logical result is to hold that the decision in the former suit must be regarded as an adjudication either expressly or by implication of all matters directly and substantially in issue in that suit"—(1914) 24 I.C., 931 (Punjab).

In (1913) 20 I.C., 890 (Punj.) the only difference between the two suits was that the one was for declaration, the other for possession, and this was held to be immaterial.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Article 144 Suit for possession of land by an auction-purchaser, who obtained symbolical possession—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 318 and 319—Limitation Act, Article 138.

In a suit for possession of land by an auction-purchaser who had obtained symbolical possession, the defendant objected that the suit was barred by limitation, it not having been brought within twelve years from the date of the auction-purchase.

Held, that article 144, schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to the case, and that as the suit was brought within twelve years from the date when the auction-purchaser obtained symbolical possession it was not barred by limitation.

THIS appeal arose out of an action for declaration of title to, and for possession of, a piece of land. The plaintiff's allegation [716] was that he had purchased the property in dispute at an execution sale, and having obtained symbolical possession had gone to take actual possession when he was obstructed by the defendant, and hence the suit. The defendant mainly contended that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was not brought within twelve years from the date of the auction purchase. The Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that it was barred by limitation under article 138, schedule II of the Limitation Act. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge affirmed the decision of the lower Court.

Against this judgment the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter for the Appellant.

Moulvie Mustafa Khan for the Respondent.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter.—The Lower Appellate Court relies upon the case of Krishna Lall Dutt v. Radha Krishna Surkhel (I. L. R, 10 Cal., 402), which has been overruled by the Full Bench case of Joggobundhu Mitter v. Purnanund Gossami (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 530), which follows the Full Bench case of Juggobundhu Mookerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 584). Symbolical possession gives the plaintiff in this case a fresh start for limitation, see Lokessur Koer v. Purgun Roy (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 418), Shama Charan Chatterjee v. Madhub Chandra Mookerji (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 93) and Sevu v. Muttusami (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 53).

Moulvie Mustafa Khan for the respondent —The present case is distinguishable from the cases of Joggobundhu Mitter v. Purnanund Gossami (I. L R. 16 Cal., 530), and Joggobundhu Mukerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (I L. R. 5 Cal., 584), and the distinction has been authoritatively recognized in the case of Lakshman v. Moru [I. L R., 16 Bom., 722 (728)]. Both the Full Bench cases of the Calcutta High Court are cases in which only symbolical possession could have been given, and do not cover a case of this kind where the property in dispute is a house occupied by the judgment-debtor. The ratio decidendi of the Full Bench case of Joggobundhu Mitter v. Purnanund Gossami (I. L. R. 16 Cal., 530) is that [717] the only mode in which the Court can give the purchaser possession as against the judgment-debtor is symbolical possession, and it is effective for all purposes. In that case the property in dispute was not in actual possession of the judgment-debtor, and therefore the possession obtained by the auction-purchaser under section 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure was considered sufficient to save limitation. In the present case the judgment-debtor, being in actual possession of the property, the symbolical possession obtained by the auction-purchaser under section 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure was no possession according to law. That being so, the suit is barred by limitation.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN C. J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C. J. —I think the Subordinate Judge in this case is in error. He decided the case upon the authority of the case of Krishna Lall Dutt v. Radha Krishna Surkhel (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 402,) but that case has been reversed by the decision in the case of Joggobundhu Mitter v. Purnanund Gossami (I L. R., 16 Cal., 530), and the latter case is certainly consistent with the principle of the cases of Joggobundhu Mukerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 584), Lokessur Koer v. Purgun Roy (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 418), Sevu v. Muttusami (I. L. R, 10 Mad., 53), and Shama Charan Chatterji v. Madhab Chandra Mookerji (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 93).

It is urged by the respondent's Vakil that this case is distinguishable from those to which I have referred by reason of the fact that in some of those cases the tenants were in possession, in which case section 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure was the proper one under which to take or to give symbolical possession. He says that those cases are distinguishable from the present by reason of the fact that in this case the judgment-debtor was in possession, and therefore actual possession ought to have been given under section 318 of the Code, and not symbolical possession under section 319. But be that as it may, we have the fact which cannot be got over, that possession, call it symbolical possession if you will, was given by a Civil Court in this case [718] to the plaintiff, and in the case of Lokessur Koer v. Purgun Roy (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 418) it was laid down that the formal possession given by a Civil Court under an execution operates in point of law and of fact, as between the parties, as a complete transfer of possession from one party to the other. In this case, it seems clear that symbolical possession which in law is possession, was given on the 8th November 1881. It may be that it was wrongly given by reason of the fact that actual possession ought to have been given under section 318 of the Code, but still possession was given to the plaintiff by a Civil Court; and, under the circumstances, it seems to me that the period of limitation must begin to run from the date of that possession being given, which was the 8th November 1881, in which case the plaintiff is within time. I think the appeal must be allowed, and the case remanded to be tried on its merits. The costs will abide the result.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The learned Vakil for the respondent seeks to distinguish the present case from the case of Joggobundhu Mitter v. Purnanund Gossami (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 530), in this way, that whereas, in that case the property in dispute was in the possession of tenants, and could be taken possession of by the purchaser at the execution sale only under section 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the property in dispute in the present case was in the actual possession of the judgment-debtor himself, and so possession of it should have been taken by the execution-purchaser, not under section 319 but under section 318 of the Code; and as the plaintiff, the execution-purchaser, did not proceed to take possession under the last mentioned section as he ought to have done, formal or symbolical possession given to him under section 319 must be treated as a nullity and as having no effect in giving him a fresh cause of action by reason of the judgment-debtor continuing in possession, so far as the law of limitation was concerned. But on referring to the case of Joggobundhu Mitter v. Purnanand Gossami (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 530) I find that neither the learned Judges, who referred the cases to a Full Bench doubting the correctness of the decision in the case of Krishna Lall Dutt v. Radha Krishna Surkhel (I L. R., 10 Cal., 402), nor the learned Judges [719] who composed the Full Bench, laid any stress, in their decisions, upon the distinction on which reliance is placed by the learned Vakil for the respondent. The correctness of the decision in the case of Krishna Lall Dutt v. Radha Krishna Surkhel (I.L.R., 10 Cal., 402) was doubted in the referring order, and the decision of the Full Bench accepts the view of the referring Judges as may be gathered from the following passage: "The case noticed by the Division Bench, which referred this question to the Full Bench, Krishna Lall Dutt v. Radha Krishna Surkhel (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 402) was decided without reference to the earlier Full Bench case, which was apparently not brought to the notice of the Judges." Moreover, in the cases of Lokessur Koer v. Purgun Roy (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 418) and Shama Charan Chatterji v. Madhab Chandra Mookerji (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 93), which were both cases in which symbolical possession had been taken by the decree-holder of property of which the judgment-debtor was actually in possession, and of which, therefore, actual possession could have been taken by the decree-holder, it was held, notwithstanding that fact, that the formal possession given to the decree-holder was sufficient possession as against the judgment-debtor. As for the case of Lakshman v. Moru (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 722), relied upon for the respondent, it is enough to say that it does not decide the present question. Mr. Justice TELANG points out at the conclusion of his judgment that for several reasons it was not necessary to determine the question now raised. I think the weight of authority is clearly in favour of the view contended for by the learned Vakil for the appellant. And reason also appears to me to be in favour of the same view. For though actual possession might have been taken by the execution-purchaser in this case, still as he obtained possession in some form, through an officer of the Court, and by process of law, and as the judgment-debtor was, and must be taken to have been, a party to the proceeding relating to the taking of possession, it is not open to the judgment-debtor to say that the whole proceeding should be taken as a nullity, and that the execution-purchaser should still be treated as one who has never obtained any possession at all. If, after the date on which symbolical possession was given to the auction-purchaser, the [720] judgment-debtor continued in possession, his possession became that of a trespasser from that date, and gave the execution-purchaser a fresh cause of action, a suit upon which should be governed by article 144 of schedule II of the Limitation Act. And reckoning the period of limitation from the date of delivery of symbolical possession, this suit is quite in time.

Appeal allowed. Case remanded.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry and others............Plaintiffs

versus

Nund Kumar Ghosal and others...........Defendants.*

Landlord and tenant—Notice to quit—Suit for ejectment—Tenancy reserving an annual rent—What notice a raiyat holding an annual tenancy is entitled to.

In a tenancy created by a kabuliat with an annual rent reserved, the tenant is entitled to six months' notice expiring at the end of a year of the tenancy before he can be ejected.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiffs to obtain khas possession of land by pulling down a pucca poshta and a ghat built by the defendants without the plaintiffs' consent and permission. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the predecessor in title of the defendants took a settlement of the land by giving a registered kabuliat on the 14th Pous 1294 B. S., and since his death the defendants have been in possession of the said land as karsa raiyats or tenants-at-will ; that the defendants without the knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs built pucca structures on the land, and having thus altered its condition, made themselves liable to be ejected ; that a notice was served in the month of Joist last directing the defendants to demolish the poshta and the ghat, and to give up the land in the month of Assar last, and they having failed to do so, the present suit was brought. The defendants inter alia pleaded that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant, that there was no sufficient notice, that the poshta and the ghat were built openly and with the knowledge of the plaintiff, and therefore the suit ought to fail. [721] The Court of First Instance gave the plaintiffs a decree. On appeal, the learned District Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the notice to quit was not sufficient, and that the plaintiffs allowed the defendants to erect pucca buildings on the land without any objection. From this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 998 of 1895, against the decree of S. J. Douglas, Esq., District Judge of Dacca, dated the 7th of March 1895, reversing the decree of P. N. Banerjee, Esq., Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 31st of July 1893.

Mr. C. P. Hill, Babu Bussunt Coomar Bose and Babu Jogendra Chunder Ghose for the Appellants.

Mr. Woodroffe and Babu Hari Mohun Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

Mr. Hill.—There is no provision for notice, except what is provided for in section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. Where there is no contract, there is no provision for notice. This case does not come under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. Notice must be a reasonable one—see Radha Gobind Koer v. Rakhal Das Mukherji (I.L.R., 12 Cal., 82 (89)). The question is whether for the purpose of a shop-keeper's business two months' notice is a reasonable one. I submit it is. The defendants having denied the landlord's title no question of sufficiency of notice arises in this case. It is not a question of forfeiture, but the question is whether proof of notice is dispensed with, which otherwise it would have been incumbent upon the plaintiffs to prove. In such cases it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove service of notice -see Baba v. Vishvanath Joshi (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 228), Gopalrao Ganesh v. Kishor Kalidas (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 527).

Mr. Woodroffe for the respondent.—The case does not come under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. The respondents are entitled to six months' notice terminable at the end of the year--see the case of Rajendro Nath Mookhopadhya v. Bassider Rahman (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 146 : 25 W. R., 329).

Mr. C. P. Hill in reply.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) :—

Maclean, C.J.—There have been two or three points argued [722] in this appeal, but the principal one is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to eject the defendants from certain land held by the latter under the kabuliyat set out at pages 25 and 26 of the paper-book. That question depends again upon whether adequate notice to quit was given by the plaintiffs to the defendants. All we have to decide, and all we intend to decide, is whether the notice was a good and sufficient notice so as to entitle the plaintiffs to recover possession of the property in question from the defendants. I do not propose to repeat the history and the facts of the case which are set out very fully in the judgment of the Court below, nor is it necessary, for the point is a very short one. It appears from the lease that the defendants became lessees of this property, for which they were to pay an annual rent of Rs. 5 by four instalments and take annual dakhilas for the same.

The first question is, what was the nature of the tenancy created by that document. In my opinion it was a tenancy reserving an annual rent. We do not decide whether the tenancy was or was not a permanent one. I say that because it has been suggested there may hereafter be a question as to that, and possible litigation in respect of it. Taking it then to be a tenancy with an annual rent reserved, in other words an annual tenancy (but not using that term so as to prejudice any question hereafter as to whether or not it is a permanent tenure), the question is whether the notice to quit was good and sufficient.

The defendants contend that they were entitled to six months' notice. Six months' notice admittedly was not given in this case.

In considering this question both Mr. Hill and Mr. Woodroffe agree that section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to the case. That being so, what in a tenancy of this nature is a reasonable notice to which the tenant is entitled before he can be ejected? It is conceded by Mr. Hill that according to English law in the case of a similar tenancy there must be six months' notice expiring at the end of the year of the tenancy. Apparently there is no direct authority upon the point in the Indian Courts, though Mr. Woodroffe relied upon the case of [723] Rajendronath Mookhopadhya v. Bassider Ruhman (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 146). But, as pointed out by Mr. Hill, that case really does not cover the present case. It only lays down this: "That a raiyat whose tenancy can only be determined by a reasonable notice to quit, expiring at the end of the year, can claim to have a suit for ejectment brought against him by his landlord dismissed on the ground that he has received no such notice." There being no authority to the contrary in this country we see no reason, nor has any reason been suggested, why the rule of English law should not be applicable to such a tenancy as the present in this country, and we think that six months' notice, terminating at the end of the year of the tenancy is the notice to which a tenant, under such a tenancy as that in this case is entitled. Though the case does not come within section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, our view is consistent with the principle of that section in regard to tenancies in which a yearly rent is reserved.

In this case six months' notice not having been given the suit fails.

As we have intimated in the course of the argument, we do not think that we ought to allow the appellant to go into the question not raised in either of the Courts below, viz., whether the defendants having denied the plaintiffs' title, if in their written statement they did in fact deny it, which Mr. Woodroffe does not admit, the plaintiffs were bound to prove any notice to quit. That question is not now before us.

One other point—a subsidiary point—remains, and it is this: It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the plaintiffs are entitled to re-enter now, by reason of the fact that the defendants without their lessor's consent, have erected certain structures upon the land of a permanent nature, and he calls in aid sub-section "B" of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, but as pointed out by Mr. Woodroffe that section only applies in the absence of a contract to the contrary. But even if that were not so, on the face of the finding of the Lower Appellate Court, that the plaintiffs acquiesced in the erection of these structures, I do not think that that contention can successfully be raised. It was but faintly argued before us. Upon this point it may be [724] mentioned that there is no condition of re-entry in the lease for breach of any covenant in it.

On these grounds I am of opinion that the appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J. -I also am of opinion that this appeal and plaintiffs' suit should be dismissed, and dismissed upon the sole ground that there has not been any notice to quit such as, upon any view of the case, was necessary. The tenancy was created by a kabuliyat, that is by an express contract, and it was admitted on both sides that the case was outside the scope of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. Proceeding upon that assumption, and without determining, as it is unnecessary to determine, what the exact nature of the tenancy is, I think it must be at least held that the tenancy was one reserving a yearly rent, and the year of the tenancy commenced on the 14th day of Pous 1294.

Assuming that the tenancy is at all terminable by a notice to quit, the question is what ought the nature of the notice to be; and I think that the notice in such a case ought at least to be a six months' notice expiring with the year of the tenancy. Although section 106 may not apply to the case, it shows that the Legislature in this country has not thought fit to depart from the rule of English law that a yearly tenancy can only be terminated by a six months' notice. Moreover, the rule that requires that a terminable tenancy from year to year should have as a condition for its determination a notice expiring with the year of the tenancy, is a rule that is founded upon a very good reason. It prevents dispute as to the apportionment of the rent.

For these reasons I think that the notice, if the tenancy is at all terminable by a notice to quit, ought to be a six months' notice expiring with the end of a year of the tenancy.

As the notice here does not satisfy this condition, the suit, I think, has been rightly dismissed.

S. C. G. Appeal dismissed.

[725] FULL BENCH.

The 1st, 2nd, and 3rd February, and 12th March, 1897.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Jogodishury Debea.. ....Defendant No. 1

Kailash Chandra Lahiry and others...........Plaintiffs.*

Partition—Estates Partition Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1876)—Partition of revenue-paying estate—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 265, 396—Order appointing a Commission to effect partition after preliminary decree—Appeal—Interlocutory order—Effect of not appealing from order—Civil Procedure Code, section 244.

Section 265 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to a suit for partition of a revenue-paying estate when no separate allotment of revenue is asked for. A Civil Court, therefore, has jurisdiction to decree partition in such a case; and a suit for possession, after partition, of a share in part of an undivided estate, in which part alone the plaintiff has a share, is maintainable in a Civil Court if no division of revenue is sought.

* Full Bench Reference in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 244 of 1895, against the decree of J. F. Bradbury, Esq., District Judge of Pubna and Bograh, dated the 21st of September 1894, modifying the decree of Babu Krishna Chunder Dass, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 30th of January 1894.

Debi Singh v. Sheo Lall Singh (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 203), approved and followed; Meherban Rawoot v. Behari Lal Barik (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 679), overruled.

Held, also (per O'KINEALY, MACPHERSON, TREVELYAN and BANERJEE, JJ.) that an order passed in a suit for partition, subsequently to the preliminary decree appointing a commission to make the partition, is not an order in execution, and, therefore, is not appealable under section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is an interlocutory order pending the suit which has not been finally decided; and the appellant may take objection to it in an appeal against the final decree.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by MACPHERSON and HILL, JJ., in the following terms:—

"This suit, which has been going on since May 1888, has been on several occasions before the District Court on appeal. The parties to it are some of the proprietors of a revenue-paying estate, the mouzahs of which have been divided among the [726] different proprietors, but are still jointly charged with the whole revenue. The suit is for the partition of the land of the eight mouzahs in which the plaintiff and the defendants are jointly interested to the extent of the shares specified in the schedule to the plaint. The proprietors of the other mouzahs, not being interested in these eight mouzahs, are not made parties to the suit. The object of the suit is not to have the parent estate divided into several separate estates, or to effect any division of the revenue, but to have the land of the eight mouzahs divided among the persons jointly interested in them proportionately to their respective shares.

"All the defendants, except the first and tenth, whom we will call the opposing defendants, acquiesced in the partition. The second defendant, who is the husband of the first, is also said to have been in the opposition, but it is found that he had no interest in the property, and his name does not appear among the appellants in the different stages of the case.

"The opposing defendants objected in the first instance that the Civil Court had no power to make the partition asked for, and that the plaintiff did not ask for the partition of a certain julkur in the mouzahs. On the 8th December 1888 the Subordinate Judge overruled these objections and made a decree directing the partition prayed for. The opposing defendants appealed, but the decree was confirmed by the District Court on the 5th June 1889. An Amin of the Court then made the partition under the Court's order. Among the objections taken to his report was one that certain land had been included in the partition which was not in the possession of the other share holders. This was overruled in November 1891, and on the 10th May 1892 the Subordinate Judge made a decree confirming the partition.

"The opposing defendants appealed; and one of their objections apparently related to the objection taken to the Amin's report, although the particulars do not precisely tally. It was, that certain land within the survey limits of Pinderhati, one of the mouzahs under partition, had been improperly included in the partition, as it had for a long time been in the exclusive possession of the first defendant and the other owners of the adjoining mouzah which was not under partition. The Judge, finding that [727] there was no evidence on which he could say whether this objection was or was not well founded, directed that this disputed land, after its boundaries and extent had been ascertained, should be separated from the rest of Pinderhati, and that a section of it should be assigned to each co-owner of Pinderhati corresponding with his interest in that mouzah. This he did to obviate any injury to those share-holders to whom the greater part of the land had been allotted, in the event of its being afterwards found to be part of Tahat. He at the same time directed that the expense of the inquiry should be borne by the first defendant Jogodishury. A revision of the partition in some other respects, which it is not necessary to notice, was also ordered. This was on the 2nd August 1893.

"On the 30th January 1894 the Subordinate Judge, after revising the partition, made a final decree. He says that, as Jogodishury had not deposited the costs of the inquiry directed, he was unable to comply with the part of the remand order above referred to, and that he overruled her objection that the land of Tahat had been included in the partition, as she had adduced no evidence in support of it. This matter, therefore, stood as it was before.

"The opposing defendants again appealed to the District Court, with the result that the partition was slightly altered. They now appeal against the decree of the Appellate Court, but there is no reference in the Appellate Court's last judgment to any of the questions raised.

"Those questions are three in number. First, that, having regard to the provisions of section 265, read with section 396 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court had no power to make a partition of the land of a revenue-paying estate, and that the partition should have been made by the Collector. Second, that the partition is incomplete, as the julkur, which was the subject of objection before the preliminary decree for partition was made, has been left undivided: it is argued that if it could not have been divided, it should have been given in entirety to one or other of the shareholders, the others being compensated in some other way. Third, that the partition is bad, as a partition can only be made of land which is in the actual or constructive possession [728] of the parties, and the disputed land of Tahat should not have been included. The respondents say they were quite justified in not paying the cost of the inquiry directed, as they objected to the whole order of the Judge with reference to the land claimed as part of Tahat land.

"On the first question there are conflicting decisions of this Court which in our opinion render a reference to a Full Bench necessary. In Debi Singh v. Sheo Lall Singh (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 203), PETHERAM, C.J., and BANERJEE, J., held that the Civil Court could partition the land of a revenue-paying estate, but could not partition the revenue. In other words, it could not partition the entire estate into several revenue-paying estates, but it could partition the land of the estate, provided that there was no allotment of the revenue, and that the entire land comprised in the estate continued liable as before for the entire revenue. This was the construction put upon section 265 of the Civil Procedure Code which was held to apply only to cases in which a complete partition of land and revenue was sought.

"In Meherban Rawoot v. Behari Lal Barik (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 679), TREVELYAN and BEVERLEY, JJ., held that under section 265 of the Code, the Civil Court could not partition the land of a revenue-paying estate, even if no partition of the revenue was asked for. That we think was the undoubted effect of their judgment. It is clear that no division of the revenue was asked for in that case, and in so far as it concerned the application of section 265, it was treated as immaterial whether it was or was not asked for, as in either case it was considered the Civil Court could not make the partition. It is true that the learned Judges distinguish and do not dissent from the decision in Debi Singh v. Sheo Lall Singh (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 203); but, with due deference, we are unable to see the distinction in the principle of the decision, although there may be some distinction in the facts of the case. It is clear that the case of Debi Singh v. Sheo Lall Singh (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 203) was decided on the construction of the section as to the power of a Civil Court to make a partition of the land of a revenue-paying estate, when no separate allotment of the land was asked for. The circumstance that part of [729] the land sought to be partitioned was held as a mokurari tenure is not remotely alluded to, and if it had been, it would not, we think, have made the partition of the revenue-paying land any the more admissible if section 265 applied. In our opinion the two cases conflict in the construction of section 265.

"It was argued that, as the appellants did not appeal against the preliminary decree for partition, when it was held that the Civil Court could make the partition, they cannot appeal on that ground against the final decree. A decree for partition and a decree for an account are, we think, on the same footing in the sense that both are decrees from which an appeal will lie. It is difficult, therefore, to reconcile the decisions in Boloram Dey v. Ram Chundra Dey (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 279) and Biswa Nath Chaki v. Bani Kanta Dutta (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 406).

"The present objection goes, however, to the jurisdiction of the Court to make, and therefore to confirm, a partition. The preliminary decree, moreover, merely directed a partition, and not that it should be made.

"The question which we refer is whether, having regard to the provisions of section 265 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Civil Court can make a partition of land of a revenue-paying estate when no separate allotment of the Government revenue is asked for."

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babu Baikanta Nath Dass and Babu Kishori Lall Sircar) for the Appellant.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Babu Srinath Das, Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, and Babu Mohini Mohon Chuckerbutty) for the Respondents.

Mr. Woodroffe raised a preliminary objection that the case had not been properly referred; but the Court informed him that that difficulty had been foreseen, and that the learned Judges had made an order referring the appeal. He also submitted that the question referred did not arise; and that the Court that heard the appeal ought to have held that the appeal was barred by limitation. Their Lordships, however, called on the appellant's pleaders to open the case.

[730] Dr. Rash Behari Ghose.—The Civil Court had no power to issue the commission for partition; because, whether the action was for complete partition of the estate or not within section 265 of the Code, it certainly was an action for the partition of immoveable property paying revenue to the Government. The fact that this suit was for partition of an undivided share of the estate is immaterial. For the purposes of section 265 of the Code, the word "estate" is not to be limited to the sense in which it is used in the Partition Act, but is to be construed in its ordinary signification: Secretary of State for India v. Nundun Lall (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 435).

But even if the case does not come under section 265 of the Code, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is limited by section 396; and if it does not fall within section 396, the issue of a commission would have been an incompetent proceeding.

The current of authorities, with the exception of Debi Singh v. Sheo Lall Singh (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 203), has been in favour of the proposition that no partition can be effected through the Civil Court: Badri Roy v. Bhugwat Narain Dobey (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 649). [O'KINEALY, J.—That was a decision under Act X of 1877, in which the words were quite different. They were the same as in Act VIII of 1859, but were changed in Act XIV of 1882.] In that action the parties sued only for partition of the land; they did not ask for allotment of the revenue. And the power of the Court is not enlarged by the Civil Procedure Code because it is still limited by section 11 of the Partition Act which restricts the right of a person to claim partition of a revenue-paying estate. A suit for partition of portion only of a revenue-paying estate is not maintainable; Ramjoy Ghose v. Ram Runjun Chuckerbutty (8 C. L. R., 367). The Civil Court can only declare the rights of the parties, the law leaves it to the Collector to give due effect to any order passed by a decree of the Civil Court; Zahrun v. Gowri Sunkar (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 198). That decision is no authority for the proposition laid down in Debi Singh v. Sheo Lall Singh (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 203) that the Collector makes a decree for partition only where the parties seek both a partition of the lands and a division of the revenue; on the contrary, it is an authority in my favour.

[731] The Bombay High Court has consistently refused to recognise any power in the Civil Court to partition revenue-paying lands Dattatraya Vithal v. Mahadaji Parashram (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 528), Shrinivas Hanmant v. Gurunath Shrinivas (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 527), Deb Gopil Savant v. Vasudev Vithal Savant (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 371), and the Madras High Court acts upon the same principle: Ramanuja Ayyangar v. Virappa Tevan (I L. R, 6 Mad., 90) and Mutturayyangar v. Kudalalagayyangar (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 97). [Meherban Rawoot v. Behari Lal Barik (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 679), was also relied on.]

Mr. Woodroffe for the Respondents.—All the cases cited on behalf of the appellant, so far as they bear on the question, are cases decided under Act VIII of 1859. Under that Act no order was appealable, but was open to question in the final appeal; whereas, under the present law, most orders are appealable, and cannot be questioned separately in the appeal against the final decree. The decision in the present case is a decree within section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is an adjudication on the question of the right to a partition. If it is severable, then it was an order carrying out a decree, and therefore it was appealable under section 244 and therefore cannot be questioned under section 591 in final appeal. The case of Gyan Chunder Sen v. Durga Churn Sen (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 318) shows that an order such as this is an order under section 396, and is therefore not appealable. Where an Appeal Court directs a commission to issue to an Amin to make a partition and allot the shares to the parties to the suit, such order amounts to a decree: Bepin Behari Moduck v. Lal Mohun Chattopadhya (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 209), Bhola Nath Dass v. Sonamoni Dasi (I. L. R, 12 Cal., 273), though the case immediately following in the same volume differs, Bhoobun Moyi Dabea v. Shurut Sundery Dabea (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 275), and in the case of Dulhin Golab Koer v. Radha Dulari Koer (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 463), the Full Bench decide that an order declaring the rights of the parties and directing partition is a decree within section 2 of the Code, and is therefore appealable as a decree.

Next, the words "estate paying revenue to the Government," [732] must be taken in their meaning as shown by the statutory use of the expression. They mean what is defined or expressed in the Partition Act. The Civil Courts have the power to partition "estates"; but the Collectors never had the power to do anything but effect a complete partition, that is, to allot the shares on the lands, and to apportion the revenue as well.

Section 265 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to a part of an estate. It is admitted that the property sought to be partitioned here is part of an estate, and that no apportionment of the revenue is asked for. Under these circumstances the Civil Court can clearly entertain the suit; Shama Soonduree Debia v. Puresh Narain Roy (20 W. R., 182), Chunder Nath Nundi v. Hur Narain Deb (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 153); and see the cases collected in Broughton's Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code, in the notes to section 11.

C. A. V.

The following judgments were delivered by the Full Bench:—

Maclean, C. J.—The question for our decision is: " Whether, having regard to the provisions of section 265 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Civil Court can make a partition of land of a revenue-paying estate when no separate allotment of the Government revenue is asked for."

A preliminary objection has been raised that no appeal lies in this case. It becomes necessary, therefore, to ascertain what the proceedings in the suit have been. The appealing defendant raised the objection in his written statement that the suit ought to have been brought in the Collectorate and not in the Civil Court. This point was decided against him both by the Subordinate Judge and by the District Judge. On the 8th December 1888 the Subordinate Judge made an interlocutory decree for partition, which was affirmed by the District Judge on the 6th June 1889. This decree, in my opinion, was a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and was appealable.

This decree apparently did not indicate by whom the partition was to be effected, whether by the Collector or by an Amin.

[733] It was assumed on the hearing of the appeal that the Civil Court Amin was appointed by an order of the Munsif, dated the 30th November 1889, and the argument on both sides proceeded on that footing. I, however, have sent for the file of the proceedings, and find as a fact that the Amin was not appointed by that order, and that it is not very clear upon the proceedings when or by whom he was appointed. The partition, however, was effected by the Amin, and he made his final report on the 15th February 1892. The defendant never objected until this appeal to such appointment. On the contrary, he treated the appointment as good, and from time to time challenged the conclusions and findings of the Amin. There has been much litigation over the Amin's report, but on the 30th January 1894 the Subordinate Judge made a final decree, which was substantially affirmed by the District Judge on the 22nd September 1894. For five or six years, therefore, the partition proceedings have been going on by the Amin, much time has been expended and much expense incurred. It is now urged for the first time on this appeal, which was filed on the 2nd February 1895, that all those proceedings are irregular, and that the Collector and not a Civil Court Amin ought to have made the partition. Inasmuch as it is not clear, when or by whom the Amin was appointed, or by whose order, I am not disposed to say finally whether any such order is or is not appealable; nor is it of any moment that I should do so, having regard to the view I take of the merits of the case; nor is it necessary to decide whether or not it is too late now for the defendant to raise the point. I may point out, however, that there is nothing to show that he ever objected to the appointment of the Amin; on the contrary, he appears to have completely acquiesced in the proceedings, and if it were necessary to decide the point, it might be difficult to distinguish the present from the case of Gyan Chunder Sen v. Durga Churn Sen (I. L R., 7 Cal., 318), a case which appears to me to be based upon a sound equitable principle and to be consonant with common sense. I need scarcely point out the grave inconvenience and probable injustice which would result from any other conclusion. It would mean that partition proceedings under an interlocutory decree might go on without any objection for years [734] by an Amin, and then when concluded, after much time and money has been expended, the whole of the proceedings might be set aside as irregular, on the ground that the partition ought to have been made by the Collector and not by an Amin, although the appointment of the latter had never been objected to. I think a Court of Justice should struggle against so impotent a conclusion. To obviate in future the possibility of so unfortunate a result, I think the Judges making interlocutory decrees in partition suits should indicate clearly upon the face of them whether the partition is to be made by the Collector or by a Civil Court Amin. From the case I have already cited this apparently is what they should do. But as I have said before, in my view of the construction of section 265 of the Civil Procedure Code, the above considerations, quoad the present case, become quite academical.

Upon the merits of the appeal, in my opinion, the present suit is not "for the partition or for the separate possession of a share of an undivided estate paying revenue to Government" within the meaning of section 265 of the Code; in other words, it is not for what is called a "perfect" partition. The suit is one for the partition, not of the parent, or whole estate, but of a part only of the estate, and it does not seek to affect or question any division or payment of the revenue. In my opinion, the words of the section do not apply, and were not intended to apply, to such a case as the present, and I approve of and follow the decision in the case of Debi Singh v. Sheo Lal Singh (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 203). I do not think that section intended to make it compulsory that the Collector should make the partition, save in cases where as the result of partition the revenue would or might be affected.

The partition in the present case cannot affect the question of revenue. I answer the question submitted by the reference in the affirmative. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Trevelyan, J.—The two questions which we have to decide in this case are: First, whether an appeal lies; and, second, whether the provisions of section 265 of the Civil Procedure Code apply. I am satisfied that an appeal lies in this case. The [735] matter of complaint is the appointment of a Civil Court Amin to partition the property. This appointment was not made in the decree which ordered partition, but was made by a subsequent order. That order was, in my opinion, an interlocutory order pending the suit which had not been finally decided. It was not an order in execution, and therefore not appealable as being an order under section 244. I am unable to see how there can be any execution except of a final order or decree which is capable of being enforced against the person or property of a party bound by it. The subsequent proceedings, after an interlocutory decree, are the natural consequence of that decree, but are not, as far as I can see, within the ordinary acceptation of the term, in execution of it. I think there is a clear distinction between acts done in pursuance or in consequence of a decree or order, and acts done in execution of it.

With regard to the second question I am of opinion that section 265 has no application to the present case. That section applies only to a case where the decree comprehends the partition of the whole of an estate paying revenue to Government. A decree for possession of a share of a portion of an undivided estate is not a decree for "possession of a share of an undivided estate" in any sense; and, having special regard to the ordinary meaning of an "estate paying revenue to Government" as including only an estate with a separate towji number in the Collector's register, I think that there is the more reason for supposing that the section only applies to a decree for possession of a whole estate. It has been argued that the section only applies in a case where the plaintiff asks, and the decree provides, for the partition of the revenue. It is in my opinion unnecessary to decide that point upon this reference, as this suit only refers to a share of an estate, but were it necessary to decide it, I would say that there is nothing in the section which so limits its operation. A suitor cannot ask a Civil Court to divide the revenue, and the Civil Court has no power in any way to order or deal with the division of revenue. (See section 29 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876.)

I cannot suppose that the section should have been intended to apply only to a case where a suitor has asked a Civil Court to give him what the Court cannot give him, i.e., a division of the [736] revenue and where the Court has complied with that request. It is for the Collector, when an order has been made under section 265, to partition the revenue, not in pursuance of the Civil Court's decree, but in pursuance of the powers given to him by the revenue law.

O'Kinealy, J.--I concur in the judgment delivered by Mr. Justice TREVELYAN.

Macpherson, J.—I am disposed to think that in this case the appellant can, on the appeal against the final decree, raise the question that the partition should have been made by the Collector and not by the Civil Court. He can do so without questioning the legality or propriety of the preliminary decree for partition, as that decree did not direct how the partition was to be made.

Assuming that an appeal lies, the objection that the partition should have been made by the Collector in my opinion fails.

The decree referred to in section 265 of the Civil Procedure Code is, I think, a decree either for the partition of an undivided revenue-paying estate into several separate revenue-paying estates, or for separate possession of a share of an undivided revenue-paying estate to be held as a separate estate—a decree, that is to say, which directs a distribution of the revenue as well as a division of the land wholly or in part. If the words "the separate possession of a share" stood alone, there might be some doubt as to their meaning, but taken with the context they clearly, I think, bear the meaning which I have put upon them.

When no distribution of the revenue is asked for, I am unable to see any distinction between the case in which the plaintiff, being a fractional co-sharer of the whole estate, wants a partition of the land of the whole estate, and a case in which, his interest being limited to some particular portion of the estate, he wants a partition of the land of that portion only. If the section prohibits the Civil Court from making the partition in the one case, it does so, I consider, equally in the other. So long as the revenue remains undistributed there is no partition of the estate, and a person owns a share of an undivided revenue-paying estate, whether his share consists of a fractional part of the whole [737] estate or of a fractional part of the land in some specific part of the estate. If the Civil Court is prohibited from making a partition of the land of the entire estate, although the estate itself is not partitioned, the prohibition must be referable to the words "the separate possession of a share of an undivided estate;" but these words would apply as much to a division of the land of a specific part of the estate as to the land of the whole estate.

I am unable, therefore, to see the force of the distinction drawn in the case of Meherban Rawoot v. Behari Lall Barik (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 679), between that case and the case of Debi Singh v. Sheo Lall Singh (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 203). The two cases seem to me to conflict on principle, and the latter case was, I think, rightly decided.

Unless it is contained in section 265, there is no law in force in the Lower Provinces of Bengal which prevents the Civil Court from making a partition in whole or in part of the land of an undivided revenue-paying estate so long as there is no distribution of the revenue, and the land of the entire estate remains liable as before for the revenue payable on account of the entire estate. Section 265, in my opinion, contains no such prohibition.

Banerjee, J.—The suit, out of which this reference has arisen, was brought by the plaintiff-respondent for the partition of certain mouzahs held jointly by him and the defendants and forming a portion of an estate paying revenue to Government, the plaint distinctly stating that all that is asked for is a division of the land without any division of the revenue. The defendants urged that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court, and raised various other objections; but the first Court found for the plaintiff upon all the issues raised, and made what it called an interlocutory decree in his favour on the 8th of December 1888, directing that the property in suit be partitioned between the plaintiff and the defendants, according to the shares mentioned in the plaint. The decree contains no direction as to whether the partition is to be made by the Collector or the Civil Court Amin; but there was an order passed on the same day directing that the partition should be made by an Amin. Some of the [738] defendants preferred an appeal against that decree; but the appeal was dismissed by the District Judge on the 6th of June 1889.

A Commissioner was then appointed to make the partition. The Commissioner made certain allotments of the land. And a decree was made by the first Court on the basis thereof on the 10th of May 1892. This decree was set aside on appeal, and the case remanded to the first Court, and the decree made by that Court after the remand was affirmed with some modification by the decree of the District Judge, dated the 21st of September 1894.

Against this decree the defendant No. 1 has preferred the second appeal now before us, and the only ground urged on her behalf is that the land in suit, being part of an estate paying revenne to Government, the decree for partition could be carried into effect only by the Collector as provided by section 265 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the partition effected by the Commissioner appointed by the Civil Court must be set aside as illegal.

A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that it is not open to the appellant to urge the above ground, firstly, because she did not prefer any appeal against the order of the first Court directing a Commissioner to make the partition, though that order was appealable, and, secondly, because, even if the order was not appealable, she acquiesced in that order, and without taking any exception to it allowed the partition to be made by an Amin.

I am of opinion that the first branch of the preliminary objection must fail. The order of the first Court directing a Commissioner to make the partition was not an appealable order, no appeal being given against any such order by section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and if it was not an appealable order, the mere fact of the defendant No. 1 not having appealed against it cannot stand in the way of her urging the ground now raised.

It was argued by the learned Counsel for the respondents that the order in question being one relating to the execution of a decree for partition, was an order under section 244, and was therefore a decree as defined in section 2; and that consequently it was appealable.

[739] To this argument there are two answers. In the first place, in the view I take of section 265 of the Code, as will be presently stated, I think that the decree for partition made on the 8th of December 1888, though it determined certain rights of the parties and was appealable as a decree [see Dulhin Golab Koer v Radha Dulari Koer (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 463)] was not a decree made under that section, nor the final decree in the suit, but was, as the Court that made it properly describes it, an interlocutory decree, and that the order made in the proceedings subsequently taken to effect the partition before the final decree was passed should be treated as an order made in further proceedings in the suit, and not as an order made in execution of decree within the meaning of section 244. [See Dwarka Nath Misser v. Barinda Nath Misser (I. L. R., 22 Cal., 425).] In the second place, even if the order directing the partition to be made by a Civil Court Amin or Commissioner can be properly viewed as an order made in the execution of a decree, still it cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as an order coming within the scope of section 244, and therefore within the meaning of the term "decree." It is not every order made in execution of a decree that comes within section 244. If that were so, every interlocutory order in an execution proceeding, such as an order granting or refusing process for the examination of witnesses, would be appealable; and far greater latitude would be given of appealing against orders in such proceedings than is allowed as against orders made in suits before decree —a thing which could hardly have been intended. [See Sree Nath Roy v. Radha Nath Mookerjee (I.L.R., 9 Cal., 773) and Behari Lal Pundit v. Kader Nath Mullick (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 469).] An order in execution proceedings can come under section 244 only when it determines some question relating to the rights and liabilities of parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree; not when, as in this case, it determines merely an incidental question as to whether the proceedings are to be conducted in a certain way. I may add that the language of section 244 which enacts that certain "questions shall be determined by an order of the Court executing the decree and not by separate suit," clearly indicates that the questions contemplated by the section must be of a nature such that it is possible [740] to suppose that but for the section they could have formed the subject of determination by a separate suit. But a question of an incidental character can never come under that description, and an order determining such a question cannot, therefore, be a decree as defined in section 2.

The order under consideration not being in my opinion appealable, it becomes unnecessary to determine the further question raised as to the effect of a party not appealing within time against a decree or an order which is appealable—a question regarding which there is some conflict of authority. See the cases of Boloram Dey v. Ram Chandra Dey (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 279) and Biswa Nath Chaki v. Bani Kanto Dutta (I.L.R., 23 Cal., 406), which relate to the effect of not appealing from an order which is a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code, and the cases of Cheda Lal v. Badulla (I. L. R., 11 All., 35), Savitri v. Ramji (I. L. R., 14 Bom., 232) and Kanta Pershad Hazari v. Jagat Chandra Dutta (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 335) which relate to the effect of not appealing from appealable orders.

It remains now to consider the question raised in the second branch of the preliminary objection (which, strictly speaking, is not in the nature of a preliminary objection) namely, whether the defendant No. 1, by having acquiesced in the order directing the partition to be made by an Amin, and having allowed the partition to be so made without protest, has precluded herself from urging the point now pressed before us. If the point raised for the appellant that the partition ought to have been made by the Collector and not by an Amin is one of procedure only and not of jurisdiction, then the appellant, having acquiesced in the procedure adopted by the Court of First Instance, cannot now take exception to it. The case of Gyan Chunder Sen v. Durga Churn Sen (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 318) is clear authority on the point. The appellant's contention would also be met by section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it is argued for the appellant that if the case comes under section 265, the question raised on her behalf would be one of jurisdiction and not of procedure merely. As this last-mentioned point is not altogether free from doubt, and as, in the [741] view I take of section 265, the appeal fails on the merits, I do not think it necessary to consider whether the objection raised on behalf of the appellant is one of jurisdiction or of procedure only.

Turning now to the question raised on behalf of the appellant, namely, whether, having regard to the provisions of section 265 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Civil Court can make a partition of land of a revenue-paying estate when no separate allotment of the Government revenue is asked for, I am of opinion that the question should be answered in the affirmative.

Section 265 runs as follows: "If the decree be for the partition, or for the separate possession of a share, of an undivided estate paying revenue to Government, the partition of the estate or the separation of the share shall be made by the Collector according to the law, if any, for the time being in force for the partition or the separate possession of shares of such estates."

In construing this section, bearing in mind the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamal Basini Dasi (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 563: L. R., 23 I. A., 18), we must in the first instance examine the language of the enactment. The section evidently contemplates two classes of cases, namely, one for the partition of an undivided estate paying revenue to Government, and the other for the separate possession of a share of such an estate, and the question is, what is meant by "the partition of an undivided estate paying revenue to Government" and what by "the separate possession of a share" of such an estate? As I understand these expressions, which are not explained in the Code, the former means the division of an undivided estate paying revenue to Government into a number of smaller estates corresponding to the shares or interests of the several joint proprietors, each being liable only for a portion of the revenue assessed on the original or parent estate; and the latter, the separate possession of his share by a co-proprietor of the undivided estate, the separate share forming a distinct estate liable only for its legitimate portion of the revenue, the remainder of the parent estate continuing joint and being burdened with the remainder [742] of the revenue. I may add that the words "separate possession of a share," which occur also in section 225 of Act VIII of 1859, the former law on the subject, appear to have been taken from section 4, clause 2, of Regulation XIX of 1814, the law relating to partition of estates in force when the Code of 1859 was passed. The words "partition" and "separate possession of a share," in the absence of any conflicting context, must imply complete partition and complete separation, and the presence of the phrase "paying revenue to Government" in the context as qualifying the term "undivided estate" evidently suggests that the partition or separation must involve, not only a division or separation of the land of the estate, but also a division or separation of the revenue payable to Government in respect thereof. But where, as in this case, the suit is for the partition, not of an undivided estate paying revenue to Government, but of the lands of a portion of such an estate, the revenue payable to Government still remaining undivided, the case does not in my opinion come within the scope of section 265, and the partition should be made, not by the Collector, but by the Civil Court.

This is the conclusion I deduce from the grammatical construction of the section ; and an examination of the law in force for the partition or the separate possession of shares of an estate paying revenue to Government, which is referred to in the section itself, will confirm that conclusion, and show the reason why a decree for complete partition or separation of a share of such an estate, that is, one for the division of the land and the revenue, is required to be made by the Collector, while a partition or separation of the land alone without any division of the revenue is left to be effected by the Civil Court. That law, so far as the district from which this case comes is concerned, is to be found in Bengal Act VIII of 1876. Section 5 of the Act provides that "all partition of estates which shall be ordered to be made after the commencement of this Act shall be made under the provisions of this Act, and no such partition made otherwise than under this Act shall relieve any lands from liability to Government for the total demand of the land revenue assessed upon the estate of which they form a part." Section 6 lays down the principle on which the revenue assessed on the parent estate is to be distributed over the [743] separate estates. Section 29 says : "Subject to the provisions of section 11 a Civil Court may at any time direct the Collector to assign to any person lands representing a specified interest in any estate or in any specified village or tract of land in an estate, to be held by such person as a separate estate, or to divide off from any estate any specified village or lands and to assign them to any person to be held as a separate estate, provided that an application for such partition and separation shall be presented by such person as required by sections 17, 18 and 19; but no Civil Court shall in any case sepecify the amount of revenue for which any separate estate, which it may direct to be formed under the provisions of this section, shall be liable" And section 30 enacts that "the Collector shall assess the land revenue on every such separate estate in accordance with the provisions of this Act, and no Civil Court shall direct the Collector to carry out a partition otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

The first of the abovementioned sections (section 5) shows that a partition, in order that it may result, not only in the division of the land, but also in the division of liability for Government revenue, must be made according to the provisions of the Act, and that a partition not so made will leave the liability to Government for the total revenue untouched, and the last two sections (29 and 30) show that, though it is competent to the Civil Court (subject to the provisions of section 11) to direct the Collector to assign to any person, either lands representing any specified interest or any specific lands, to be held by him as a separate estate no one except the Collecter can determine the amount of revenue to be assessed upon such separated estate and divide the joint liability for revenue.

The object of this provision is evidently to ensure the safety of the Government revenue by leaving it to a responsible revenue officer alone to distribute the revenue in cases of partition, so that there may be no risk of the separated estates being through error or collusion burdened with disproportionate liabilities.

Where, as in the case before us, the parties do not require a division of the revenue, or where, as in cases coming under sections 11, 13 and 14 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876, they cannot, unless they comply with certain conditions, ask for a division [744] of the revenue, and all that they ask for is a division of the lands, the liability for revenue continuing joint, there is no reason why the Collector should be asked to effect the partition. In fact, the Civil Court cannot direct the Collector to make any partition in the last-mentioned class of cases, it being prohibited to do so by the latter part of section 30 quoted above.

It has been said that section 265 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to all cases where partition or separate possession of an entire estate is asked for, irrespective of the consideration whether division of the revenue is asked for or not, because no division of the revenue can be asked for in such a suit in the Civil Court, the Civil Court having no jurisdiction to make any such division. I am unable to accept this reasoning as correct. It is true that section 29 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876 shows that the Civil Court has no power to specify the amount of revenue for which any separate estate shall be liable, but that same section shows that the Civil Court may direct the Collector to assign lands to any person to be held by him as a separate estate, that is, having regard to the definition of the terms "estate" and "separate estate" in section 4, clauses viii and xvi, as a distinct quantity of land liable for a separate amount of revenue. So that, though the Civil Court cannot divide the revenue, it may declare that the revenue should be divided.

Section 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure was referred to as lending support to the appellant's contention. It was argued that, besides section 265, this is the only other provision in the Code for the partition of immoveable property; and as the property in suit cannot be said to be property not paying revenue to Government, this section cannot apply to it, and if section 265 is also inapplicable, there is no provision in the Code with reference to the present case.

The language of section 396, no doubt, does create a little difficulty. It is very likely that this section was intended to cover all cases other than those provided for by section 265, but the Legislature has not said so clearly, and in section 396 it has departed from the phraseology adopted in section 265 to an extent which would make it difficult to say that it had any such intention.

[746] If section 396 was inapplicable to this case, still the Court could issue a commission for local investigation and preparation of a map of the lands in suit under section 392 with a view to make a decree for partition.

It remains now to consider the cases cited in the argument on this point. Some of these, such as the cases of Shama Soonduree Debia v. Puresh Narain Roy (20 W. R., 182), Chunder Nath Nundi v. Hur Narain Deb (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 153), Ramjoy Ghose v. Ram Runjun Chuckerbutty (8 C. L. R., 367) and Badri Roy v. Bhugwat Narain Dobey (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 649) are not decisions in point, but only contain dicta of the learned Judges which might be construed in favour of the appellant. In two of the cases, Damoodur Misser v. Senabutty Misrain (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 537) and The Secretary of State v. Nundun Lall (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 435), it appears that division of revenue was either asked for or involved in the plaintiff's prayer, so that nothing that was said by the learned Judges there can be in conflict with the view I take. As against the dicta relied upon for the appellant there are the dicta of the learned Judges in the case of Zahrun v. Gowri Sunkar (I.L.R., 15 Cal., 198), which favour the opposite view. The two cases which are really in point and are in conflict with one another are those of Debi Singh v. Sheo Lall Singh (I L.R., 16 Cal., 203) and Meherban Rawoot v. Behari Lal Barik (I.L.R, 23 Cal., 679). For the reasons stated above I consider the decision in the former case correct, and I would respectfully dissent from that in the latter.

In the result I would answer the question stated in this reference in the affirmative, and dismiss this appeal with costs.

[746] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Rewat Lall (Plaintiff) and others. ....Defendants.

Sale for arrears of rent —Incumbrance—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 161, 167 —Notice —Mortgage—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 73.

A sale purporting to be under section 161 and the following sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) does not, ipso facto, cancel incumbrances. Notice must be given under section 167 according to the procedure laid down in that section.

Section 73 † of the Transfer of Property Act only gives a right to the mortgagee over the residue of the sale proceeds, and refers to cases where the law otherwise provided that the effect of the sale is to nullify a mortgage, it is not intended in any way to enlarge the interest of the purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue or rent.

Prem Chand Pal v. Purnima Dasi (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 546), referred to.

THIS appeal and appeal No. 230 of 1894 arose out of the same suit, and were tried together. The facts material to this report are given in the judgment of the High Court. The principal point argued was on behalf of defendant No. 9, Beni Prosad Sinha, appellant in appeal No. 195, who purchased a dar-mokurari interest in a 12d. 5c. share in mehal Bhadakhra at a sale for arrears of rent due from the dar-mokuraridars, the defendants Nos. 1 to 5. The plaintiff

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 195 of 1894 against the decree of Babu Brij Mohun Pershad, Subordinate Judge of Gya, dated the 23rd of February 1894.

† [Sec. 73.—Where mortgaged property is sold through failure to pay arrears of revenue or rent due in respect thereof, the mortgagee has a charge on the surplus, if any, of the proceeds, after payment thereout of the said arrears, for the amount remaining due on the mortgage unless the sale has been occasioned by default made on his part.]

Charge on proceeds of revenue-sale.

held a mortgage bond from the same defendants, which was found by the Court to have covered the dar-mokurari interest in addition to other properties. The plaintiff urged that the purchase by defendant No. 9 was subject to plaintiff's mortgage lien, and in case the Court held otherwise, that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration in respect of the surplus sale proceeds.

The Subordinate Judge held that the purchase was not free from incumbrances, as it was not a purchase at a sale under the [747] Bengal Tenancy Act, the sale having been, not only for the arrears due on account of this dar-mokurari, but on account of another mouza also. He then went on as follows :—

"Again, the sale did not take place in conformity with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. No notification seems to have been fixed up in the mal kutchery and police thana. It is also worthy of note that defendant No. 9 did not follow the provisions of section 167 of the above Act He ought to have applied to the Collector of the District to annul the sale"

The defendant No. 9 appealed to the High Court.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee and Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Babu Umakali Mukerjee, Babu Amarendra Nath Chatterjee, and Moulvie Mahomed Habibulla, for the Respondents.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—The plaintiff cannot now enforce his lien against the tenure; his remedy is to proceed against the surplus sale proceeds. The attachment and sale proclamation were under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the sale was free from incumbrances The sale proceeds represent the property, and the mortgagee can now look only to those proceeds. The conduct of the plaintiff subsequent to sale, in not having recourse to the provisions of section 167, does not affect the nature or validity of the sale. The sale proceeds represent the property free from the mortgage. The lower Court was in error in holding that the plaintiff could not proceed against those proceeds Section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act provides for a case like this. The mortgagee's right has now in reality been transferred to the residue of the sale proceeds after paying the amount for which the property was sold.

Counsel for respondents was not called upon.

The judgment of the High Court (Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ) was as follows :—

As these two appeals arise from the same judgment it will be convenient for us to deal with them in one judgment, although the questions which have to be determined in them are different. The suit was somewhat a complicated one, but as the argument [748] before us has been confined to matters in which the appellants in these appeals are concerned, the facts necessary to be mentioned are not many. The suit was brought to enforce a mortgage of certain properties, and all the persons interested in those properties were made parties.

The appeal No. 195, which was argued first, was preferred by the 9th defendant, Beni Prosad. Shortly the position of Beni Prosad was that he had purchased a dar-mokurari tenure in mehal Bhadakhra at a sale held for arrears of rent of that tenure. That tenure had belonged to the mortgagor, and in the fourth of the mortgages sued upon there were included the mortgagor's milkiat and mokurari rights in 3 annas 8 dhurs of this mehal. This mortgage was executed on the 17th February 1886, and the sale at which the appellant bought was on the 8th August 1891.

The first contention that was raised on the appellants' behalf was that the dar-mokurari interest of the mortgagors did not pass under the mortgage to the plaintiff. We think it clear that the description of the mokurari in that mortgage was intended to include any dar-mokurari right, and the learned Subordinate Judge has shown in his judgment how the dar-mokurari interests were treated as if they had been actually mokurari interests. The dar-mokurari, although it is a sub-lease, is a lease, and we think it clear that the mortgagors intended in their mortgage to the plaintiff to dispose of all their interest in the property.

The next question was contended with greater force. First of all we would point out that, assuming that this tenure was sold in accordance with section 161 and the following sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act—a matter which we need not determine now—it is admitted that no notice was given under section 167 of that Act. The property purported to be sold in accordance with the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the sale proclamation provides that "the sale will be by public auction, and the right of holding the said kasth (which evidently means the tenure) will be sold with the power of cancelling all the incumbrances." It is clear that that provision did not ipso facto, cancel the incumbrances. It is not contended before us that it did. It would, therefore, follow that under section 167 notice must be given according to the procedure laid down in that section.

[749] Mr. Bonnerjee on behalf of the appellant contended that under section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act the rights of the mortgagor in that property were by virtue of the sale transferred to the residue of the sale proceeds after paying the amount for which the property was sold. We are unable to give the force contended for to that section. The object of section 73, in our opinion, is to relieve the mortgagee of the effects of the injury which he would suffer by the property which was a security for his money being sold, and to give him a right over the residue of the sale proceeds. It is not intended in any way to enlarge the interests of persons purchasing at a sale for arrears of revenue or rent. If that had been the intention any subsequent provision of law providing that a sale for arrears of revenue or rent could get rid of an incumbrance would be unnecessary. It is, in our opinion, intended to refer to cases where the law has otherwise provided that the effect of a sale for arrears of revenue or rent should nullify a mortgage. There is authority for this view, namely, the decision of NORRIS AND BEVERLEY, JJ., in Prem Chand Pal v. Purnima Dasi (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 546), which has been referred to by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment. This mortgage was attached to the property and was not by any process of law destroyed. It therefore follows that the plaintiff's rights in regard to it have not been touched by the sale of the tenure which was not followed up by any avoidance of the incumbrances in the way provided by law.

We are also asked to hold that the Subordinate Judge ought to have directed that the property, Dowlutpore Khaira, which was mortgaged to the plaintiff and was not subject to any of the other mortgages, should be first sold. This contention was put forward as an extension of the doctrine of marshalling. This is not a case which comes under section 81 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is not a case between mortgagees, and as the effect of the appellant's purchase without avoiding incumbrances would be the same as if he had purchased subject to incumbrances, it might be an injustice to the mortgagors if any such right should be allowed, and we know of no authority which would give him such right against the mortgagees. The case of Lala Dilawar Sahai v. Dewan Bolakiram (I.L R., 11 Cal., 253) cited from the Indian Law Reports [750] is an authority against the right contended for. This disposes of appeal No. 195, which must be dismissed with one set of costs to each of the two sets of respondents.

As regards the appeal No. 230, the appellant is the defendant No. 8, who was a purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue of the whole of the separated share of seven annas odd of mehal Bhadakhra. This is not a separate estate, but the Government revenue was paid separately.

The first argument which was addressed to us was a curious one. It seems that the plaintiff happened to be a mukhtar by profession. A decree had been obtained by the defendants Nos. 25 to 29 against the mortgagors on mortgage bonds of certain property, which it is not necessary to detail here. The plaintiff in that suit, through the present plaintiff as their mukhtar, before the sale of the property which was ordered to be sold in their suit, obtained possession of the residue of the proceeds of mehal Bhadakhra after the sale for arrears of Government revenue, and with the consent of the mortgagors appropriated that money towards payment of the debt due to them. There was nothing wrong in that. The debt was due. The debtors permitted particular creditors to take this money and it was money payable to them. It may be that if the plaintiff had asserted his rights as mortgagee he might have been able to prevent such payment. But how the present appellant who paid the money for what he bought could reasonably object to what has been done it is difficult to see. He was buying subject to the mortgage of the plaintiff. He is not entitled to have a portion of what he paid for the equity of redemption applied for the purpose of paying off any portion of the mortgage. It is difficult to see how the action of the plaintiff could in any way have given rise to any equity against him.

Then it was suggested that compound interest ought not to be charged. The contract was for compound interest, and we are unaware that the account has been made up otherwise than correctly.

This appeal therefore also fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

S. C. C. Appeal dismissed.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), sections 154, clause (e) 96, 97—Suit for partition—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—"Perfect" and "imperfect" partition—Entire estate.

An estate does not cease to be an entire estate within the meaning of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886) because a few plots of land are common to it and some other estate, or because they are brahmutter or debutter, or because they are held in some undefined way jointly with other persons.

Where a suit was brought for the partition of an estate, excluding certain portions as being brahmutter or debutter or as being held jointly by third persons, how or in what capacity not being stated: Held, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was barred by section 154 of the Regulation.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 279 of 1894 against the decree of Babu Joy Gopal Sinha, Subordinate Judge of Sylhet, dated the 30th of June 1894.

THIS was one of three analogous suits instituted by the plaintiffs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet for partition of lands situated in different mouzas appertaining to one or other of six revenue-paying estates in pergunnah Chhattak. In these suits certain specified plots were excluded from the partition as being either debutter or brahmutter or as being held ijmali with certain other persons, but how or in what right those persons held, or how the lands were joint, was not stated in the plaint. The division of the Government revenue of the lands in suit was not prayed for, nor was there any allegation by the plaintiffs that their application for "perfect partition" had been refused by the revenue authorities.

The defendants alleged, inter alia, that the suits were not maintainable under the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886.

The Subordinate Judge held that in these cases "imperfect partition" was claimed, and as there was no allegation that the plaintiff's application for "perfect partition" had been refused by the Collector, the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain these suits under section 154, clause (e) of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), and he dismissed this suit on [752] that ground, and also because certain ijmali lands and jalkars had been excluded from the partition sought for.

The plaintiff No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Babu Baikunta Nath Das for the Appellant.

Babu Nilmadhub Bose for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows:—

The suits which have given rise to this and the two analogous appeals Nos. 108 and 186 of 1895, have been dismissed on the statements contained in the plaints, and without going into any evidence, on the ground that under section 154, clause (e) of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886) the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain them, and also because certain ijmali lands and jalkars had been excluded. It is sufficient to deal with appeal No. 279 (suit No. 280 of 1892), which has alone been argued, as it is admitted that the decision in this will govern the decision in the other cases.

In suit No. 280 the plaintiffs ask for the partition of about 170 plots of land situated in one or other of the eleven mouzahs mentioned in the first 11 schedules to the plaint and appertaining to one or other of six revenue-paying estates, which may be described as No. 1, 7, 11, 22, 23 and 26. The plaintiffs and the three defendants are the owners, and, so far as appears, the sole owners, of these estates, the plaintiff's share being 6 annas and that of the defendants 10 annas; of the 170 plots, 57 appertain to taluk No. 1, 42 to taluk No 7, 23 to taluk No. 11, 13 to taluk No. 22, 14 to taluk No. 23 and 11 to taluk No. 26. Schedules 12, 13, 14 refer to certain specified plots appertaining to some of the taluks which are excluded from the partition as being either debutter or brahmutter, or as being held ijmali with certain other persons not parties to the suit, but how or in what capacity is not stated. In order to understand clearly the position we may refer shortly to the plaints in the two other suits, Nos. 131 and 132. The land is situated in the same mouzas, and the parties are the same as in suit No. 280, with the addition of certain defendants interested in other taluks, some of the land of which it is sought to partition. In both suits certain specified plots are also excluded from the partition asked for.

[753] Suit No. 131 is for the partition of about 59 plots appertaining to one or other of taluks Nos. 8, 11, and 1; of these 56 appertain to taluk No. 8 in which all the defendants, including the parties to suit No. 280, have a share, and three are common to that taluk and taluks Nos. 11 or 1, some of the lands in which it is sought to partition in suit No. 280, and which belong to the parties to that suit. Suit No. 132 is for the partition of about 50 plots of lands appertaining to one or other of 10 taluks. About 35 of these appertain to taluk No 2 owned by all the parties to the suit. The rest are common to some of the taluks, amongst which are taluks Nos. 1, 7, 22, 23 and 26 belonging to the parties in suit No. 280, and some of the lands on which it is sought to partition in that suit, and taluks Nos. 6, 9, 12 and 28, which are said to belong to two only of the defendants in suit No. 132.

It will thus be seen that some plots of taluks Nos. 1, 7, 11, 22, 23, and 26 appertaining jointly to those and other taluks are excluded from suit No. 280 and brought into the other suits. Section 154 of the Assam Regulation debars the Civil Court from exercising jurisdiction in any of the following matters: (d) claims of persons to perfect partition; (e) claims of persons to imperfect partition (with a certain exception which does not apply here); (f) the distribution of the land or allotment of the revenue on partition. By section 96 partition is described as either perfect or imperfect; 'perfect partition' meaning the division of a revenue-paying estate into two or more such estates, each separately liable for the revenue assessed thereon; 'imperfect partition' meaning the division of a revenue-paying estate into two or more portions jointly liable for the revenue assessed on the entire estate. Section 97 provides that no person shall be entitled to apply for imperfect partition of an estate, unless with the consent of recorded co-sharers holding in the aggregate more than one-half of the estate, or for a perfect partition if the result of the partition would be to form a separate estate liable for an annual amount of revenue less than five rupees. If, however, a partition is refused on the latter ground the Civil Court can, under clause (e) of section 154, entertain a claim for imperfect partition. That event has not happened.

This is not a case of perfect partition, as no division of the [754] revenue is asked for, and it is contended for the appellants, the plaintiffs in the suits, that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is not taken away by section 154, because the imperfect partition contemplated and provided for by the Regulation is the division of the entire estate into two or more portions, whereas what the appellants want is a division of a portion only of the estate, or more accurately speaking of portions of several estates.

This possibly may be under certain circumstances a correct contention. If the appellants and the defendants were the owners, and in possession of a specific portion of an entire estate, having no interest in the remaining portion beyond the general liability for the whole Government revenue, it may be that the Court could, notwithstanding the Regulation, make a partition of the particular portion which belonged to them. That, however, is not the case here, and we express no opinion on the point So far as appears from the plaint the appellants and the defendants are the sole owners of the whole of the six taluks and not of any particular portions of them, and they want to get the lands of those taluks divided in the way most convenient to them. They exclude certain plots as appertaining jointly to those and other taluks. They also exclude some plots of brahmutter or debutter, and other plots as joint with lands of other persons, but how or in what right those persons hold, or how the lands are joint, is not stated.

It is quite clear that the appellants by lumping together the lands of a number of taluks cannot give the Court a jurisdiction which it could not exercise in respect of any one of them, nor can they give it jurisdiction by excluding plots of land which properly appertain to them. Putting the narrowest construction on the Regulation, the Civil Courts are debarred from entertaining any claim for the division of an entire revenue-paying estate into two or more portions or from making any distribution of the land of such an estate. An estate does not cease to be an entire estate because a few plots of land are common to it and some other estate, or because they are brahmutter or debutter, or because they are held in some undefined way ijmali with other persons. The plaint must show that the Court has jurisdiction to deal with the subject-matter of the suit. The plaints in these [755] suits so far from showing this indicate the contrary, and the suits have, we think, been rightly dismissed.

Obviously also there might be considerable difficulty in making the partitions, and considerable complication in future if they were made, for the lands, however divided, would continue to be attached to the taluks to which they are now attached. It is unnecessary, however, to enlarge on this. We dismiss the appeals with costs.

Act in any proceeding or inquiry under that Act. An order for the prosecution, under section 82 of the Registration Act, of a witness who gives evidence before the Sub-Registrar in such an inquiry, is wrong in law.

TWO persons, Bishen Dayal and Ganga Prasad, applied to the Special Sub-Registrar of Gya to have a document registered, which they alleged had been executed by one Toolsee Koer. The Sub-Registrar refused to register the document, because Toolsee Koer denied the execution of the document by herself. Thereupon Bishen Dayal and Ganga Prasad applied, under section 73 of the Registration Act, to the District Registrar, who, instead of inquiring into the matter himself, sent the case for inquiry and report to the Sub-Registrar. In the course of the inquiry the petitioner was examined as a witness by the Sub-Registrar who disbelieved him. The District Registrar, acting [756] upon the report of the Sub-Registrar, dismissed the application of Bishen Dayal and Ganga Prasad, and ordered the prosecution of the petitioner under section 82 of the Registration Act. The petitioner moved the High Court to set aside the order of the District Registrar.

Babu Lakshmi Narain Sinha appeared for the Petitioner.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows:—

We think that this rule must be made absolute. The District Registrar has made an order directing the prosecution of the petitioner in respect of certain statements made by him before the Sub-Registrar with reference to a certain document presented for registration. It appears that the Sub-Registrar had refused to register the document, and under section 73 of the Registration Act an application was made to the District Registrar for the purpose of obtaining registration. The District Registrar, without inquiring into the matter himself, as enjoined by section 74 of the Act, delegated his functions to the same Sub-Registrar, who took the evidence of the petitioner, Mata Dayal, on oath, and made a report to the District Registrar that the document was not true. The District Registrar, relying upon that report, ordered the prosecution of the petitioner under section 82 of the Registration Act.

It seems to us that the District Registrar was not competent to delegate his functions, as prescribed by section 74 of the Act, to the Sub-Registrar, nor was the Sub-Registrar competent to receive the statements of the petitioner in the matter of the registration of the document in question.

Section 82 of the Act says: "Whoever commits any of the following offences shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both: (a) "intentionally makes any false statement, whether on oath or not, and whether it has been recorded or not, before any officer acting in execution of this Act, in any proceeding or inquiry under this Act," and so on.

Now the question is, whether the Sub-Registrar, in this instance, was "acting in execution of this Act in any proceeding or inquiry under this Act," within the meaning of the section. No [757] doubt he was authorized by the local Government to perform certain functions under the Act; but the functions prescribed by section 74 were entirely in the Registrar himself; and if he could not delegate his functions to any body, it could not be said that the Sub-Registrar was acting within the meaning of section 82 of the Act.

In this view of the matter we think that the sanction to prosecute the petitioner, granted by the District Registrar, was wrong in law, and, therefore, should be set aside.

S. C. B. Rule made absolute.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 26th June, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 148—Order for and assessment of costs—Delay—Notice to parties.

An order for, and the assessment of, costs under section 148 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be made at the time of passing the decision under section 145 of the Code in the presence of the parties Such costs should not be ordered and assessed by the Magistrate after a long interval, and without allowing all the parties affected an opportunity to appear and show cause.

THESE two cases were referred to the High Court by the Sessions Judge of Backergunge under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The facts sufficiently appear from the letter of reference, the material portion of which is as follows:—

"1. The petitioners in both cases are the same, and the two cases being exactly on all fours with each other must necessarily be governed by the same decision.

"2. The petitioners formed the 2nd party in two cases under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code before the Deputy Magistrate of Ferozepore, the 1st parties and the lands in dispute being different. Both cases were decided (by separate judgments) on the 10th of October 1896, and in each the 1st party was declared to be in possession. No order for costs under the last paragraph of section 148 of the Criminal Procedure Code was passed at the time, [758] judgment being altogether silent as regards costs. On the 20th of January 1897, the 1st party filed a petition (on unstamped paper) praying for an order for costs against the 2nd party; and on that petition the Deputy Magistrate recorded the following order—' The 2nd party is to pay Rs. 60 as costs to the 1st party.' The order is dated 20th January 1897.

* Criminal Reference Nos. 141 and 142 of 1897, made by B. L. Gupta, Esq., Sessions Judge of Backergunge, dated the 14th June 1897.

"3. This is the order complained of, and its legality is impugned on the ground that it was passed 3 months and 10 days after the decision of the case, and then also in the absence of the 2nd party and without any notice to them. In Binoda Sundari Chowdhurani v. Kali Kristo Paul Chowdhury (I.L R. 22 Cal., 387) the High Court expressed the opinion 'that the words the Magistrate passing a decision' (in section 148 of the Criminal Procedure Code) 'should be construed to mean, not merely the Magistrate who passes the decision, but at the time of passing the decision.' (Vide last but one paragraph of judgment, page 391 of the report.) In that case, however, the application for costs was made only 2 days after the decision, and the learned Judges, for reasons stated in the judgment, declined to interfere. In expressing the opinion quoted above the learned Judges followed the decision in an unreported case referred to in page 390 In another case, Girdhar Chatterji v. Ebadulla Naskar (I. L. R , 22 Cal , 384) the High Court appears to have taken the same view , and it would seem that an order for costs was set aside because 'it had been made in the absence of the 2nd party.'

"4. I think the effect of the decisions cited above must be taken to be that an order for costs under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be passed at the time of passing the decision, or at least within a reasonable time thereafter, and in presence of or after notice to the opposite party In the present cases the orders for costs were made ex parte and more than 3 months after the decision of the cases. I consider the delay on the part of the 1st party in making the application to be unreasonable, and therefore think it right to refer these cases for the consideration and orders of the High Court. "

No one appeared in support of the reference.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Wilkins, JJ.) is as follows :—

We think that in these two cases the Magistrate should not have passed his ex parte orders for costs under section 148 of the Criminal Procedure Code, when his original orders under section 145 contained no directions at all as to costs, and no application for costs was made to him until after the expiration of over 3 months from the date of such orders Proceedings under these sections of the Procedure Code are quasi-civil in their nature The intention [759] of section 148 would seem to be that an order for, and the assessment of, costs should be made at the time in the presence of the parties This being so, such costs should not be ordered and assessed by the Magistrate after a long interval and without allowing all the parties affected an opportunity to appear and show cause.

We set aside the orders of the Magistrate in both cases dated 20th January 1897.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 7th May, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Uma Sundari Devi............(Plaintiff) Petitioner

Bindu Bashini Chowdhrani and another (Defendants),...........Opposite Party.*

Decree —Amendment or alteration of Decree—Power of the High Court to amend decree of lower Court improperly drawn—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 206, 551—Effect of dismissal of appeal—Practice.

The order of dismissal of an appeal under section 551 † of the Civil Procedure Code being a final determination of, and an adjudication on the questions raised in the appeal, is a "decree;" and in this respect there is no distinction between an appeal which is dismissed under section 551 of the Civil Procedure Code and an appeal which is dismissed under any other section of the Code after full hearing. Royal Redai v. Linga Reddi (I. L. R., 3 Mad., 1) referred to.

When an appeal is dismissed under section 551 of the Civil Procedure Code, or in the case of a second appeal when the decree is one of dismissal, the effect practically is to make the decree which is confirmed the final decree to be executed in the suit; and the High Court making such order has power to amend the decree of the lower Court which has been in effect confirmed by it, so as to bring it in conformity with the judgment which is also confirmed.

THE petitioner brought a suit against the defendants in the [760] Munsif's Court for the recovery of possession of two plots of land ka and kha, and for the removal of a privy which stood on the latter plot. The Munsif decreed the suit as regards the plot ka and dismissed it as regards kha. From that decree both parties appealed to the District Court with the result that the appeal of the defendants was dismissed, and that of the plaintiff decreed; but the relief to which the plaintiff was entitled was not specified in the decree,—the form of the decree being simply "appeal decreed."

The defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court against the said decree of the District Judge, which was dismissed under section 551 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The plaintiff then sought to execute the decree as one for possession of the said plots of land and for removal of the privy by the defendants, who objected to the execution of the decree on the main ground that the decree

†[Sec. 551:—The Appellate Court may, if it thinks fit, after fixing a time for hearing the appellant or his pleader, and hearing him accordingly if he appears at such time, confirm the decision of the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, without sending notice of the appeal to such Court and without serving notice on the respondent or his pleader; but in such case the confirmation shall be notified to the same Court.]

Power to confirm decision of Lower Court without sending it notice.

obtained by the plaintiff was incapable of execution. Both the lower Courts disallowed the defendants' objection and ordered the execution to proceed.

The defendants appealed to the High Court against the order of the District Judge allowing execution of the decree. The High Court held that the decree, as it stood, could not be executed as regards the plot kha, it not being in conformity with the law which requires that decrees shall clearly specify the relief granted, and it would be impossible to gather from the decree in its present form what relief the plaintiff was entitled to; and in allowing the appeal as regards the plot kha, the High Court remarked that if the decree of the lower Court was not in conformity with its judgment the respondent might apply to the District Judge under section 206 of the Civil Procedure Code to get it brought into conformity. The petitioner then applied to the District Judge who had made the decree in question, to bring it into conformity with the judgment. The District Judge refused the application on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to deal with the decree as it had been the subject of an appeal to the High Court. Thereupon the petitioner applied to the High Court and obtained this rule, calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the District Judge should not be directed to alter the decree to make it clear what relief the petitioner was entitled to, [761] and in the alternative also prayed that a decree might be directed to be drawn up in accordance with the decision of the High Court dismissing, under section 551 of the Code, the defendants' second appeal, inserting therein all the reliefs granted to the petitioner by the judgment of the District Judge, which was thereby affirmed. In the course of the hearing of this rule the questions arose—whether an order of the High Court dismissing an appeal under section 551 of the Civil Procedure Code is a decree, and whether the High Court had power to amend the decree of the lower Court confirmed by such order.

Babu Nilmadhub Bose, Babu Jogesh Chundra Roy, and Babu Mukunda Nath Roy for the Opposite Party.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows:—

On an appeal from an order allowing execution of a decree, this Court held that the decree-holder was not entitled by the decree to the particular relief claimed, and remarked that if the decree was not in conformity with the judgment, the proper course for him to take was to get it brought into conformity by an application under section 206 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff who was the decree-holder then applied to the District Judge who had made the decree in question to bring it into conformity with the judgment. The District Judge held that as the decree of the District Court had been the subject of an appeal to this Court, he had no jurisdiction to deal with it. This rule was then obtained by the petitioner to show cause why the District Judge should not be directed to alter the decree under the provisions of section 206. The Judge was not right in saying that this Court altered the decree of the Lower Appellate Court, as admittedly it did not do so. What happened was that this Court dismissed the appeal of the defendant under section 551 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is argued that a dismissal under section 551 is not a decree or an adjudication of the rights of the parties, but amounts to nothing more than a refusal to entertain the appeal, and that the Lower Appellate Court is [762] consequently not precluded by the order of dismissal from entertaining an application for the amendment of the decree which it had passed. It is true that the Court, acting under section 551, is not in a position to deal fully with the appeal or to make any alteration in the judgment or decree appealed against. Nevertheless, it is a determination and a final determination of the appeal and it adjudicates on the questions raised by the appellant so far as it is necessary to adjudicate upon them for the purposes of the appeal, and we can see no distinction between an appeal which is dismissed under section 551 and an appeal which is dismissed under any other section of the Code after full hearing. The case of Royal Reddi v. Linga Reddi (I. L. R., 3 Mad., 1) supports this view. Rightly or wrongly it is not the practice of this Court to draw up decrees in cases dismissed under section 551, or, in the case of a second appeal, when the decree is one of dismissal, to record anything in the decree more than that the appeal is dismissed. But the effect practically is to make the decree which is confirmed, the final decree to be executed in the suit, and there can be no question that this Court has power to amend the decree which has been in effect confirmed by it so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment which is also confirmed. The rule which has been issued in this case called upon the opposite side to show cause why the District Judge should not be directed to make the amendment. But this does not appear to be strictly in conformity with the order which the Court made when the rule was granted. All the parties are, however, now before the Court, and we are in a position fully to deal with the matter on its merits. It is an admitted fact that the decree of the District Judge is not in conformity with his judgment. The decree simply directs that the appeal be decreed without specifying in any way the relief given by it. In the judgment it was distinctly held that the plaintiff had proved her title to and possession of the land (plot kha) on which a privy had been built, and that the defendant must remove that privy and vacate the land. We, therefore, direct that the decree of the District Court, setting aside the decree of the first Court, be amended; and that it be declared that the plaintiff's title to the land (plot kha) on [763] which a privy has been built is established, and that she is entitled to possession thereof, and that the defendant must remove the privy and vacate the land. The defendant to pay the costs of the appeal and of the suit in the lower Courts with the usual interest. A copy of this order will be sent to the lower Court to be attached to the decree.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 135, clause (d)—Mortgage—Actionable Claim—Transfer of Property Act, section 84—Transfer of a claim for an amount less than its value--Recovery of amount actually paid with interest and incidental expenses

A debtor claiming the benefit of section 135† of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is discharged of his liability if he pays or offers to pay at any time before final judgment the amount actually paid with interest and incidental expenses

Muchiram Barik v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutti (I L R., 21 Cal, 568) followed.

The amount of interest is governed by section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act.

THE defendant Pulin Behary Mullick executed a mortgage and further charge, dated, respectively, 23rd September and 3rd November 1886, in favour of one Sowdaminy Dossee, who assigned the same to the plaintiff on the 26th January 1891 On hearing of the assignment the mortgagor offered to pay to the assignee, under section 135 of the Transfer of Property Act, the actual price paid by him for the assignment, together with interest and incidental expenses. There was a dispute as to the amount of these items, the price of the assignment, according to the plaintiff, being Rs 6,000, and according to the defendant only Rs 2,750, which latter sum was proved at the hearing to be correct. This offer was refused by [764] the assignee, who instituted a suit (I. L. R, 23 Cal, 713) for the full amount that might be found due on the mortgage and further charge At the hearing an offer was made by the defendant to pay the amount actually paid by the plaintiff with interest and incidental expenses. On the plaintiff refusing to accept anything less than what was claimed in the suit, the case proceeded, and Mr Justice AMEER ALI, delivered judgment on 16th April 1896 (I L R, 23 Cal, 714) and directed an inquiry to be held before the Registrar to ascertain the amount of the expenses incidental to the assignment

Mr. S. P. Sinha for the plaintiff —The sum deposited by the defendant on the 10th April 1896 in payment of the costs and expenses incidental to the assignment was insufficient, as he deposited only Rs 750 on that account. The actual expenses are found by the Registrar to be Rs 758-4-0 The defendant is, therefore, not entitled to the benefit of section 135 of the Transfer of Property Act. The balance ought to have been paid into Court as soon as it was discovered that the amount originally deposited was not sufficient, and the deposit of Rs. 65 after the case was put on the cause list on 22nd May last does not remove the objection. We are also entitled to interest on the whole amount up to the date of final judgment.

(d) where the judgment of a competent Court has been delivered affirming the claim, or where the claim has been made clear by evidence and is ready for judgment.]

Ameer Ali, J.—The facts of this case are sufficiently set out in my preliminary judgment (I. L. R., 23 Cal., 714). It is enough to say that the Registrar has found upon the inquiry directed that the expenses of and incidental to the plaintiff's assignment amounted to Rs. 758-4-0. His report is dated the 19th of December 1896. On the 8th of May last an application was made to fix a day for further hearing and final judgment. The case was fixed for the 22nd of May, but was adjourned by consent to the 29th of May. On the 27th the defendant deposited a further sum of Rs. 65, odd annas. Mr. Sinha on behalf of the plaintiff contends that the sum deposited by the defendant on the 10th of April 1896 was insufficient, inasmuch as he had deposited only Rs. 750 over and above the consideration paid by the plaintiff for his assignment, whereas the expenses are now found to have been Rs. 758-4-0, and [765] that therefore he (the defendant) is not entitled to the benefit of section 135 of the Transfer of Property Act. He also contends that the balance ought to have been paid into Court as soon as it was discovered that the amount originally deposited was not sufficient, and that the deposit of Rs. 65 made after the case was placed on the cause list on the 22nd of May last does not remove his objection. He also asks for interest up to final judgment.

As regards the first point it was obviously impossible for the defendant to know what the expenses amounted to. The plaintiff did not furnish any information on the subject, and consequently an inquiry was directed to ascertain the amount. Under the circumstances the defendant could only be expected to deposit an approximate amount, and he accordingly paid into Court Rs. 750 over and above the price paid by the plaintiff, thus showing his intention to abide by the offer he had repeatedly made to the plaintiff. On the 19th of December 1896 it was found that the expenses amounted to Rs. 758, odd annas. The case of Muchiram Barik v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutti (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 568) shows that a debtor claiming the benefit of section 135 of the Transfer of Property Act is discharged of his liability, if he pays or offers to pay at any time before final judgment the consideration plus the expenses and interest. The defendant in this case has, from the outset, claimed the benefit of the section ; he tendered the amount to the plaintiff shortly after the assignment, and appears to have been always willing to pay whatever else the plaintiff might be found entitled to for incidental expenses and interest. In order to show that he was acting bonâ fide he deposited in Court Rs. 3,500 on the 10th of April 1896. It seems to me that he is entitled to the benefit of section 135 of the Transfer of Property Act.

I am also of opinion that under section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act the plaintiff ought to have interest on the sum of Rs. 2,750 only up to the 6th of March 1891. I understand that the amount paid into Court fully covers what the plaintiff is entitled to under section 135. I accordingly order that the sums of money paid into Court by the defendant be paid to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff do reconvey or retransfer to the defendant the property [766] comprised in the mortgage and further charge, free from all incumbrances done by him or any person or persons claiming by, from or under him, and do deliver up all documents in his custody or power relating thereto, such reconveyance to be settled by the Registrar of the Court, if the parties differ about the same.

Having regard to the conduct of the plaintiff I must direct him to pay to the defendant his costs of the suit to be taxed on Scale 2.

The Court has power, under a decree in a mortgage suit under section 86 † of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), to allow interest subsequent to the date of decree and the date fixed by the decree for payment, until realization.

Amolak Ram v Lachmi Narain (I L. R , 19 All , 174) dissented from

THIS was a suit to recover from the defendant the amount of the principal advanced on two Bengali instruments of mortgage, together with interest and costs, and the only question raised was whether, having regard to the decision in Amolak Ram v Lachmi Narain (I L R , 19 All , 174) the decree should provide for the payment of subsequent interest, for a period beyond the date of payment that has to be fixed within six months from the date of the decree, until actual realization and ordering that, upon the defendant paying to the plaintiff or into Court the amount so due, on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall transfer the property to the defendant free from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title by those under whom he claims, and shall, if necessary put the defendant into possession of the property, but that, if the payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property.]

Mr. Dunne for the Plaintiff.—Is this Court debarred from giving interest on a decree in a mortgage suit under sections 209 and 220 of the Code of Civil Procedure by reason of anything [767] contained in the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882)? A mortgage decree is one for the payment of money within the meaning of section 209 of the Civil Procedure Code The practice of this Court has for years past always been to give such interest, (See Belchambers' Rules and Orders, Rule 555). The decision in Amolak Ram v Lachmi Narain (I L R, 19 All., 174), is not binding on this Court and is not correct That decision proceeds on an assumption that the words of section 88, "what is so found due to the plaintiff," have reference to the account to be taken under section 86, and that the balance, if any, over and above that amount, must be paid to the defendant. But more than the amount found due on that account may be paid, for section 94 provides for subsequent costs being allowed against the defendant.

The Act contemplates a final adjustment see section 94. Section 86 provides that the Court can make one of two forms of decree, either one ordering an account to be taken of what will be due for principal, interest, and costs at a subsequent date, or a decree declaring the amount due for principal, interest, and costs on the date of the decree The words "so due" in the second paragraph do not refer to the amount of what will be due on a subsequent date only, but include a possible decree declaring the amount due on the date of the decree On a decree such as the one last mentioned, interest would be allowed Section 87 enables the Court to enlarge the time for payment This could hardly have been intended, if all interest had ceased to run In section 88 the words "so found due to the plaintiff' do not necessarily exclude the ascertainment of the sum due at the date of the payment Section 90 shows that the words "amount due for the time being on the mortgage" cannot mean the amount found due by the decree originally This points to a subsequent adjustment and that is provided for by section 94 Section 97 shows that the plaintiff in the suit would, under the circumstances there provided for, be entitled to payment out of the sale proceeds of all interest due on account of the mortgage This points again to a final adjustment Sections 209 and 222 of the Code of Civil Procedure give full power to the Court to make such an order for subsequent interest on the decree see Form 128 in Appendix [768] to the Code of Civil Procedure Those forms are based on the provisions of the Code itself and read together with the sections of the Code on the subject show that the Legislature intended that subsequent interest ought to be allowed on the decree

The defendant did not appear

Jenkins, J—This is an ordinary mortgagee's suit in which the plaintiff seeks to enforce her security, and the only question involved is whether the decree should provide for the payment of subsequent interest The doubt is due to a decision of the Allahabad Court in the case of Amolak Ram v. Lachmi Narain (I L R, 19 All, 174) the head note of which is as follows:—

"In a suit upon a mortgage for the sale of the property mortgaged the Court has no power to allow in the account under section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, or in its declaration under that section, interest for a period beyond the date of payment which has to be fixed within six months from the date of the decree

"Sections 209 and 222 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882, do not affect the special provisions as to allowance of interest contained in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882

"In construing a decree, the terms of which are ambiguous, such construction must, if possible, be adopted as will make the decree in accordance with law, and not a decree such as the Court making it had no power to pass."

The portion of the judgment which deals with this actual point, is in these terms :—

"Now, it is contended on behalf of the decree-holders that the decree gave them interest on the principal amount beyond the date of the expiration of the six months which the Court fixed as the time when the payment should be made. We must see what would have been a legal decree in this case. A decree for sale can only be made under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. It is as well to bear that in mind. The decree which can be made in a case like this is that which is specified in section 88 of the Act. A decree for sale, according to section 88, shall be to the effect mentioned in the first and second paragraphs of section 86 of that Act—'and also ordering that, in default of the defendant paying as therein mentioned, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is so found due to the plaintiff, and that the balance, if any, be paid to the defendant or other persons entitled to receive the same.' In order to see what would be a decree to the effect mentioned in section 86, we must [769] look at section 86. We find that by the first paragraph of section 86 'the Court shall make a decree ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit, if any, awarded to him, on the day next hereinafter referred to, or declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree.' It is obvious that the words of section 88—'what is so found due to the plaintiff' must mean the amount referred to in the first paragraph of section 86, that is, either the amount found due by the account directed to be taken in that section, or the amount which the Court at the time of passing its decree declares to be due. It is also obvious that under section 86 no future interest beyond a date within six months of the date of the decree can be entered in the account or declared by the Court, and from section 88 it is obvious that the proceeds of the sale decreed under that section must be applied, after payment of the expenses of the sale, in payment of 'what is so found due to the plaintiff,' and that the balance, if any, must be paid to the defendant or other person entitled to receive the same. The section clearly shows that it is only the amount originally declared at the time of making the decree or found to be due under the account provided for by section 86, which the Court can pay over to the plaintiff out of the proceeds of the sale, and that the Court has no power to allow, in the account under section 86, or in its declaration under that section, interest beyond the date which has to be fixed within six months from the date of the decree. In certain events, in adjusting the amount to be paid to a mortgagee, certain additional costs are to be added under section 94 of the Act to the mortgage money, but there is absolutely no provision that we are aware of for adding additional interest

"Now it appears to us that the granting of interest on the costs decreed was in contravention of section 86 The power exercised by Courts to grant interest up to realization under the Code of Civil Procedure appears, in the case of decrees for sale, to be excluded by sections 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act It would be well if Courts, whether of first instance or of appeal, in cases arising under the Transfer of Property Act, would read and consider the sections of that Act which contain the law on the subject, which the Legislature in India has thought it necessary to enact. We have no power as Judges in India to alter the Statute Law, and we have no power to make decrees which are not in accordance with that Statute Law, when the Statute Law provides for the form of the decree to be made. It is not safe to assume that the law of the Transfer of Property Act is the law which was administered in the Courts of Chancery in England."

On the serious practical inconveniences resulting from this decision it is needless to enlarge, as it is matter of common knowledge that the sale under a decree invariably and of necessity involves some degree of delay, and that it frequently happens that a postponement is as necessary in the interest of the mortgagor as of the mortgagee; still this cannot control the proper construction [770] of the Act, if its language is clear and plain. The sections to which reference seems to have been made in that case are the 86th, 88th and 89th of the Transfer of Property Act, and the 209th and 222nd of the Code of Civil Procedure; but it appears to me that for the purpose of arriving at the true meaning of the Legislature regard must be had to other parts of both these Codes.

Now section 88 provides:—

"In a suit for sale, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a decree to the effect mentioned in the first and second paragraphs of section 86, and also ordering that, in default of the defendant paying as therein mentioned, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is so found due to the plaintiff, and that the balance, if any, be paid to the defendant or other persons entitled to receive the same.

"In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds and the mortgage is not a mortgage by conditional sale, the Court may, at the instance of the plaintiff or of any person interested either in the mortgage money or in the right of redemption, if it thinks fit, pass a like decree (in lieu of a decree for foreclosure) on such terms as it thinks fit, including, if it thinks fit, the deposit in Court of a reasonable sum, fixed by the Court, to meet the expenses of sale and to secure the performance of the terms."

To ascertain then the full effect of section 88 recourse must be had to section 86 which provides:—

"In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall make a decree, ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit, if any, awarded to him, on the day next hereinafter referred to, or declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and ordering that, upon the defendant paying to the plaintiff or into Court the amount so due, on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall transfer the property to the defendant free [771] from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims, and shall, if necessary, put the defendant into possession of the property."

Then section 89 provides: —

"If in any case under section 88 the defendant pays to the plaintiff or into Court on the day fixed as aforesaid, the amount due under the mortgage, the costs, if any, awarded to him, and such subsequent costs as are mentioned in section 94, the defendant shall (if necessary) be put in possession of the mortgaged property; but if such payment is not so made, the plaintiff or the defendant, as the case may be, may apply to the Court for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property, and the Court shall then pass an order that such property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned in section 88; and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished."

It will be seen from the judgment to which I have referred, that, according to the view expressed by the Allahabad High Court, the expression "what is so found due to the plaintiff" in section 88 means the amount referred to in the first paragraph of section 86; in other words that the word "so" refers not merely to the different heads of indebtedness mentioned in that paragraph, i.e., principal, interest and costs, but also to the date there indicated. It appears to me that to attribute this force to the word so is opposed to that which is apparent from this first paragraph itself, for it will be noticed that in that paragraph the expression "so due at the date of the decree" must refer to a point of time other than that by reference to which the account mentioned in the earlier part of the clause is to be taken. This of itself would seem to justify the conclusion that the expression "so found due" in section 88 does not necessarily and obviously mean, found due at the date indicated in section 86.

But if one looks at section 90, it is difficult to reconcile its provisions with the view that a mortgagee is not entitled to subsequent interest. That section provides that: "When the net proceeds of any such sale are insufficient to pay the amount due for the time being on the mortgage, if the balance is legally [772] recoverable from the defendant otherwise than out of the property sold, the Court may pass a decree for such sum."

The expression "the amount due for the time being on the mortgage" to my mind implies that there is to be an adjustment over and above the account mentioned in section 86; and this view receives confirmation from section 94, which expressly mentions a final adjustment, and also from the application of the proceeds mentioned in section 97.

On the other hand, if the interpretation applied in the Allahabad case is adopted, a mortgagor would not be entitled to credit in respect of any subsequent payment made by him, or even in respect of subsequent rents received by a mortgagee in possession, and it would be almost doubtful whether the proceeds of sale mentioned in section 89 would be applicable in payment of subsequent costs though mentioned in the earlier part of the section, because those proceeds are to be applied as mentioned in section 88, and if the expression "so found due" is to have the meaning attributed to it at page 177 of the report of that case it would exclude subsequent costs. With all deference I cannot suppose that such results could have been intended or is required by the words of the Transfer of Property Act.

Then the Code of Civil Procedure is not without its bearing on the point.

The Transfer of Property Act was passed on the 17th of February 1882, and the Civil Procedure Code a month later, i.e., on the 17th of March in the same year.

In the 4th schedule to the Procedure Code are set out the forms of pleadings and decrees, which section 644 of the Code ordains shall be used for the respective purposes mentioned in that schedule, and it is fair to assume that those forms do not exceed that which is permissible. Form 109 contains the plaint to be used in an action for foreclosure and sale, and it is clear from the prayer there stated that in case the proceeds of sale are insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiff, the defendant may be made personally liable to pay interest until realization.

Now section 90, under which this part of the decree is made, does not provide for the payment of such interest, so that the [773] power to include it in the decree must apparently be derived from section 209 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

If this be so, then the opinion, expressed at page 180 of the report of Amolak Ram v. Lachmi Narain to the effect that section 209 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot affect the special provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, would seem to be erroneous. The inference would rather appear to be that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act are not exclusive and exhaustive; and, further, that it never was contemplated that a mortgagee in a suit, which, in its origin at any rate, was founded on equitable principles as firmly established in this Court as in the Court of Chancery in England, should be mulcted of his interest, when his mortgagor is in default.

The conclusion then to which I come is that the Transfer of Property Act does not exclude the allowance of subsequent interest, and I see no reason for departing from the long continued practice of this Court, sanctioned as it is by the rules of Court, and I accordingly direct that the decree shall be in the form which has hitherto obtained*

NOTES.

[The practice referred to in this decision has received the approval of the Privy Council in Sundar Koer v Rai Sham Krishen (1906) 34 Cal., 150. "The decree is in accordance with the directions contained in Rules of Court made by the Calcutta High Court under the power for that purpose conferred on the Court by section 104 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, as well as in rules of an earlier date and with the uniform practice of that Court. This appears from an instructive note by Mr Belchambers, the Registrar of the Court, appended to the report of Achambala Bose v Surendra Nath Dey (1897) 24 Cal, 766. The same practice has been followed by the Madras High Court in (1897) 21 Mad, 364." (After examining the decisions in (1898) 26 Cal, 39, and (1900) 23 All., 181, their Lordships proceeded) "In the present case their Lordships have no hesitation in expressing their concurrence with the High Court of Calcutta, not only in allowing interest after the fixed day, but also in allowing interest at the Court rate and not at the mortgage rate. They think that the scheme and intention of the Transfer of Property Act was that a general account should be taken once for all, and an aggregate amount be stated in the decree for principal, interest and costs due on a fixed day, and that after the expiration of that day, if the property should not be redeemed, the matter should pass from the domain of contract to that of judgment, and the rights of the mortgagee should thenceforth depend, not on the contents of his bond, but on the directions in the decree It will be observed that according to the practice explained by the registrar, which has been followed in this case, the interest is allowed on the aggregate sum, and not merely on the principal money and this is right, if the mortgagee is treated as a decree holder or judgment creditor, but would be wrong if the right to the interest depended on the terms of the mortgage-bond After the decision of this Board last cited (23 All 181) it is immaterial to inquire into the source of the power in the Court to allow such interest" at pp 159 161

* The following note furnished by Mr Belchambers, the Registrar of the Court, Original Side, in connection with this case, shows the practice which has hitherto obtained in the Calcutta Court

"The decision in Amolak Ram v Lachmi Narain (I L R, 19 All, 174) demands attention as materially affecting the interests of mortgagees The head note is as follows.—(head note set out ante p 768)

"The Transfer of Property Act, while it gives power to enlarge the time for payment of the amount declared to be due under a mortgage, and also requires a personal decree to be made against a mortgagor for any balance that may remain due after exhausting the security, contains no express provision for the allowance of further interest in either case. The power to enlarge the time for payment is seldom invoked adversely, but further time for payment is frequently obtained by consent When default is made, and it becomes necessary to proceed to a sale, a considerable time must elapse in taking the necessary steps leading up to the sale, that is, in obtaining a final order for sale, investigating the title to the property comprised in the mortgage, settling the conditions of sale, and causing the sale to be duly advertised

"A sale is usually advertised for a month (see section 290 of the Civil Procedure Code) except when any property comprised in the mortgage is out of Calcutta. It is then advertised for a longer period, and is also proclaimed in the district where the property is situate, the procedure being regulated by rules 392 and 403, Belchambers' Rules and Orders, p. 194.

"A sale may be postponed if the Registrar is unable to attend on the day appointed for the sale, or for want of bidders or sufficient bidding, "or for other sufficient cause, or with the consent of the parties" see rules 407, 408 and 412, Belchambers' Rules and Orders, pages 195 and 196 Instances may be referred to where a sale has been repeatedly postponed, requiring another day to be fixed and the sale to be re-advertised or re-proclaimed under rules 413 and 414, the effect being to defer the day of payment.

[774] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 4th May, 1897.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Mathura Nath Ghose........ ..Auction-Purchaser

Nobin Chandra Kundu Biswas (Petitioner) and another (Decree-holder) and others ....Judgment Debtors.*

Second Appeal—Order refusing to set aside a sale—Appeal from an order remanding a case—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 588, clauses 16 and 28, and section 562

Though orders under section 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure are appealable under clause 28 of section 588, yet the provisions of the latter section are subject to its last paragraph which says that "orders passed under this section shall be final", and, therefore, no second appeal lies from an order passed under section 588 clause 16 notwithstanding that it is an order passed by the Lower Appellate Court remanding the case under section 562, inasmuch as the order was made in a case which was itself an appeal from an order allowed by section 588 of the Code

" It should also be noted that time is always allowed to the purchaser to pay the purchase money [see rule 393 and form of conditions of sale, Belchambers' Rules and Orders, pages 191 and 460], that he may fail to do so in due time and it may be necessary to proceed against him under rule 425 that on the other hand, he may, if not prepared to accept the title, pay the purchase money into Court under rule 424 subject to his right to object to the title, that generally after a sal objection may be taken and the sale set aside, or compensation allowed for error or misstatement in the particulars or description of the property. see rules 420 to 423, pages 197 and 198, and form of conditions of sale p 460

" It will thus be seen that the purchase money can in no case be immediately available for payment to the mortgagee, and may in some cases be withheld for an uncertain period dependent upon the result of proceedings by or against the purchaser

" According to the decision of the Allahabad High Court, a mortgagee cannot, under any circumstances, be allowed interest "beyond the date which has to be fixed within six months from the date of the decree "

" Previous to the Transfer of Property Act decrees for sale were made by the Calcutta High Court in mortgage suits as well as in other suits Its subsidiary rules of procedure passed under clause 37 of the Letters' Patent, 1865, and under section 652 of Act X of 1877 [as amended by Act XII of 1879], are contained in Belchambers' Rules and Orders, and include a body of rules for regulating sales by the Registrar (p 189 et seq) to which attention is called and especially to the two following rules which came into effect on the 1st of May 1885

" Rule 555 at p 228 —' Unless otherwise ordered interest shall be computed on a mortgage, at the rate mentioned therein, until the end of six months from the date of the decree or until the end of any further period to which the time may be enlarged Such interest shall be added to the principal, and thereafter interest shall be computed on the aggregate amount at the rate of six per cent per annum '

" Rule 324 at p. 168.—' Unless the Court or a Judge shall otherwise order every decree in a suit for the sale of mortgaged property shall contain a direction that if the money to arise by such sale shall not be sufficient for the payment in full of the amount of principal, interest, and costs payable under the decree, the defendant do pay the amount of the deficiency, with interest at the rate of six per cent per annum ' See the note under this rule.

" In mortgage suits the procedure was regulated by the rules of Court and the Civil Procedure Code, until the Transfer of Property Act came into effect.

* Appeal from Appellate Order No. 427 of 1896, against the order of Babu Syam Chand Roy, Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 30th of September 1896, reversing the order of Babu Bidhu Bhushan Banerjee, Munsif of that District, dated the 16th of May 1896.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

[775] Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Kishori Lall Sarkar for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Chatterjee and Babu Nalini Nath Sen for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J., was delivered by Banerjee, J. (MACLEAN, C.J., concurring).—This appeal arises out of an application made by the respondent for setting aside the sale of a ganti tenure in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, on the allegation that he holds a subordinate tenure under the ganti tenure. The application purported to be made under sections 244 and 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[776] The Munsif held, and I think rightly held, that section 244 has no application to a case like the present; and he rejected the application on the ground that the applicant was not entitled to make any such application under section 311.

Against the order of the Munsif the applicant preferred an appeal; and the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below has set aside the order of the Munsif and directed him to entertain the application and to dispose of the same according to law. Against this order of the Subordinate Judge the auction purchaser has preferred this second appeal.

At the hearing of the appeal, a preliminary objection is taken [777] by the learned Counsel for the respondent, that no second appeal lies in this case. The ground upon which the preliminary objection is based is this, that the order passed by the Court of appeal below was an order passed under section 588, clause 16, in an appeal from an order of the Munsif refusing to set aside a sale of immoveable property, and being an order of that nature is final, as provided by the last paragraph of section 588.

In answer to this objection the learned Vakil for the appellant urges that this appeal is allowed by clause 28 of section 588 of the Code. It is argued that the order appealed from is a remand order by the Lower Appellate Court made under section 562, and is therefore appealable; and the cases of Kirte Mohaldar v. Ramjan Mohaldar (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 523), Collector of Bijnor v. Jafar Ali Khan (I. L. R., 3 All., 18), and Mohadev Narsingh v. Ragho Keshav (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 292) are relied upon as lending support to this contention.

But we are of opinion that the preliminary objection ought to prevail, and that the cases cited for the appellant are distinguishable from the one before us. It is true that orders under section 562 remanding a case are appealable under clause 28 of section 588; but the provisions of the section are subject to the last paragraph of the section, which says that "orders passed in appeals under this section shall be final." The effect of this last paragraph

---

"Section 104 of that Act gives the High Court power to make rules as follows: 'The High Court may from time to time make rules consistent with this Act for carrying out in itself and in the Courts of Civil Judicature subject to its superintendence, the provisions contained in this chapter.'

"Under that section the Calcutta High Court made rules for the Original Side, a printed copy of which is annexed. The rules regulating sales by the Registrar were then considered, with the result that some were repealed and some amended. Rule 555 which directs the allowance of further interest was amended, but without modifying or in any way affecting that direction.

"It thus appears that the interpretation of the law by the Allahabad High Court is opposed to the interpretation of the law by the Calcutta High Court as evidenced by its rules. And it should be added that the course of practice followed by the Calcutta High Court has been uniformly in conformity with its rules."

of the section is to bar an appeal from an order passed in an appeal allowed under the section; and where a remand order is made in a case which is itself an appeal from an order allowed by this section, the order, even though it be one remanding the case, is, we think, an order that is not appealable. To reconcile clause 28 of section 588 with the last paragraph of the section, we must read clause 28 as referring only to orders made under section 562 in cases which are appeals from decrees.

As for the cases cited, they are all of them cases of remand orders made, not in appeals from orders, but in appeals from original decrees. The objection that was raised in those cases to an appeal from a remand order being entertained was this, that the cases being of the Small Cause Court class, and a second [778] appeal being barred in such cases by section 586, an appeal from a remand order which would be a second appeal, would not lie; and the objection was overruled upon the ground that clause 28, section 588, was not subject to the exceptional provisions of section 586, which was a provision relating to appeals from appellate decrees and not to appeals from orders. Whether that view of the law is right or not is a question which we need not consider in this case. It is enough to say that this case is clearly distinguishable from the cases cited.

That being so, we think effect ought to be given to the preliminary objection, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Adhar Chandra Dass............Decree-holder

versus

Lal Mohun Das and others............Judgment-debtors.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Article 179, clause (4)—Step in aid of execution of decree—Application for substitution of the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor—Application in accordance with law—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 234, 235, 248 and 273.

An application by the judgment-creditor for substitution of the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor, though disallowed, is an application in accordance with law to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of sub-section 4 of Article 179 of the Limitation Act.

An application by the judgment-creditor for the execution of his decree, which has been attached, as well as an application by him to execute another decree which he had attached in execution of his own decree, though disallowed, are applications in accordance with law.

THE facts of the case and the arguments appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mitter for the Appellant.

Babu Baikant Nath Das for the Respondents.

* Appeal from Order No. 320 of 1896, against the order of H. E. Ransom, Esq., Officiating Additional Judge of Dacca, dated the 5th of June 1896, reversing the order of Babu Shyam Chunder Roy, Officiating Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 6th of September 1896.

[779] The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C.J.—When one is in possession of the facts of this case, the point which one has to decide is reduced to very narrow limits. The question is whether the application of the decree-holder of 5th June 1893 was an application made by him in accordance with law to take some steps in aid of execution within the meaning of sub-section 4 of article 179 of schedule II of the Limitation Act.

The facts are these: The appellant here is the judgment-creditor and the respondent is the judgment-debtor. I need not go through the various steps which the judgment-creditor has taken to try and obtain the fruits of his judgment, but he took several, and has not obtained payment. On the 5th June 1893 he made an application of a double nature: one part of the application was that the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor might be substituted in the place of the judgment-debtor who had died, so that the proceedings might be carried on against them, and the other part of the application was that steps might be taken to enable him to obtain, by way of execution, the fruits of his judgment. It is said that that is not a step in aid of execution in accordance with law within the meaning of the sub-section to which I have referred.

The ground upon which that view is based is that at the time the judgment-creditor made this application, the decree he had obtained had been attached by a judgment-creditor of his own, and that being so, he had not sufficient interest in the decree which he had obtained to enable him to sustain the application in aid of execution.

I do not think that that is a valid objection. The judgment-creditor still had an interest in the decree which he had obtained, and the attachment order did not prevent him from presenting the decree with a view to its execution. Such a step would not be adverse to the rights of his own judgment-creditor, as it would be for the interests of both, that, if possible, the fruits of the decree should be obtained by execution. He could have paid off his own judgment-creditor, and then his own judgment-decree would have been free from the attachment order. The [780] learned Judge in the Court below has taken no notice of that part of the application, which asked for the substitution of the heirs of the judgment-debtor in place of the judgment-debtor. Without bringing them before the Court the judgment-creditor could not have proceeded with his execution proceedings. His application for that purpose appears to me to be a step in aid of execution in accordance with law.

I ought to have stated that another objection was taken, that it was not an application in accordance with law because it was refused. "In accordance with law" cannot, I think, mean that it must of necessity be a successful application. That is too narrow a construction to put on the article, nor does the language of the sub-section justify such a view. It is conceded that if the application of 5th June 1893 were a step in aid of execution in accordance with law, then the present application for execution is not out of time.

I ought, perhaps, to refer to a suggestion rather than an argument which was thrown out, viz., that a previous application of the 6th June 1890 in aid of execution was not well founded, and consequently that the application of the 5th June 1893 was itself out of time. I am unable to attach any importance to this suggestion, and I am not satisfied that we can properly go into it.

The Judge, who in the first instance decided this point, decided it in favour of the judgment-creditor, but the District Judge has reversed that decision.

I think that the application of the 5th June 1893 was an application in accordance with law to take a step in aid of execution, and the case appears to me to be consistent in principle with the case of Hafizuddin Chowdhry v. Abdool Aziz (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 755).

I do not think that the language of article 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act ought to be strained in favour of a judgment-debtor, who has not paid his just debt; and there are a variety of reported cases to show that applications, some of which, in my opinion, are not so strong as this, have been regarded as steps taken in aid of execution. Upon these grounds, I think, [781] that the District Judge was wrong, and that the order of the first Court must be restored The appeal therefore must be allowed with costs in this Court and in the Lower Appellate Court.

Banerjee, J. —I am of the same opinion. The question raised before us is whether the application for execution of the decree in this case, which is dated the 22nd November 1887, was barred by limitation The first application for execution was made on the 18th February 1889, and so that was filed in time. The second application for execution was made on the 8th May 1890, which was within three years of the date of the last application; and that also was therefore in time. Then on the 6th June 1890, an application was made for execution of this decree, by enforcing the execution of another decree, which had been attached in execution of the present one, and that was rejected on the 11th June 1890. The next application that was made with reference to the execution of this decree was an application made on the 5th June 1893 for the execution of the decree after substitution of the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor in his place. That application was dismissed on the 16th June 1893, on the ground that, as the decree sought to be executed had been attached in execution of another decree obtained against the present decree-holder, no execution could issue, the order evidently having been made with reference to the provisions of section 273 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That attachment was subsequently removed, and the present application for execution was made on the 11th December 1894.

The first Court disallowed the objection of the judgment-debtor that the present application was barred, and ordered execution to proceed. On appeal, the Lower Appellate Court has reversed that order, holding that execution was barred by limitation, and the question is whether the decision of the Lower Appellate Court on that point is correct.

If the application of the 5th June 1893 is an application in accordance with law to the proper Court to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of clause 4 of article 179 of schedule II of the Limitation Act, the present application, which is well within three years from the date of that application, is not barred, provided, of course, that [782] the application of the 5th June 1893 was itself not barred. The learned Vakil for the respondents contends that the present application is barred, because the application of the 5th June 1893 was not an application according to law within the meaning of clause 4 of article 179, and also because, even if that application be held to be one according to law, that application itself was barred, as it was made more than three years after the second application made on the 8th May 1890, the intermediate application for execution, dated the 11th June 1890, being one not according to law.

The two questions we have to consider, therefore, are, first, whether the application of the 5th June 1893 was one according to law; and, secondly, whether the application of the 6th June 1890 was one according to law.

As regards the application of 5th June 1893, the main objection to it is that, as under section 273 of the Code of Civil Procedure the Court was bound to stay execution of this decree, by reason of a notice of attachment of the same having been received from another Court, no application for execution could have been made according to law. Granting that that was so, the application of the 5th June 1893 was not merely an application for execution, but contained a further prayer for the substitution of the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor in his place; and although the Court under section 273 of the Code was bound to stay execution until the notice issued at the instance of the party who had attached the decree was withdrawn, I do not think that there was any bar to its making the substitution of the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor in his place as prayed. The object of section 273 of the Code in directing stay of execution is merely to prevent the holder of the attached decree from realizing and taking away the fruits of that decree. But it cannot be held to have been intended to prevent an incidental step like that, which was a necessary step for the execution of the decree being taken. The taking of such a step would, instead of defeating the object for which the decree had been attached, have only furthered it by placing on the record the party against whom, and against whom alone, execution could have been taken at the instance of the [783] attaching decree-holder. That being so, as far as the prayer for substitution was concerned, the present decree-holder, in applying to the Court to make such a substitution, was, in my opinion, making an application in accordance with law to the proper Court to take some step in aid of execution within the meaning of clause 4 of article 179.

It was contended that, as the Court to which the application was made had disallowed the application, and no appeal was preferred against the order disallowing it, we must take it that the application that was made was not made according to law. I do not think that such a view is at all tenable. To affirm the proposition for which the learned Vakil for the respondent contends, would be to hold that none but a successful application can come within the scope of clause 4 of article 179. That certainly could not have been intended—see Hafizuddin Chowdhry v. Abdool Aziz (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 755).

This brings me to the consideration of the application of the 6th June 1890. The ground upon which it is contended that that application was not one according to law is that it was an application made by the decree-holder to execute another decree, which he had attached in execution of the present decree, and it was rejected by the Court because, under section 273 of the Code, the proper procedure was for the decree-holder to apply to the Court to direct the proceeds of the attached decree to be applied in satisfaction of his own, instead of applying for execution of that decree at his instance. Though that application was rejected by the Court, section 273 of the Code was really no bar to it, and for the present purpose it should be treated as an application made according to law—see Peary Mohun Chowdhry v. Romesh Chunder Nundy (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 371).

Various cases were referred to by the learned Vakil for the respondents in the course of his argument as to the meaning of the words "applying in accordance with law." None of those cases is in point; and I do not think we should be doing right in straining the law and in holding that an application made bonâ fide with the object of obtaining satisfaction of a decree [784] should be held to be not in accordance with law, merely because the Court in which the application was made thought fit, for some reason, not to allow the same. The view I take is in accordance with the opinion of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in the case of Kunhi Mannan v. Seshagiri Bhakthan (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 141). The Court had not, when dismissing the former application, to consider whether, for the purposes of the law of limitation, that application could or could not be treated as one made according to law. The order dismissing the former application cannot, therefore, be regarded as conclusive upon the present question. That being so, I think that there is no force in the contention urged on behalf of the respondents that the two applications referred to above should be treated as being not according to law; and, if that contention fails, the present application is clearly in time.

TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION.

The 5th May, 1897.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

In the goods of R. Porthouse (deceased).

Will- Imperfect form of Will - Will unexecuted by Testator—Blank spaces in body of Will—Application for Probate.

A testator died leaving as his will a printed form of will imperfectly filled in, and having omitted to insert his name and description at the head of the document, and to append his signature thereto. He had, however, written his name in the attestation clause and completed the disposition clause bequeathing all his property to his wife and appointing her sole executrix.

Held, that this was sufficient and the will should be admitted to probate.

In the goods of Casmore (L.R., 1 P. and D., 653), referred to.

THIS was an application in Chambers, under the following circumstances. Robert Porthouse, an employé of the East Indian Railway Company, died, leaving as his will a printed form of will provided by the Railway Company for the use of their servants, [785] which, in this case, was only partially filled up in the following way:—

THIS IS THE LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT OF ME

———OF———

Firstly—I direct that all my just debts funeral and testamentary expenses be paid and satisfied by my executrix hereinafter named as soon as conveniently may be after my decease and

Secondly—I give devise and bequeath all and every my household furniture linen and wearing apparel books plates pictures china horses carts and carriages and also all and every sum and sums of money which may be in my house or be about my person or due to me at the time of my decease and also all other my stocks funds and securities for money, books debts, money on bonds bills notes or other securities and all and every other my estate and effects wheresoever and whatsoever both real and personal whether in possession reversion remainder or expectancy unto my wife Agnes Porthouse to and for her own use and benefit absolutely, and I nominate constitute and appoint my wife Agnes Porthouse to be executrix of this my will and hereby revoking all former or other wills and testaments by me at any time heretofore made. I declare this to be my last will and testament. In witness whereof I the said Robert Porthouse have to this my last will and testament set my hand the eleventh day of October in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty eight.

Signed by the said testator and acknowledged by him to be his last will and testament in the presence of us present at the same time and subscribed by us as witnesses in the presence of the said testator and of each other.	William Gordon Porthouse. David Heug.

The printed form was a form always used by the employés of the East Indian Railway Company with blanks left in the form for a testator to fill up himself. Most of these the testator had omitted to fill up, but in the body of the will he filled in his wife's name as residuary legatee and executrix, and at foot he added "in witness whereof I the said Robert Porthouse have hereunto set," etc., etc., but he did not sign the document. An application was now made on behalf of the executrix and sole legatee for the admission of this will to probate.

Mr. Longmuir (Messrs. Morgan & Co.), for the applicant, stated the circumstances and asked that the will might be admitted to [786] probate, citing the cases of Corneby v. Gibbons (1 Rob., 705), In the goods of Kirby (1 Rob., 709), In the goods of Kimpton (3 Sw. and Tr., 427).

Sale, J.--I will make the order for grant of probate, as I am satisfied on the evidence that the deceased intended by signing his name in the attestation clause to execute the will. See In the goods of Casmore (L. R., 1 P. and D, 653).

Attorneys for the applicant: Messrs. Morgan & Co

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 29th January, 1897.

PRESENT

SIR FRANCIS WILLIAM MACLEAN, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, AND MR JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

Choutmull Doogur and others .... Plaintiffs

versus

The Rivers Steam Navigation Company Defendants*

Carriers Act (III of 1865), sections 6, 8—Negligence—Accident, Loss by—Special Contract—Suit for Damages

The plaintiffs delivered to the defendants certain goods for carriage to Calcutta in a flat belonging to the defendants The goods were carried under the terms of a special contract or "forwarding note," signed by the shipper One of the conditions of the forwarding note was as follows —"The Company will not be under any liability for damages or compensation in respect of loss of, or damage to, goods except such liability as they are or may be subject to under the provisions of any law for the time being in force or of any contract other than this for the time being in existence between the Company and the shipper" While on board the defendants' flat, the goods were destroyed by fire At the trial of the case, the defendants gave evidence showing the state of things before the fire occurred the circumstances leading to the discovery of the fire (but not the cause or origin of it) and the measures taken to extinguish the fire

Held that the occurrence of a fire under the circumstances disclosed in the case without any explanation as to the origin of it, was of itself evidence of negligence

[787] Held, also reversing the decision of SALE, J that the defendants had not discharged the onus cast upon them by law, of showing that there was no negligence

Central Cachar Tea Company v Rivers Steam Navigation Company† explained

* Appeal from Original Decree No 10 of 1896 from the decision of Mr Justice SALE, dated the 26th February 1896, in Suit No 11 of 1895

† Appeal No 38 of 1895 from Original Civil Suit No 472 of 1893 The Original Suit was heard by Mr Justice HILL, and his decision was affirmed on appeal on the 4th March 1896

The judgments of the Appeal Court (PETHERAM, C J and PIGOT and MACPHERSON, JJ.) from which the facts of the case fully appear were as follows -

Petheram, C J—The defendants are common carriers within the meaning of the Carriers Act, 1865, and this action is brought against them to recover the value of 166 chests of tea delivered to them to be carried from Fenchugunge in Sylhet to Calcutta, which were lost on the voyage The plaintiffs are the owners of the tea and the underwriters by whom it was insured The liability of the defendants is regulated by the Carriers Act section 6 of which provides that the carrier may, by special contract signed by or on behalf of the owner of the goods, limit his liability, sections 7 and 8 that his liability for negligence shall not be limited by special contract, and section 9, that in any suit brought against a common carrier for the loss or non-delivery of goods, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove negligence, in other words that the non delivery of the goods shall be primâ facie evidence of negligence

The history of the case is as follows —Before and on the 11th of November 1892, the defendants and the India General Steam Navigation Company employed the same persons as their agents at the river stations, including Fenchugunge These agents did the work of both Companies, and cargo received by them at these stations for transit to Calcutta, addressed to the India General Steam Navigation Company, was often brought down by the defendants, and cargo received by them at such river stations for transit to Calcutta, addressed to the defendants, was often brought down by the India General Steam Navigation Company. On the 4th of October 1892, an agreement was made between the India General [788] Held, on the construction of the above clause (per SALE, J., in the Court below, and per TREVELYAN, J., in the Court of Appeal) that the words "any law for the time being in force" must be taken to refer, not to the common law, but to the law as laid down in the Carriers Act (III of 1865), and that, unless their liability was enlarged by express contract, the defendant Company were liable only for loss or damage of which under section 6 of that Act they were not allowed to relieve themselves, that is, only for loss occasioned by the negligence or criminal acts of themselves, their servants or agents.

The decision of HILL, J., in Central Cachar Tea Co. v. Rivers Steam Navigation Co. (Unreported) followed.

Steam Navigation Company and the defendants of the one part, and the plaintiffs, the owners of the tea of the other part, by which the two Companies agreed to carry the plaintiffs' goods at certain rates, and the plaintiffs agreed to send all their goods by the steamers of one or other of the two companies. The last clause of the agreement was as follows: "The conditions contained in the bill of lading to be granted by the Companies for goods carried by them under this agreement or other document (if any) shall, except when the terms thereof expressly conflict with the provisions of this agreement, be binding on the parties." On the 3rd of November 1892, Mr Lees, the manager of the Garden in Sylhet, sent the 166 chests of tea, which are the subject of this suit, to Fenchugunge, to the persons who were the agents of both the Navigation Companies, together with a shipping note signed by himself. This note was written on a printed form of the India General Steam Navigation Company, and by the printed heading appeared to be addressed to that Company. It contained the following clause 7: "The Company will not be liable for any loss or damage, non-delivery or short delivery occasioned by the act of God, dacoity, piracy, destruction or damage by collision, fire or vermin, leakage and breakage, or rust, or deterioration of perishable goods, accidents of and from machinery or ship's tackle boiler's steam risks of separation of the cargo vessels from the steamer, stress of weather, want of water in the rivers, or the difficulties and casualties of navigation or any danger or accident of the rivers or navigation of what nature or kind soever." The goods were received at Fenchugunge by the persons who acted as agents for the two Navigation Companies, and were shipped by them on the Flat Nowgong, which belonged to the defendants, in pursuance of the arrangements between the two Companies, and of the agreement between the two Companies and the owners of the tea mentioned above. The bill of lading under which the goods were shipped was signed by these agents. The flat was attached to the port side of the Steamer Makum, which also belonged to the defendants and which was commanded by Captain J. C. Allen. The Steamer Makum is 230 feet long by 55 feet wide over all, and the Flat Nowgong is 30 feet across, so that the whole flotilla occupied a space of about 230 by 85 feet. This flotilla, with the tea in question on board the flat left Fenchugunge on the morning of the 12th of November, and, very soon after 8 o'clock on the morning of the 14th, was at a place in the Kushyara river, which Captain Allen calls Long Cape Reach. At this place there is an almost straight reach of the river, which, I gather from the evidence, is from five to eight hundred feet long. Below it the river turns sharply to the right, forms a narrow loop, and then returns in another straight reach nearly parallel to the one on the other side of the loop. The river at the entrance to the loop is about 250 feet wide from bank to bank, but under the right bank at this spot, and from this spot round the bend, there is a shoal which extends some 70 feet into the stream, and reduces the width of the navigable water to about 170 feet. The left bank of the river at this place is perpendicular, and is composed of soft clay. All the witnesses say that the navigation at the place is difficult, that, if it can be done, the proper way to get round the bend is to keep close to the shoal, and to go round, without touching the left bank at all; but, they add, that it is not always possible to do so, and that sometimes the most experienced commanders must touch that bank in order to get round the bend. On the morning in question the current was setting down the reach at about three miles an hour, and at the entrance to the loop was setting down the stream and across it from the right bank towards the left. Captain Allen was on the bridge in front of the steamer attending to the steering, and Captain Westbrook, the Commander of the flat, was in his cabin on the flat engaged in preparing a manifest. His cabin was on the front part of the deck of the flat, and from it he could see where the flat was and in what direction she was going. When he got to the beginning of the straight reach which leads to the bend, the Captain eased the engines, and the flotilla proceeded for some five hundred feet down the reach at about four knots an hour, one of which was caused by the action of the engines, the remaining three being caused by the force of the current. On arriving at the end of the reach, when the flotilla was opposite the shoal, the Captain stopped, and then reversed the engines, and put the helms hard aport. The flotilla was then carried by the current down and across the stream for about 200 feet, when the port quarter of the flat struck the perpendicular left bank of the river, at a point about that distance lower down than the place opposite which the engines [789] Semble, on appeal (per MACPHERSON, J., MACLEAN, C.J., doubting) that the above construction of the clause was correct.
